The Victory at Hydrabad.—Seldom has any event come upon the public so unexpectedly as the announcement of a great victory gained by Sir Charles Napier over the Ameers of Scinde. The last notes of war had died away in India, and the sword was supposed to have been consigned for a long day to its sheath, when we learn that one of the most obstinate engagements in which our troops have ever been employed, was fought on the 17th of February last, and one of the most severely contested yet signal victories obtained on the banks on the Indus. For the particulars of this victory we refer to the copious extracts we have made from the Bombay Times in another column. Never perhaps since the days of Wellesley and Lake have our armies been engaged with so obstinate a foe. The enemy consisted of no coward rabble, but of disciplined troops, and exhibited a degree of determined courage, far exceeding that of the Affghans. The disproportion between the strength of the two armies in point of numbers, was extraordinary; 2700 British troops were opposed to 22,000 Beloochees. The ground was so judiciously chosen by the enemy as to give them every advantage of position. The obstinacy with which they fought may be judged of from their loss, a thousand killed and four thousand wounded. But under Providence, we have achieved a great victory. Napier has not merely upheld the honour of his name, so celebrated in the annals of the age, but added fresh lustre to it. All the eccentricities of his career since he assumed the command in Scinde, are lost sight of in the admiration we feel at his judicious dispositions in the field, and his daring chivalrous courage. In one single battle the ruling dynasty is humbled to the dust, and the independence of Scinde annihilated. The country lies at the mercy of Lord Ellenborough, and it remains for his Lordship to determine whether the Talpooras "have ceased to reign," and the country is to be annexed to the British dominions, or whether the nominal sovereignty of Hydrabad, and some miles of territory around it, shall be continued for a few years longer to the vanquished Ameers.

By what fatality does it happen that the most pacific Governors General are thus drawn into warlike enterprises? By what irresistible combination of circumstances has it happened that Lord Amherst was led to a long and expensive conflict with Burmah; that Lord Auckland, than whom no man more cordially desired to avoid war, was plunged into a disastrous conflict in Affghanistan; and that Lord Ellenborough, who came out to restore peace to India and Asia, and who is anxious that his peaceful policy should form the pride of his administration, has been committed to hostilities with a state with which we were at peace, and in a single battle has become master of the kingdom of Scinde? Is it the condition of our tenure in India that we are thus to be engaged in uninterrupted hostilities, while there remains a prince capable of opposing our authority. Such indeed would appear to be our destiny here—if the expression may be used without impropriety. Whether it be in wars dictated by self defence, or dictated by a spirit of aggression, it seems as though we were never to be at peace, till every spark of independent power has been extinguished.

The justice of the quarrel is fiercely arraigned by the Editor of the Bombay Times. He seems to think it far more unjustifiable than the attack on Affghanistan by Lord Auckland. In that case there was the apparent necessity of self defence to palliate, if not to excuse, the invasion of a country in which our great European rival had established an influence incompatible with our security. But here it is argued, the Ameers had agreed to every demand but one. They had yielded up territories on the North and the South, at the demand of the Governor General. They objected only to the relinquishment of a strip of land on the banks of the Indus which would have destroyed their hunting grounds. This is scarcely a sufficient ground for annihilating their power. Then, they attacked Major Outram while he sustained the sacred character of an Envoy. But to this it may be said, that the attack arose from the irrepressible feelings of their troops; and that the Envoy was advised of his danger and entreated to retire. After the attack had been made on him indeed, there was no option left, but for Sir Charles Napier to come up to his rescue. When the General found a hostile enemy blocking up his path, he had no choice between attacking them, or being annihilated with his army. More detailed information is required before we can form an opinion of the justice of the quarrel.

But the main question which now remains for consideration is, what we are to do with Scinde? On the 1st of October last, when the second proclamation of Simlah was issued, this country was not within the limits "nature appeared to have assigned to our empire," with which Lord Ellenborough pledged himself to be content. But then it is a country without the possession of which our boundary of the Indus cannot be compact. Neither can the navigation of that river be considered safe while an independent, and now hostile, power keeps possession of either bank and of the Delta. It is productive, and under our management, may be made more productive, and the troops required to keep possession of it, will cost us nothing; the country itself will maintain them with ease. It lies within a week's reach of our Western Capital. Its high roads do not run through impassable defiles like the Bolan and the Khyber and the Khoord Cabul; they consist of magnificent streams, which our steam flotilla may traverse with speed and safety. It lies open to the sea, and troops, ammunition and supplies may be poured in with ease. It is a plain and may be defended with little difficulty, for there will soon be no enemy more formidable than the heat. The late government has been pronounced to be the most grinding despotism in Asia; and our rule would be a blessing. We should disafforest the Sikhargahs, repeal the forest laws, restore the ruined cities, revive commerce, dispense justice, and diffuse happiness; and our title to it by the right of conquest would be as good as that of the Talpooras, whose occupation is of yesterday, and who have no prescription to support them. What is to be done? Shall we keep the country, or shall we relinquish it? To relinquish it would be little short of folly; to retain, may be a crime.

After the foregoing remarks were in type, we received the Bombay Times of the 4th, which gives a different view of the origin of the quarrel with the Ameers. Our contemporary appears to state that they had agreed to all the provisions of the treaty "tyrannical and unjust as many of them were;" by which we are, we suppose, to understand that they had not only given up the territory demanded of them on the north and the south, but had also agreed to the partial destruction of their hunting grounds, that the navigation of the Indus might be unimpeded. He states that after every question had been settled and the treaty signed, a heavy pecuniary mulct was imposed on them for having corresponded with some foreign power contrary to the treaty of 1838. To what guilty correspondence our contemporary alludes, he has not informed us. That the Ameers were in correspondence with those who endeavoured to raise Central Asia against us in 1837 and 38, is matter of history; but Lord Ellenborough can scarcely intend to punish negotiations belonging to the days of Lord Auckland, which in the case of Dost Mahomed, he and his party have declared to be no sufficient cause of war. And with what power the Ameers can have corresponded within the last four years since we marched into Affghanistan and broke up the combination, it is difficult to divine, except it be with Akbar Khan. The article of our contemporary is singularly enigmatical. He speaks of the Governor General as having intended a "trick;" he talks of "no small amount of dishonest and discreditable negotiations." He imputes the worst conduct and the worst motive to Lord Ellenborough. If he is in full possession of the terms of the negotiation, he should lay them before his readers. If not, he should suspend his own judgment. It may be that the present attack on the Ameers is the most unjustifiable and the most nefarious measure which the British Government has yet undertaken; but we have no evidence whatever of the fact. We only see that our Envoy was attacked by overwhelming numbers, headed by a relative of the ruling family; and that General Napier was placed in a situation in which he must have fought and conquered, or have been annihilated. The Bombay Times is so sensitive on the subject of the Affghan war, that if he can trace the slightest resemblance between any measure of the present government, and that of Lord Auckland, his indignation is kindled, and his judgement falls into abeyance. Such may have been the case in the present instance, for the demand on Scinde is compared to that made on the Dost, which was of course every thing that was villanous.—But we must wait for fuller information.

Special Appeals.—The Act which has recently been passed relative to Special Appeals, involves an important principle of law and an essential change in the jurisdiction of the Courts; and appears therefore to require more than a cursory remark. We perceive that the Hurkaru has offered some comments on it, written on the whole, in a spirit of moderation, which deserves to be noted.

Every suitor in a Court is entitled to one regular appeal as a matter of right. But when the decision involves a question of law, or of usage having the force of law, or some important point on which no judicial opinion has been given, he is allowed a second or special appeal. These special appeals have reference therefore to constructions of law of scarcely less importance than the laws themselves, and demand the highest legal knowledge and experience, such as cannot be supposed to reside except in the highest Court of Law. Hitherto however it has been the practice for the Zillah Judges to hear special appeals from the decisions passed by the Principal Sudder Ameens, in appeal from the decrees of Sudder Ameens and Moonsiffs. It must be evident that the importance of the question involved in a second appeal does not depend upon the magnitude or otherwise of the particular interests at stake. A suit of the value of 300 Rupees may involve a point of law which requires the highest legal acumen and judgment which our judicial institutions can supply, and which ought not to be fixed except by the highest legal authority. The next application of that very construction of law may determine a suit of ten times its value. It is important to the interests of justice therefore that these legal points should be decided by the Court of final resort, and not by any intermediate tribunal.

It is important also that the constructions of law established by these special appeals should be uniform, which can never be the case, if every Zillah Judge is at liberty to establish them, and no appeal lies from his decision. We may thus come to have a different law in every district. Upon general principles therefore, the decision of these points of law should be vested in a Court, where they will be examined and settled by the first judges of the land, and of which the decisions will be uniformly respected in every Court throughout the country. But the peculiar position of the Zillah Judges at the present time renders this arrangement almost imperative. It is an anomaly in our arrangements that the Civil Judges in the various districts have not as formerly the benefit of any legal training and experience. They are transferred at once from a Magistrate's or Collector's office to the office of Civil Judge, to preside over the administration of Civil law, of which they have no experience. That they must be unqualified for a considerable time after they have been raised to the bench, to decide knotty points of law, and to furnish a correct construction of the Acts, is a fault which originates not with them, but with the system; but while it continues to exist, there is the strongest reason for leaving the decision of special appeals with the Sudder Court.

It is true that the Sudder Court has been in the habit of furnishing Constructions of law for the guidance of the subordinate Courts; but these extra-judicial decisions have not been without great and manifold inconvenience. The concurrence of the two chief Courts at Allahabad and Calcutta was made necessary to the validity of any such construction. Sometimes the Court at Allahabad consisted of four judges; and occasionally the opinion of two of them neutralized that of the other two. Sometimes the upper Court decided against the lower Court. Indeed the disagreement has been often found to be very perplexing, and to occupy much of the time of the two tribunals. In such cases a reference is made to the Executive Government; but to this course there lies the most serious objection. The constructions thus given were moreover framed on A. B. cases, without a full statement of facts and arguments, without the attendance of the parties or their pleaders, or any friction of legal argument. Perhaps the construction thus delivered upon the imperfect consideration of a fictitious case, was found erroneous when the same point came in a judicial form before the Court. Many other inconveniences might be pointed out; but these are sufficient to justify the change by which the Sudder Courts have been restrained from giving judgments on points of law, except when the whole case is argued judicially before them. Though the new law provides only for special appeals, and for those constructions of law which are to be determined by such appeals, we have reason to suppose that the Court will still be at liberty to issue explanations of minor questions of law and practise.—There are a variety of subordinate points on which it is highly important that the Sudder Court should give the benefit of its experience and judgement to the lower Courts.

Against the new law it may be urged, that the multiplication of special appeals from 500 to 1000, which will probably be the case, will consume much of the time of the Sudder Court, and lead to the accumulation of arrears. If this should eventually appear to be the case, it will be necessary to increase the strength of the Court; but the time which will be saved by the discontinuance of references from one Sudder Court to another, may possibly be found to afford sufficient leisure for the disposal of these suits. The delay to suitors is a more serious consideration. The Sudder Court will scarcely be able to decide the special appeals with as much rapidity as the Zillah Judges; but the delay will be diminished by that provision of the new law which limits the Court to the examination of those specific points of law on which the appeal is based, and forbids the Judges to open afresh the whole question of law and fact. Against the inconvenience to individual suitors must be placed the general advantage to the community of having these legal constructions settled by the highest judicial authority, and of giving them a character of uniformity.

It will be necessary however to make some farther alterations in our judicial system, to accommodate it to the new order of things. The decisions of the Sudder Ameens and Moonsiffs will now be subject to a regular appeal before the Zillah Judge and the Principal Sudder Ameen, and a special appeal to the Sudder. The decisions of the Principal Sudder Ameens in cases within 5000 Rs. will be appealable to the Zillah Judge also, and from his decree a special appeal will lie to the Sudder. But all cases between 5000 and 10,000 Rupees, will be excluded from the benefit of a second or special appeal; because the regular appeal lies to the Sudder Court, and no farther appeal is admissible to the Privy Council. To correct this grievance, it appears necessary to allow an appeal to the Zillah Judge from the Principal Sudder Ameen in all cases under 10,000 Rupees. Such cases will then come by special appeal to the Sudder, while suits of the value of 10,000 Rupees, and beyond that sum, will be heard by regular appeal before that Court, and again in appeal before the Judicial Committee at home.

THE OLD HINDOO versus THE FRIEND OF INDIA.—An Old Hindoo, engaged as he tells us in heavy commercial duties, who is enriching the columns of the Hurkaru with a series of Essays on the grievances of India, has suspended his patriotic labours to bestow his censure upon us. In the second number of the grievances, published in the pages of our contemporary on the 8th of the present month, he has given a running commentary on an article which appeared in this journal, on the address of the Mookerjee Baboo, and prefaced it with some remarks, which seem to confirm Cobbet's remark that a good patriot must begin with being a good hater. His hatred is directed partly against ourselves, but chiefly against the institutions under the protection of which he is accumulating wealth. If we were to say that we regret to find how completely he has contrived to lose his temper in the discussion, we might be suspected of insincerity, for there are few things which a public writer is supposed to be more thankful for than the intemperance of his opponent. He says that we have been raving for some time under the influence of a terrible night mare. His essay is adorned with other compliments equally flattering, which we can scarcely venture to quote lest we should be suspected also of vanity. We therefore dismiss at once, without farther comment, all that relates to ourselves personally.

One great disadvantage connected with a man's losing his temper is, that his judgement is obscured, and he becomes for a time disqualified to distinguish between what is true and what is not so. Of this the Old Hindoo furnishes a lamentable example. To what other cause than the loss of judgement consequent on the loss of temper, are we to attribute such assertions as these,—that the people are more wretched under the British than they were under the Mahomedan administration; that the British Government has degraded the natives to the condition of slaves—that up to these few days it has patronized slavery in its worst form—that it has passed unjust and tyrannical laws—that all the legislation of British India has been made by Hindoo pundits—that nothing can be imputed to the corruption of the natives,—that this corruption is fostered by the Civilians, because if the natives were honest, their occupation would cease;—that the civilians endeavour by every means in their power to promote the corruption of the natives, because if the natives were honest, the English people would direct them to be employed, and what would the Directors then do for a livelihood?—that the language of the Orientals is a continued hyperbole, and that when the laws of Munoo directed that melted lead should be poured down the throat of any man who slandered a brahmun, nothing more was meant than that "some slight punishment which was due in justice to the offence should be inflicted?" When he says that the language of the Orientals is a continued hyperbole, he explains much that would otherwise appear unaccountable in his own letter.

Coupled with this censure of the British Government, he gives a lofty panegyric of the Mahomedan rule. "They encouraged learning by large endowments"—only these endowments were bestowed exclusively on the Mollas and Muftis and not on the Brahmuns. "A Rajah was Prime minister, and another was a Governor of Bengal"—only he had turned Moosulman first. "They made no distinction between Moslems and Hindoos;"—only they preferred the Hindoos, because a Mahomedan was like a sieve, and the wealth he acquired was lost through the interstices, whereas a Hindoo was like a sponge, which might be always squeezed to advantage. "They had one set of laws"—only it was the law of the Koran, and the Hindoo law, which we revived, was in abeyance for five centuries; and "they had only one Court of Justice"—in which a Hindoo was never allowed to preside.

In one respect the Old Hindoo has done us injustice. He says, we have endeavoured to frighten his countrymen by calling their proceedings treasonable; and saying that such meetings, alluding, as he affirms we do, to the assembly at Shreekissen Baboo's house where Mr. George Thompson presided, if held at Batavia or Samarang, would have ensured the speaker and members transportation to Amboyna. Now we did not allude to the meetings at the Baboo's house, but to a meeting at the Sungskrit College, at which Mr. George Thompson was not present. Yet it is a fact, and not an opinion, that there is no other colony of any European power in which such language as that to which we referred would not be treated as seditious. Under the British Government it is treated with indifference—we will not say with contempt. That Government has come unharmed through a more formidable opposition at a more important crisis. The language of the Mookerjee Baboo, and the Old Hindoo in its most terrific strain, is mild, when compared with the denunciations of the Mahomedan press at a time when it was supposed that the combination formed in Central Asia, under the auspices of Russia,—we are adopting the language of the Moosulman editors—would sweep us into the sea. Indeed the Calcutta movement is so entirely innocuous in a political point of view, that if etiquette did not forbid it, Mr. Bird might with abundant impunity give up the Hall at Government House for the meeting, and honour it with his own presence. But when the Old Hindoo hints at an appeal to the French, he must excuse us for reminding him that any thing which militates against the allegiance which the Natives owe to the British Crown, is by law treasonable; only the treason is entirely neutralized by the folly of the appeal. To assert that if the Natives had enjoyed the blessings of the French Revolution, they would by this time have been treated like men, and assumed a proper position among the nations of the earth, is to write absolute nonsense. Let him read Thiers and Allison before he again ventures to long for a revolution which would have turned the Hooghly into a revolutionary torrent, and established a permanent guillotine in Tank Square.

It is the smallest glory of the British Government that it is superior to the Mahomedan Governments which preceded it. If with the advantages it enjoys of higher illumination, political and religious, it could claim no higher credit, however it might deserve the commendation of the natives, with their limited experience, it would be unworthy the praises of Christendom. What eulogy would it be to say that a Christian nation, foremost in the ranks of civilization, had not desecrated the temples and mutilated the idols of a vanquished people; that it was not in the habit of dragging the country gentlemen who refused to pay their revenue, through a pond filled with the most intolerable filth; that the richest bankers in the kingdom had not been carried into captivity and then hurled from a precipice to find a grave in the river? The only Hindoo historian we have, says that the last of the Nabobs of Moorshedabad in the year preceding the battle of Plassey, amused himself with ripping open pregnant women that he might satisfy his curiosity, and with drowning men by dozens in crazy boats that he might enjoy the spectacle of their dying agonies. It would be almost a reflection on our national honour had we no higher claim to the gratitude of the natives than the merit of having abstained from such cruelties.

The glory of the British administration has always appeared to us—and we have had some opportunity of watching its progress for thirty years—to consist in its gradually overcoming those prejudices which once predominated in it. We compare it with itself at successive periods, and we find abundant cause to congratulate India on its existence. The country fell to us by a train of unexpected circumstances at a period when every nation in Europe considered foreign possessions valuable only as they ministered to the wealth and power of the conquerors; when the interests of the conquered were of no account; when the benevolent political maxims in Fenelon's Telemaque, which are now considered common place, were regarded as Quixotic. That age has passed away; its doctrines have long since been exploded, and it is now admitted as an axiom that we hold the Government of India as a trust for the benefit of its children. This axiom is the vital principle of our administration. The history of our rule in India for the last half century is a history of contant and steady progress. The liberal principles upon which the government is now conducted would have been deemed by the statesmen of past days utterly incompatible with the stability of the empire. The abolition of slavery throughout India would have disturbed the repose of Warren Hastings. A meeting in Calcutta at which the British Government should be attacked as it has been by a Mookerjee Baboo would have been dispersed by force without the slightest hesitation, in the days of Lord Wellesley. The education of the people, even on its present very limited scale, would have been esteemed dangerous in the days of Lord Minto. The liberty of the press we now enjoy would have alarmed Lord Amherst more than an invasion of the Burmese. The whole policy of the British Government in India has undergone so entire a change that we can scarcely recognize a single principle which is common to the first conquerors of the country and its present administrators. This amelioration has been the result not of any individual feelings of benevolence in any one Governor General, which his successor might be at liberty to abandon, but of the steady growth of sound and just principles in the administration itself. Since we entered on this career, there has been no retrograde movement; and the most despotic ruler would no more dream of abolishing our Colleges, or limiting the enjoyment of offices of trust to Europeans, or gagging the press, than Sir Robert Peel would dream of reviving the Star Chamber and the High Commission Court. This progressive principle of improvement is so interwoven with the system of our administration, that even the misuse of their advantages and privileges by a small fraction of educated youths in Calcutta will produce no sinister effect. The fierce denunciations to which the Government happens just now to be exposed, will not be permitted for a moment to turn it from the course of its wise policy. Government will not allow the ingratitude of a few to become the measure of its duty towards the many. There are others who know how to appreciate the blessings which the British Government has conferred on India, and who will assist it by their advice and experience in multiplying those blessings. To the frothy declamation of the Mookerjee Baboo, to the wild appeal of the Old Hindoo to the French, we oppose the deliberate opinion of a greater man than either—Dwarkenath Tagore, who, on leaving England in company with Mr. George Thompson, said to the Court of Directors:

"I have worked in my humble sphere under a firm conviction that the happiness of India is best secured by her connexion with your own great and glorious country, and that the more the people of that vast empire were enlightened, the more sensible they would become of the invincible power of the protecting state, and of the excellence of a Government, whose pure and benevolent intentions, whose noble solicitude for the welfare and improvement of the millions committed by PROVIDENCE to its charge, may challenge the admiration of the wide world."

This article has run out involuntarily to such length, that we cannot find room for examining in detail the fifteen recipes for the removal of those wrongs under which "hapless and forsaken India" is now groaning. The author of the "Grievances of India," No. 2, must revise them before they can be seriously discussed. Thus, he requires that two members of the Imperial Parliament should be given to each Presidency; forgetting that no sooner had the members embarked, than a meeting would be called to turn them out of society. He demands the abolition of all state pensions, without remembering that for every Rupee of pension a European receives from the revenues of India, the Natives receive twenty. He wants a Vagrant Act before he has made any provision for the tens of thousands of religious mendicants of his own religion. His plans are crude, and indigested. He must give up his heavy commercial duties for a year, and apply himself diligently to the science of Government, before he can produce a constitution worth looking at.

THE UNION BANK.—The Report of the Committee appointed to investigate the transactions of the Union Bank with the extinct firm of Gilmore and Co. has been presented to the Proprietors, and the Secretary has placed on record his own reply to it. In a weekly journal, with a limited space, and many demands upon it, we cannot make room for these voluminous documents, and must therefore confine ourselves to a brief notice of them.

The Report of the Committee discloses a series of transactions, for which the all confiding public was by no means prepared. It shews that property has been pledged to the Bank which never had an existence; that bills of Exchange have been hypothecated to the Bank for large sums, when they were known by the borrowers to be waste paper; that loans have been raised on goods to which the parties had uncontrolled access, which they used without any reference to the dictates of morality; and that British produce on board a vessel in the river was pawned to the Bank, and a portion of that produce unscrupulously abstracted. The transactions which the Committee have dragged to light are any thing but creditable to the British or the Christian character, and they seem to have led to the conviction that the good faith, to which the Bank has hitherto trusted with the utmost confidence in its dealings with the mercantile community, has broken down, and that its negotiations must hereafter be conducted on the sterner principle of commercial mistrust.

The Report appears to us to have singled out the Secretary, with somewhat of an ungenerous severity in order to fix on him the odium of transactions which have ended in loss. There is something like a disposition to turn upon him alone that current of indignation which should be directed rather against the Directors, but still more against the system of the Bank. It is advantageous—at least to us—that the names of the Directors were not surrendered to the Committee; for as we are happily ignorant of them, we can allude to their official conduct without any danger of personality. appears that the Bank has for a series of years been far too much under the control of a body of commercial men, who have distributed its funds rather with reference to the wants of their friends and mercantile associates, than to the interests of the Proprietors. The Directors appear from the very origin of the Institution to have allowed its affairs to be conducted upon a very loose and hazardous system; and to have trusted far more to the honour of the lenders, than to the intrinsic value of the security they offered. This is acknowledged by all parties. When the present Secretary came into office, he, like his predecessor, pointed out the dangers of the system which was then in vogue. The words of the former Secretary are remarkable; they give us in one short paragraph a thorough insight into the system which has just been exposed by the Committee, in time to save the Bank from ruin.

"There is besides those, another class of security, if such it can be called, when the goods are never seen, nor their existence ascertained by any party on behalf of the Bank. It is a farce to say that such loans are made on deposit of goods, yet often having obtained accommodation on such terms in the first instance, with two or three renewals, it would, no doubt, be taken as ground of mutual offence, if any thing more substantial were now to be required."

To have demanded any thing more substantial than the security which the Directors were then in the habit of accepting, which security the Secretary himself declared to be a farce would have been taken as a ground of mutual offence. This is indeed a fine position for a Secretary to be placed in. The Directors help their friends to loans on the deposit of goods when the goods are never seen, and their existence identified by no party on behalf of the Bank; and yet were the Secretary to urge it on the Directors to terminate the farce, and demand substantial security, instead of receiving their thanks, he would run the risk of giving offence. Mr. Gordon has endeavoured, and not without success, to remedy this state of things. Perhaps he has not done all that he might have done. Perhaps he ought to have made a bolder stand against a system which must in the long run have brought the Bank to the ground. Yet we all know how difficult it must be for a man to place himself in a state of opposition to those whom he is called to act with, and to act under. It is not generous to throw the whole blame of these losses on the man who endeavoured to correct the vices of the system. It would, we think, have been more equitable in every instance in which the Committee have used the word Secretary, to have used the term Bank. It looks somewhat like an attempt to screen the real offenders by presenting the ministerial officer as a scape-goat, for there is little reason to doubt that in the disposal of the funds of the Bank to merchants and speculators, the voice of the Directors has always predominated over that of the Secretary.

Yet we cordially unite with Mr. Turton in saying, let "bye gones be bye gones." In the particular case now exposed there has been dishonour to the parties, discredit to the Directors and Secretary for their laxity; and loss to the proprietors of five lakhs of Rupees. But this loss will be a gain, if it serves to save fifty lakhs, which it is most likely to do. The present lesson will not be soon forgotten. The storm which has now burst, will serve to purify the atmosphere of the Bank. Business will in future be conducted on safer and sounder principles, and the Bank itself will regain that place in the confidence of the public which it once enjoyed. But the Proprietors must not look for more than six, or at the utmost for seven per cent. dividends, if they are determined to allow their funds to be embarked in no speculations connected with risk. It is by endeavouring to swell itself twice a year to the size of the Bengal Bank, which is fattened by a Government monopoly, that the Union Bank has injured itself. That Chartered Bank gives its proprietory body the benefit of the profits of a double capital. The Union Bank cannot give the same interest, except by embarking in undertakings of doubtful expediency. But Union Bank Shares at a premium of ten per cent., when it gives a dividend of seven per cent., afford just as good an investment for capital as Bengal Bank Shares when they give twelve per cent. with a premium of sixty per cent.

THE GATES.—The Procession of the Gates is as yet the most striking feature in the administration of Lord Ellenborough; and it will possibly continue to be remembered, when other and greater events have been forgotten. Independently of this circumstance, the importance which his Lordship appears to attach to them will be a sufficient warrant for our recording their progress from station to station, till they reach the sea shore, or are arrested in their progress by orders from England.

Our latest advices left them at Brindabun, the residence of holy Brahmuns and sacred monkeys. His Lordship appears to have taken this place and Muttra on his way to Agra, and to have passed some time in examining their wonders. The Gates followed in his train, and we are told that they were unveiled on their arrival; that both the brahmuns and the baboons crowded to see them, and that they were to remain there for three days to gratify the curiosity of the devotees both rational and irrational. What would not Landseer have given for the opportunity of witnessing this rich and interesting sight? It would scarcely be possible even for his fertile imagination to do justice to a scene the like of which has never been exhibited before, and is never likely to be exhibited again. He has drawn many monkeys with inimitable humour; but he has never seen any thing to compare with the sacred monkeys of Brindabun, as they gazed and grinned with superstitious rapture on those Gates of sandal wood. There can be little doubt that he will not allow so picturesque a scene to escape him; but he should have been on the spot to catch the spirit of the thing.

Mr. Pfander tells us in his journal, appended to the last report of the Church Missionary Society, that when Lord Auckland visited this spot, he gave a Hundred Rupees among the priests, and that they have since persisted in representing the gift as a proof of the Governor General's respect for that shrine. The next Governor General visits them with the Gates of Somnath in his train, covered with the richest trappings, escorted by a Military guard, and treated with a degree of reverence which cannot fail to make a deep impression on the native mind. After the visit of the gates, we fear the Missionary may preach for ten years in vain at Muttra and Brindabund.

It is thus our great men unconsciously foster a superstition, which is the grand cause of national degradation, and which must be eradicated before India can take up her position among civilized nations. It is thus that the injunctions of the Court of Directors are disregarded, and the influence of the state bestowed on the encouragement of idolatry and priestcraft.

THE NEW MAGISTRATE OF HOWRAH.—Among the minor improvements effected by Government, we must not omit to notice the establishment of a separate Magisterial jurisdiction in the suburbs of Calcutta across the water. This measure has been so long required on the principles of justice and common sense, and has been so repeatedly petitioned for by the public and the public press, that it is only marvellous it has been delayed to the present time. Within the last twenty-five years the city of Calcutta has swelled to a great extent beyond its original limits, and our "borough of Southwark," has grown almost to the size of a town; but the old judicial arrangements, which were made when it was only a hamlet, have continued without alteration. The Criminal Court has continued to be held on the Calcutta side of the water; and the suitors for justice have been obliged to cross a river rendered particularly dangerous by a forest of shipping. This inconvenience has now been removed. A separate Magistrate has been appointed for the trans-Hooghly suburb, and justice is brought to the door of the poor and the oppressed. It is much to be desired that a similar arrangement could be made in other parts of the country where a broad and dangerous river runs through the Magisterial jurisdiction. During a third of the year the people cannot obtain justice, but at the risk of their lives. In all such cases, the Magistracy should be separated into two divisions and a Magistrate's Court established on either side of the river.

Advantage has also been taken of this change to cut off from the jurisdiction of Hooghly those thannahs which lay to the south, at so great a distance from the seat of the Magistrate as to be virtually beyond his control, and to annex them to the Court of Howrah. The district of Hooghly therefore no longer extends through one degree and a half of latitude from Santipore in the North, to Fort Mornington, in sight of Diamond Harbour, in the South.

We return many thanks to the friend who has favoured us with the scheme of a rail road, which was submitted recently to the Court of Directors. We had intended to take up the subject in the present number, but to do justice to it we must give the entire plan, which we cannot do before the next week, as the important intelligence from Scinde occupies all our room.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, MARCH 9.

— The Bombay Times Extra which reached us too late to be of service in our last issue, announces a great victory by Sir Charles Napier over the army of Scinde, in which 22,000 Native troops were opposed to 2700 British troops. For particulars we refer to our extracts. The conflict was obstinately maintained for three hours; the carnage, extraordinary; the victory, most signal.

— The Star states, that a party of gentlemen, commanders of vessels engaged in the transport service in China, dined together at Spence's, and after dinner discussed the propriety of opening a subscription for those who had suffered during the service. The transports were often exposed to the full fire of the enemy, and many of the officers and men received injuries which have disabled them for life. Had they been in the regular service of Government, ample provision would have been made for them; but they have no legal claim on the state, and must pass the remainder of their lives in misery and want, unless some means of relief can be devised. A subscription was commenced and 500 Rs. put down immediately. The owners and commanders of ships have reaped a golden harvest in this war; and it becomes them to devote some portion of their gains to the relief of those who suffered on board their vessels.

— From the same paper we learn, that the united body of the Preventive service have petitioned Government for some modification of the regulations which apply to them. They are subject to many privations. Their sabbaths are not their own. They are confined uninterruptedly to the vessel, and have only a day or two in the month for intercourse with their families. When absent a day through illness, half their pay is cut. Their case is a hard one, and calls for the humane interference of their employers.

— The meeting at the Mechanics' Institute held on Tuesday, was numerously attended by ladies and gentlemen, Europeans and Natives. Mr. George Thompson delivered an address on Mechanics Institutions, which the Rev. Mr. Morton promised to translate into Bengalee. That gentleman also addressed the meeting, and said that though Mr. Thompson had some crotchets on the subject of Indian politics, he was free to avow that all he had heard that evening had his entire assent. Mr. Thompson replied to Mr. Morton in an extempore speech. The most remarkable expression in it was the assurance that every opinion he had formed of the Government of India at home had been confirmed, and none of them altered, since his arrival here. Mr. Thompson's best friends cannot but regret the use of so very unguarded an expression. We learn from the Hurkaru, that the harmony of the meeting was disturbed by the brutal conduct of some ruffian, whose name is not mentioned.

— Mr. Bushby is obliged by ill health to visit the Cape; and his departure creates three acting appointments: which is to be regretted, though we see not how it could be avoided. Mr. Davidson officiates for him as Secretary; Mr. Harvey officiates for Mr. Davidson as Commissioner; Mr. Currie officiates for Mr. Harvey as Collector of Sea Customs; and some body must officiate for Mr. Currie as Secretary to the Revenue Board.

FRIDAY, MARCH 10.

— We have no farther information from Bombay regarding the signal victory of Hydrabad. The Star has a letter from that neighbourhood, which states that all the wounded officers were doing well; and that a force was immediately to be despatched from Bombay to strengthen Major Napier, who is but inadequately supplied with troops for so arduous a task as that of maintaining peace in a country where every man is our foe. This precaution is necessary whether the country is retained or not. Not a syllable is said about the treasures of Hydrabad, which have been stated at the most moderate computation to exceed fifteen millions sterling, the largest amount of prize money which ever fell to the lot of an army. The Spanish galoons, which used to be considered the richest prizes in the world, were nothing to the Treasury of Hydrabad.

— A most determined case of murder and suicide has just been perpetrated in Calcutta by one Dobson, an officiating preventive officer. He had been married some months to a widow of whom he was jealous, perhaps with, perhaps without cause. He was given to the bottle, he was in debt, and his goods had been distrained. This combination of causes unseated reason. He came home from the ship without leave, a little elevated with liquor on Wednesday last, bolted the door, and first blew out his wife's brains, and then his own. The Jury found a verdict of wilful murder and felo de se.

SATURDAY, MARCH 11.

— The Bombay Times, which arrived yesterday, has fuller particulars respecting the great victory obtained over the Scinde Army by General Napier, the whole of which we have transferred to our columns. The Editor has given a brief notice of the cause of hostilities. The Ameers refused to give up any portion of their hunting grounds on the banks of the Indus for the navigation of that stream. These Shikargahs have been established by the most infamous oppression, by the rooting up of villages, and the dispersion of the wretched inhabitants. They have now become the cause of the overthrow of the Talpoora dynasty. Major Outram, has gone on to Bombay, and the Times intimates that he will return to England forthwith. It must be a very short-sighted policy in the Government to allow a man of Major Outram's qualifications, and one so thoroughly acquainted with Scinde, to quit India at such an emergency.

— A Correspondent of the Englishman, Ben Backstay, has sent a letter to the Editor extolling the courage of Messrs. Rustumjee Cowasjee and Co. in determining to protect the Chief mate of the Cowasjee Family, and in refusing to allow him to be displaced. But Backstay does not explain why the firm spontaneously offered to sacrifice him, in their letter to Government.

— The Governor General has ordered two Police battalions to be organized for service in Bundlekund, on the same principle as those which have been just established in the Sagor and Nerbudda territories. The gallant Major Ferris, who obtained so high a reputation in the Afghan campaign, has been placed at the head of them.

MONDAY, MARCH 13.

The Lottery is about to be consigned to the tomb, without a single expression of regret on the part of any public writer. Every editor has cordially joined in congratulation on the abatement of this nuisance. We believe we are correct in saying that the lottery has latterly, under Capt. Hyde's management, been made profitable; and that the abolition is not final till the Court in Leadenhall Street shall have sanctioned Mr. Bird's Act. One writer in the Hurkaru hints at the possibility of the establishment of a lottery up here. We think his fears are visionary. We will vouch for it that the Danish authorities will not take up an objectionable institution which the British Government has abandoned for its immoral tendency.

— The Governor General reached Agra on the 4th instant, and took up his residence in the Fort. We have extracted from the Agra Ukhbar a long account of this event.

— It is pleasing to learn that the regular Mail of the 20th February reached Bombay in time for the March Steamer, the same day with the Express.

—The number of letters despatched from Bombay on the 1st of March was 27,511; of covers, 10,067 total, 37,578. This Mail will convey to England the first intelligence of the unexpected battle of Hydrabad.

— The Bombay papers state that the report of Sir George Arthur's having declined the invitations of Natives, thereby making an invidious distinction between them and Europeans, is altogether unfounded. He has accepted invitations to all the recent parties, except in one instance in which indisposition constrained him to remain at home; and this cause was distinctly assigned for his non-attendance.

— The account of Akbar Khan's having returned Capt. Troup's horse is correct. The Delhi Gazette states, that while he was at Delhi, a messenger arrived from Akbar with two letters, one for the Governor General, the other for Capt. Troup himself. They were both sent to Lord Ellenborough, who returned the Captain's letter unopened, and told him he might keep the horse.

— The same paper states, that the Governor General's Agent has been instructed to withhold the nuzzur or present usually offered to the Emperor at Delhi on the part of Government.

TUESDAY, MARCH 14.

— A numerous meeting of native householders has been held at the Police office, in consequence of the requisition of Government, relative to the working of Act 24 of 1840; the object of which was to devolve the municipal arrangements of Calcutta on the householders. No attempt has since been made on the part either of natives or Europeans to carry the Act into effect. At this meeting, Baboo Asootosh Dey being in the Chair, it was resolved, That it is considered expedient to undertake the duties of Assessment, Collection and management of the rates of the Town. A Sub-Committee of twelve have been appointed who will meet and prepare a report on the subject.

— The Delhi Gazette Extra, which came in yesterday, gives little addition to the intelligence received from Scinde, except that the Satellite Steamer, was able to take up a position on the river flank of the enemy whence her guns did serious execution among them.

— The Poorun Chundrodoy, after passing a just censure on the members of the Tagore family, who have excluded Dwarkanath Tagore from society because he has visited Europe, says that their names are to be struck off the Government House list. We believe he is altogether misinformed.

— Capt P. Nicholson, lately in attendance upon Dost Mahomed, having returned to the provinces, on the Ameer's quitting Lahore, has been placed at the disposal of the Commander-in-Chief. Capt. Nicholson, is among those who enjoyed the patronage of our late Governor General. He is not likely to be replaced on the staff for sometime to come.

The Star of this morning has some very apposite remarks on the newly constructed Police Battalions. Such establishments are admirably adapted for countries like Saugor or Bundlekund, where a spirit of resistance to public authority has been so lately manifested, but it is much to be doubted whether the evils of a defective Police in the more peaceable districts will be cured by giving a military organization to the constabulary force. But what we intended to point out in this very brief notice is, that in one short sentence our contemporary has alluded to a change greater than any which the Government has yet made in India, and one which, however beneficial, could not be effected without producing the deepest and most extensive ill will. We allude to the remark that "the funds now leviable for the village watch which in many instances are notoriously neglected and abused, might advantageously be made available for this object."

— We are happy to learn from the Hurkaru, that Mr George Plowden, the present Collector of Sylhet, has been selected to fill the post, ad interim, of Secretary to the Board of Revenue.

— The Hurkaru states, that a very learned astrologer attached to the Sudder Court, has predicted that the Comet will occasion a tremendous inundation, fifteen days after its first appearance. It became visible with its portentous tail on Sunday, the 5th, a few hours after Mr.

Toby Prinsep left Calcutta. Fifteen days from that date will give us Monday, the 20th, when we shall probably have the Hindoostan back, and the Express and the Queen's speech, and the inundation, all within twenty-four hours of each other.

— The Hurkaru states also, that the Seal's College still exists, and that it is doing good by its competition. It has terrified the Hindoo College into a reduction of its charge from five Rupees a month to four.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15.

— Lord Ellenborough's proclamation from the Palace of Agra, on receiving intelligence of the victory gained at Hyderabad, has just arrived in time to appear in this number. It is not easy to ascertain from it what his Lordship intends to do with Scinde; though it looks very much as though he intended to retain the largest portion of it. The Star announces on the authority of a letter from Scinde that the Indus was alive again, that an army of 25,000 Beloochees had assembled. If so, Sir Charles Napier's position will be critical; but it will only call out his innate talent and courage more fully. He sent to stop the departure of H. M. 41st, but they had started for England from Kerachee. Brigadier Wallace's force must have reached Ferozepore before any letter of recal could reach him. It is to be hoped that reinforcements will be speedily sent to Hyderabad.

— The India Steamer made the passage from Madras to Galle in three days and a half, which is a remarkably quick progress. The Hindoostan was expected at Madras yesterday. She may possibly reach Calcutta by the 20th, and the express perhaps a day after.

— The Lord Bishop Mar Athanasius, ordained Metropolitan of the Syrian Churches, has arrived at Bombay. He is the first Bishop who has been ordained to the see of Malabar by the Patriarch of Antioch for a long time. The Bishop is said to have brought many ancient and valuable Syrian manuscripts with him from Mesopotamia, one of which, upwards of a thousand years old, was dug from below the pavement of a convent near the ancient Nineveh.

— The latest intelligence from Hydrabad, given in the Delhi Gazette, is to the 23d February, six days after the battle, when every thing was quiet.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

NOTIFICATION BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA.

Palace of Agra, 5th March, 1843.—The Governor General had earnestly hoped that the new provisions, to which various acts in contravention of their existing engagements and various indications of hostility had compelled him to require the assent of the Ameers of Scinde, would have been carried into full effect, as they had been agreed to by their Highnesses without a recurrence to arms.

This hope has been disappointed.

The Ameers having signed the new Treaty proposed to them on the 14th of February, attacked on the following day with a large force the residence of the British Commissioner. In this treacherous attack they were repulsed. On the 17th, Major General Sir Charles Napier gained a decisive victory over their whole army, and on the 20th, the British troops occupied the city of Hyderabad.

Six of the Ameers delivered their swords to the British General upon the field of battle. All their guns, ammunition, and treasure were taken together with their camp.

The Beloochees lost 5,000 men.

Thus has victory placed at the disposal of the British Government, the country on both banks of the Indus from Sukkur to the sea, with the exception of such portions thereof as may belong to Meer Ali Moorad of Khyrpore, and to any other of the Ameers who may have remained faithful to his engagements.

The Governor General cannot forgive a treacherous attack upon a representative of the British Government, nor can he forgive hostile aggression prepared by those who were in the act of signing a Treaty.

It will be the first object of the Governor General to use the power victory has placed in his hands, in the manner most conducive to the freedom of trade, and to the prosperity of the people of Scinde so long misgoverned.

To reward the fidelity of Allies by substantial marks of favour, and so to punish the crime of treachery in Princes, as to deter all from its commission, are further objects which the Governor General will not fail to effect.

To Major General Sir Charles Napier and to the brave troops he commanded, the Governor General offers the tribute of his own admiration, and of the gratitude of the Government and people of India.

The bravery of the enemy against whom they were engaged, has enhanced their glory—the most decisive victory has been gained upon the best fought field.

In perpetual commemoration of this brilliant achievement the 2d company 2d battalion and the 3d company 3d battalion of Bombay artillery, and the Company of the Madras Sappers and Miners will bear upon their appointments, and the 9th regiment of Bengal light cavalry, the Poona horse and the Scinde horse, upon their standards and appointments, and the 12th and 25th regiments of Bombay native infantry, upon their colours and appointments, the word "Hyderabad, 1843."

The regiment of Scinde horse is on its present establishment permanently attached to the Army of Bombay.

The Governor General will not further anticipate the measures which the Home Authorities informed, before they can receive his despatches, of the victory which has been obtained may think fit to adopt for the purpose of marking their high sense of the merits of those by whom so great a service has been performed.

The Governor General directs that a salute of 21 guns be fired at all the stations of the army.

By order of the Right Honourable the Governor General of India.

J. THOMASON,
Offg. Secy. to the Govt. of India, with the Governor General.

The Agra Ukhbar of the 4th instant, furnishes us with the following items of intelligence:—

The Right Honourable the Governor General arrived this morning at about half past seven o'clock. As the minutest movements of every great man are of the utmost consequence to the world, we have taken pains to ascertain the order of the procession, of which he was the moving principle. It was as follows:

The Governor General's Band;
The 55th Light Infantry;
The Body Guard;
The Governor General on horseback attended by His Staff and the principal Civil and Military Officers of the station;
The 1st Light Cavalry;
The late Captain McMorine's Troop of Horse Artillery under Captain Kinleside: and the 2d Grenadiers.

His Lordship left his Camp near Secundra at a quarter past five in the morning and entered the Civil end of the Station through the Delhi gate. Instead of, as might have been expected, proceeding along the main road to the Government House or even to Cantonments. His eccentric Lordship went on to the Fort—for no earthly reason that we can conceive, unless it was that he had been particularly advised not to select that locality for his residence. The procession passed on through the city to the Tripolia, where all the Troops in the Station, consisting of the Artillery and the 61st Native Infantry, were drawn up to pay due honours to the illustrious 55th and the scarce less illustrious Governor General. On entering the Fort, a salute of 19 guns was fired from the ramparts.

The line of march being preceded by Infantry, the progress was necessarily slow, and had it not been for a smart shower of rain that laid the dust the previous night, the roads would have made the passage anything but agreeable. His Lordship now occupies the palace within the Fort, which has been cleaned out for his reception. He talks of making additions and improvements to the apartments, as if he intended making a long stay there. We should not be surprised, however, from our now intimate knowledge of his character, if he removed to-morrow morning to some other spot, equally as odd and uncomfortable.

The Troops forming His Lordship's escort are encamped in Cantonments—some on the Native Infantry parade-ground—some on the Artillery grounds and the remainder on the Church plain. The 1st Cavalry and the Horse Artillery expect to return to Muttra shortly.

The Somnath Gates are still at Muttra, whence, after they have remained three days to gratify the devotional feelings of the Brahmins and the laudable curiosity of the holy monkeys at Bindrabun, they are to be brought into Agra. Apropos of the personages, we learn that His Lordship spent some time in their Company and enjoyed much social intercourse with the grey-haired ones, from whom he will probably have learned many a trick that even he knew not before.

It is said that, in October, Lord Ellenborough has an intention of visiting Bundelkund, to inspect the new station, Noagong; and the 35th Native Infantry, the 1st Cavalry, the 2d of the 3d Horse Artillery and 2d Grenadiers, are to act as his escort thither.

Captain J. Macdonald of the 61st Native Infantry, our present Brigade Major, is to take charge of No. 16 Light Field Battery in progress to Nowgong in Bundlekund. His departure is much regretted by all—as his urbane and obliging manner and amiable disposition have secured him many friends. We have not yet heard the name of his successor in office.

H. M.'s 39th Foot and the Khelat-i-Ghilzie Corps arrived this morning, thus supplying our complement of Troops for the Station.

THE COMET.

As the appearance of the Comet on Monday and Tuesday evening, has created some little sensation in these parts, we have endeavoured to get some account of it from a scientific friend. The following is the result:—

"I was made aware of the phenomenon the day before yesterday, but only at half past 7 o'clock, when the nucleus of the comet was considerably below the horizon, but from the appearance of part of the tail, it could not possibly be mistaken for any thing else than a comet. Yesterday, I attended at the Observatory to make some observations, for the purpose of sending you an account of it, but it was cloudy where it ought to have been clear; so that I could not ascertain the azimuth of the nucleus, its altitude at the time of observation, nor the length of the tail, but judging from the appearance of the tail, much less luminous than on the preceding evening, it may be supposed that the comet will make us but a short visit."

The following further information, relative to the Comet, will be interesting to many of our readers:—

"The sudden appearance of the Comet, on the evening of the 6th, its bright and long tail brought many to doubt it to be a Comet; but in the history of the Comets, we find, that at the birth of Mithridates, about 130 years before Christ, a Comet appeared during eighty days, whose brilliancy surpassed that of the Sun, and took four hours to set; this account is, no doubt, exaggerated, as since Astronomers give the history and the description of comets, none has been found to rival the Sun in brightness, not even that of Venus in perigee. There were three comets visible for six months together, that in the time of Nero, 64 years before Christ in 685 and in 1240; 60 years before Christ, a Comet very near the Sun was seen during the darkness occasioned by an Eclipse of the Sun. The present Comet was seen to great advantage last night, its tail, judged by the unassisted eye, is 30 long; produced it would meet Sirius; a line from Canopus (a large bright star at quarter past seven o'clock on the meridian, and 15. altitude) to Sirius and another to the Nucleus of the Comet, makes a right angle, so that the Nucleus must be in the constellation Eridanus, and culminate at half past three o'clock. The length of the tail of a Comet is seldom the same, for two successive nights, nor for the same instant of being in different places. Here the length of the tail appears only a few degrees, in other parts it occupies a considerable portion of the heavens; here the tail makes its appearance singly, there it has two and more branches. In tropical climates several were seen to have 90. and more, in Europe the same Comets had but 19 to 20."—Hurk.

We saw in a late London paper a notice, that a Comet had been observed by some astronomers in the South of Europe, rapidly approaching the Sun, and that it would reach its perihelion about the 20th Feb. Not expecting to see it here, we took no extract from the paper, and cannot again find it. This we now regret, as we (in common no doubt with many of our readers) were startled with the splendid and unexpected appearance of this heavenly visitor on Monday evening, occupying thirty or forty degrees of the western hemisphere, and closely following the setting sun. We have not seen so beautiful a Comet for many years; that of 1825 was not by any means so splendid, and the two or three that have been visible to the naked eye since, have been almost without lustre. A few nights will, we suppose, enable astronomical observers to give some correct information as to the course of this Comet, and to inform us whether it is one that has previously been observed or not. In the mean-time it will not afford a less pleasing spectacle to the unscientific, though we fear our native friends will consider it as portentous of calamity. If we may prognosticate, we should be inclined to say that it is indicative of the apotheosis of Lord Ellenborough, not to the upper regions, but in the fiery chariot of Steam to the Western hemisphere.—Eng. March 8.

SCINDE.

We gave in last month's summary a short abstract of the operations of the army under Sir C. Napier, then betwixt Roree and Hydrabad, up to the 15th January. Our present intelligence extends to the 22nd February from Kurrachee, and the 21st from Hydrabad, and contains some items of much importance. Taking up our narrative at the point where we last month broke off: it may be recollected, that at this time the General was absent with a light detachment on an expedition into the desert, for the purpose of destroying the fort of Emaumghur, where the Ameers had retired with a force of 2,000 men. The main object of engaging in this perilous incursion was to shew the Scindians the fallacy of the idea always cherished by them, that here they could at any time place themselves beyond our reach, and defy us so long as they could support themselves. The expedition quitted the main army on the 5th, and, after a most fatiguing march of 100 miles through the desert reached their destination on the 12th January. They were all reduced to commissariat rations on the third march, the General partaking of the same fare as the humblest soldier. They found Emaumghur strongly fortified by thick walls and well-placed flanking towers, which if defended with ordinary skill or courage might have offered a very formidable resistance. It had been abandoned in such haste, that a large quantity of grain, with some 15,000lbs. of gunpowder had been left behind. The former was appropriated by the Commissariat,—the latter, in so far as required, employed in blowing up the fortifications, these having been destroyed, the residue was exploded in heaps. The objects of the General having thus been accomplished, he prepared for his return on the 16th, and rejoined the army on the 21st ult. Major Outram, who had accompanied them, quitted them while making their weary way through the desert on their return. He proceeded to Khyrpoor, and rode alone into the camp of Meer Roostum, who he persuaded to return with him, together with his nephew, to General Napier's camp. The gallant General was most anxious to avoid occasion of bringing on actual conflict, or permitting the needless effusion of blood, which is admitted by every man in India who has made himself acquainted with the most obvious of the facts, to be the most cruel and iniquitous in which we were ever engaged. The first great point was, our demand of having the navigation of the Indus made open, free, and without restraint or controul; this was readily arranged. Following on this, we insisted on making over to the Bahawulpore Rajah a huge slice of Upper Scinde, extending from the confines of Bahawulpore to Roree, including Sukkur and Bukkur, and of Lower Scinde from Tatta to the sea: this was also acceded to. Along the banks of the river, extending up to its very edge, are vast hunting grounds, invested permanently with wood or jungle, for the purpose of game preserves or hunting grounds. These Shikargurs, as they are called, have long been cherished with a fondness, and clung to with a tenacity such as Wm. Rufus manifested for the New Forest, and its pleasures. The right of clearing a slip of territory all along the river was required in addition to the free navigation of its waters, for the convenience of tracking, and this was such as to bid fair to annihilate their hunting grounds; or if any were left, it seemed likely that the wood which constituted them would speedily find its way into the furnaces of our steamers. This was a hard enough exaction, and one more difficult than any of the preceding to be complied with,—involving, as it did, the loss of the sports conceived essential to regal existence, and forming the last degrading badge of utter humiliation and subjection. Meanwhile, charges were preferred, for treasonable correspondence maintained with our enemies. It is not to be forgotten that it is not yet five years since the representative of the British Government was suing, in the humblest and most submissive guise at the court of these same browbeaten chiefs, for leave to make arrangements for navigating steamers on the river which we have now so unscrupulously made our own! The Ameers having become obstinate in refusing to comply with the last of our exactions beyond the limits of the treaty which they had agreed to, Sir C. Napier proceeded to descend the left bank of the river from his previous encampment towards Hydrabad. The chiefs had said that we might force them into our measures, but they would never permit it to appear that they had spontaneously been parties to their own degradation. As the troops advanced they appear to have thought better of it: Major Outram, since returned to Bombay, was at Hydrabad acting as Envoy, and on the 12th Feb. the Ameers of both Lower and Upper Scinde subscribed the treaty, in hopes of obtaining a modification of certain exactions insupportably heavy to the Beloochees generally. They considered that with their old resident they were safe in asking whatever was reasonable. It was explained to them that it was with the General, not the Envoy, that the final decision lay in reference to their fate; that his powers were limited, and he must be responsible to his superior. Of course, to rude untutored Scindians—who, until within these few months, had seen the word of Major Outram made law in every thing from Quettah to Kurrachee, and who could not be made to understand the altered position in which he had been placed,—this was totally incomprehensible. They conceived, and very naturally, that we wished to make them fast, and keep ourselves free: to have them first disarm and disband their troops, and then explain our purposes when they were helpless at our feet. It was in vain that it was explained that our acting Envoy was powerless,—that he could only represent their grievances to the highest authority—hoping that justice would be done to the Khyrpoor Ameer, if any injury had been sustained by him. This was naturally replied to by the question,—What Meer Roostum had gained by entrusting himself into our hands? He had confided in us—and a mulct, heavier than ever, was his recompence. That there was no course left them but to stand on the defensive, should our army, now within twenty miles of the capital, continue to advance. They entreated Major Outram to quit the residency without delay, unless he was prepared to yield to their requests: they could not comprehend why he should refuse to pledge himself now that they had complied with all our demands. On retiring from the Durbar on the 13th, crowds of enraged Beloochees, determined apparently on some act of violence, followed the Envoy. A guard of the principal noblemen of the court, and a strong escort of their followers, alone prevented mischief. On the morning of the 14th, Major Outram was again warned off; but conceiving that the danger with which he was threatened was probably exaggerated, with a view of counselling him into the promises which they believed him authorized to give, and considering that, so long as he remained, there was still some chance left of coming to an understanding and averting conflict, he resolved to remain until actually compelled to retire—without any regard to personal risk or danger. On the morning of the 15th, matters reached a crisis: the agency compound, a rather large enclosure, surrounded by a low mud wall, and defended by a guard of 100 men of the light company of H. M.'s 22d, was invested and attacked about 9 A. M. The men reserved their fire till the enemy were close upon them, so that every shot told; their ammunition had at the beginning amounted to no more than 40 rounds of ball-cartridge; it began to run short; the Satellite steamer had been sent up the river on the 12th for supplies and reinforcements; General Napier having despatched them, sent a second note to hasten their departure; this unluckily was received before any thing was put on board,—and the commander, misapprehending the injunction to "be off without delay,—to wait for nothing," started without the objects of his errand. The steamer having thus returned without succour of any sort, it became apparent that there was no longer any object to be gained in protracting resistance, and the gallant fearful odds—80 to 1, with artillery to boot!—the little band, having quitted the residency they had for four hours so gallantly defended against such retired on the river, where the steamers Satellite, Comet and Planet, waited to receive them, and managed their movements as tranquilly, and with as much order, as if on parade. They had lost two men, which, together with ten wounded, was the whole amount of their casualties. From ninety to a hundred of the enemy were afterwards ascertained to have fallen—about four hundred having been wounded. After getting into their boats, they cut away a large platform from under the enemy's guns, and the steamers ran the gauntlet before huge masses of Beeloochees, who attended them on the banks for upwards of three miles. On the 16th, they found Sir C. Napier, about twenty miles up the river, and now in full march for Hydrabad. As it was supposed that the enemy would man the Shikargurs along the line of advance, it was resolved, to prevent this, to have the bushes and jungle set on fire. The weather was singularly still, and the operation was found incapable of being performed with requisite celerity. Some of the Scindians in our employment did us good service, without intending it, by betraying our purposes to the Ameers: this led to a change of plan which was fatal to them. At the Fullallie, nine miles from Hydrabad, we found them strongly posted across our line of march, to the extent of 22,000 men, with 15 guns. Their right flank was protected by an extensive Shikargur—their left by another of lesser magnitude, with a village adjoining. Their infantry were in front, securely placed in the dry bed of the river Fullallie, completely covered by the precipitous bank from our fire: and in the most favourable position for matchlock practice. As our troops advanced H. M.'s 22d taking the lead, a well-directed and destructive fire was poured in upon them, to which they could make no return. So soon as the brink of the river channel was sufficiently neared to expose the Beloochees to our view, the matchlock was thrown aside, and the enemy, in impetuous masses, furiously charged down upon them with sword and shield. Our men behaved with the most dauntless bravery, but the odds against them, both in numbers and in the advantage of position, were enormous, and nothing but the intrepidity of the General in leading on the charge in person could have ensured the results that ensued. Sir C. Napier, throughout the combat, seemed to bear a charmed life, and in the hottest of the fire—the special object of attention to the enemy's marksmen—he came off unharmed. Victory for three hours swayed too and fro; for this space the infantry maintained their ground, and we were unable to make good a position from which we could overlook them or drive them out. The 9th cavalry at length were able to make their way round by the back of the village to the left, and so escaped the Fullallie, and took them in flank; while the Poonah Irregular Horse, by a similar movement, forced their way through the Shikargur, and turned their position. The day was now our own, the infantry's post was stormed, and the whole army dispersed and fled. It has already been stated that the courage and good conduct of our men could not have been exceeded; and it is but fair to do justice to that of the enemy, who fought with extreme determination, and charged down upon our advancing columns with the fury of the Scotch Highlanders of old, to whom they are similarly armed. The Fullallie was filled up with heaps of slain: one thousand dead were left upon the field, including six of the first class chiefs—and 4,000 more were wounded, of whom many must afterwards have died of the injuries received. In these circumstances, Beloochee armies invariably disperse after an unsuccessful action, each chief with his followers returning to his own country till their services be again required. We entered and burned their camp in the afternoon, and captured the whole of their guns, fifteen in number. Our own casualties amounted to 256 killed and wounded, including 19 officers, of whom 5 were killed. General Napier having sent forward a message to the Ameers that unless they surrendered he would next day storm Hydrabad, Meer Roostum Khan, Meer Nusseer Khan, and Meer Wullee Mahomed of Khyrpoor; Meer Nusseer Khan, Meer Shahdad Khan, and Meer Hoosain Khan of Hydrabad,—came that same evening into our camp, and gave themselves up unconditionally as prisoners of war. The gates of the city were immediately thereafter put in our possession. On the evening of the 19th, General Napier marched past Hydrabad, and encamped beside the Residency, where they continued up to the date of our despatches (21st). The houses were found to have been totally destroyed. Three of the guns brought against them on the 15th were still in the position in which they had been placed, with the view of firing on the steamers; the other three were found to have broken down on the road. Nine more pieces of artillery were discovered within the park, so that 30 pieces of cannon were captured by us in all. Gen. Napier is at present much too weak in men to attempt to hold the country, and from the fact of H. M. 41st. previously ordered to be detained at Kurrachee, having embarked for England on the 21st and 22d, it is inferred that some temporary arrangement with the Ameers for carrying on the government is contemplated. From the views known to be entertained by the Governor-General, it is supposed that he intends seizing on and retaining the country. This will be an act beside which Lord Auckland's advance on Cabool will seem a deed of virtue; but then Scinde will pay, so nothing will be said of the guilt of its appropriation! From the aversion that Lord Ellenborough has manifested to men of the General Pollock, Major Outram, and Major Pottinger class, and his admiration for such retiring heroes as the knight of Hykulzie, a second Elphinstone would, we are entitled to assume, find especial favour in his eyes. Another happy occasion might by this means be afforded us of blowing up bazars, burning towns and villages, roasting wounded Beloochees; and so having retrieved our disasters, withdrawing from the country covered with glory, and relieved of all superfluous treasure!

Recents proceedings in Scinde will, it is hoped, furnish the conservative admirers of Lord Ellenborough with a practical illustration of the sincerity and trustworthiness of that "most masterly and statesman like paper" the Simla Proclamation of the 1st October 1842, whose careful re-perusal we strongly recommend to our readers.

The following Gazette Extraordinary was published by the Bombay Government yesterday evening:—

NOTIFICATION.

Bombay Castle, dated 27th February, 1843.

1. The Honourable the Governor in Council has the highest gratification in announcing for general information, that Major James Outram, Commissioner in Scinde, has this day arrived in Bombay, with despatches from Major General Sir Charles Napier, K. C. B., commanding the Forces in Scinde and Beloochistan, dated Hyderabad the 20th inst., announcing a most complete and signal Victory which was gained on the 17th inst. by the European and Native Troops as detailed in the margin,* under the command of that distinguished and gallant Officer, over the combined armies of the Ameers of Upper and Lower Scinde.

2. On the morning of the 15th inst. a body of 8000 men with 6 guns, under the command of Meer Shadad Khan, one of the principal Ameers, his cousin Meer Mahomed Khan, and many of the principal Chiefs, took up a position on three sides of the Residency at Hydrabad, and attempted to force an entrance into the enclosure, which was surrounded by a low wall of from 4 to 5 feet in height, and defended by Major Outram's escort, composed of 100 men, the Light Company of H. M.'s 22d Regiment, under the command of Captain Conway of that Regt. assisted by the Officers mentioned in the margin.†—After effectually keeping the enemy at bay for nearly four hours, and after almost the whole of their ammunition was expended, Major Outram and his brave associates effected their retreat in the best possible order to the Iron Steamers "Planet" and "Satellite," and ultimately formed a junction with Major General Sir Charles Napier, K. C. B. at Hala.

3. The loss sustained in this heroic defence, reflecting so much honour on the defenders, is stated in the margin,‡ whilst that of the enemy was 90 killed, and many wounded.

4. On the following day, the 16th instant, Major General Sir Charles Napier, K. C. B., marched to Muthareo, and on his arrival there, ascertained that the Ameers were in position at Meeanee, distant about ten miles, to the number of twenty-two thousand men. Being aware that any delay for reinforcements would both strengthen the confidence of the Enemy, and add to their numbers, although his own Force was not one seventh part of that of the Enemy, Sir Charles Napier resolved upon making an immediate attack, and accordingly marched towards Meeanee at 4 o'clock in the morning (the 17th)—At 8 o'clock A. M. the advanced Guard of Major General Sir C. Napier's Force discovered the Enemy's Camp, and at 9 o'clock the British Troops formed in order of battle, being composed of about Two Thousand and Eight Hundred Men, of all Arms, and Twelve pieces of Artillery. The Enemy opened a most determined and destructive fire upon the British Troops, and during the action which ensued, with the most undaunted bravery repeatedly rushed upon them sword in hand. After a most resolute and desperate contest, which lasted for upwards of three hours, the Enemy was completely defeated and put to flight with the estimated loss of about 5,000 men, 1000 of whom were left dead on the Field, together with the whole of their Artillery, ammunition and standards, a considerable quantity of stores, and some treasure.

5. The following day, Meer Roostom Khan, Meer Nusseer Khan, and Meer Wullee Mahomed of Khyrpore; Meer Nusseer Khan, Meer Shadad Khan, and Meer Hoossein Khan of Hydrabad, came into the Camp of Major General Sir C. Napier, and unconditionally gave themselves up as Prisioners of War, and the British Colors were hoisted over the City of Hydrabad on the 20th instant.

6. It belongs to the Right Honourable the Governor General of India, to eulogise, in suitable terms, the gallantry and devotion displayed by the British Troops engaged on this occasion, but the Honourable the Governor in Council cannot now refrain from stating, that Major General Sir C. Napier speaks in the highest terms of the heroism and distinguished bravery which were evinced by the Troops of all Arms, and which enabled that gallant Officer after a most desperate and hard fought battle, to add to his former high character and renown, by the achievement of one of the most decisive victories recorded in the history of India.

7. The Honourable the Governor in Council deeply laments to state, that considerable loss* has attended this brilliant victory. In particular he has to deplore the following gallant Officers, who, after having conspicuously distinguished themselves, nobly died on the field of battle:—

Major H. C. Teasdale, commanding 25th Regt. Bombay N. I.; Captain W. W. Pew, H. M. 22d Regt.; Brevet Captain and Adjutant Cookson, 9th Regt. Bengal Light Cavalry; Captain and Brevet Major W. H. Jackson, 12th Regt. Bombay N. I.; Lieut. and Brevet Captain R. N. Meade, 12th Regt. Bombay N. I.; and Lieut. E. Wood, 12th Regt. Bombay N. I.

8. Major General Sir Charles Napier, K. C. B., in particular notices the gallant conduct of the undermentioned Officers:—

Major Jas. Outram, Commissioner in Scinde.

Lieut. Colonel W. Pattle, Major P. F. Story, and Captain A. Tucker, 9th Regiment Bengal Light Cavalry.

Lieut. Col. J. L. Pennefather, Major J. H. Poole, Captain T. S. Conway, Lieutenant W. M. G. McMurdo, and Lieutenant F. P. Harding, H. M.'s 22d Regt.

Major McPherson, Aid-de-Camp.

Major A. T. Reid, commanding the 12th Regt. Bombay Native Infantry.

Lieut. R. FitzGerald, do. do., and Adjt., Scinde Irregular Horse.

Major W. Wyllie, of the 21st Regiment Bombay N. I. Assistant Adjutant General, Scinde and Beeloochistan.

Lieut. R. Phayre, 25th Regiment Bombay Native Infantry.

Captain J. Jackson, do. do.

Lieut. H. J. Pelly, Aide-de-Camp, 8th Regt. Bombay Native Infantry.

Capt. J. Jacob, Bombay Artillery, commanding Scinde Irregular Horse.

Major C. Waddington, Bombay Engineers.

Major J. Lloyd, Capt. W. T. Whitlie, and Capt. G. Hutt, Bombay Artillery.

Capt. Henderson, Madras do.

Lieutenant Boileau, Madras Sappers and Miners.

Lieut. Outlaw, do. do.

Lieutenant Brennant.

Capt. Tait, Poona Irregular Horse.

9. The Honourable the Governor in Council directs, that a Royal Salute be fired this day from the Garrison of Bombay, in honour of this Victory, and that a similar Salute be fired at all the Principal Military Stations under this Presidency on the receipt of this order.

10. Annexed are Returns of the Killed and Wounded, during this action, as furnished to this Government by Major General Sir C. Napier.

By Order of the Hon'ble the Governor in Council.

J. P. WILLOUGHBY, Secy. to Govt.

The following letter gives an account of hostilities on a smaller scale, lower down the river:—

"KURRACHEE, 21st Feb, 1843.

"On the night of Thursday the 16th February, a Moonshee stationed about 23 miles above Tatta, was brought into Tatta severely wounded in the arm and back with sword cuts. He stated that a party of two hundred Beloochees, on their way from Hydrabad to Tatta, had surprised him about 2 o'clock of the same day, robbed him of Government treasure to the amount of 500 Rupees, and after throwing all the fuel for the steamers into the river, wounded him, and told him that they would be at Tatta during the evening, and massacre every 'Feringee Kafir' that they could come across. The report was brought in between 9 and 10 o'clock, while we were preparing to retire, and we were requested to be on the alert, as it was expected they would be on us in an hour. The Conductor in charge of the commissariat at Tatta (Mr. Finlay) immediately directed the guard to turn out, when lo and behold, out of a detachment of 60 sepoys allowed by government, only nine sepoys, 2 havildars, and 1 jemedar could be mustered; the remainder having been detached on duty to Sukkur and Gharra. This was a death blow to all our hopes of holding out. The emergency of the case being so very great, Mr. Finlay instantly wrote off to Ensign Dawson of H. M. 40th Regiment, who, with three European soldiers, was at the bunder, awaiting the arrival of a steamer from Sukkur—the bunder, you must know, is about three miles from the place where the Conductor is stationed; and about two in the morning the officer and party arrived. This was a very poor addition to our force, but we were so helpless that we could not help snatching at every little thing. The servants were next all armed with swords and sticks as they could be procured; and after posting the necessary sentries around the camp, and despatching a cossid to Kurrachee requesting assistance, the families retired to rest. The Beloochees, however, did not make their appearance that night. Before I proceed any further, I think it best to let you know our actual strength, when you will be better able to imagine the consternation these rumours put us in, and the awful predicament we were placed in. Our party was as follows—Mr. and Mrs. Finlay, Mr. and Mrs. Lampey, with a child two months old, Mrs Greenway and mother-in-law (stationed at Tatta), Mrs. Bean and two children, and Mr. and Mrs Maher, proceeding to Sukkur, Ensign Dawson and three Europeans, and the Native guard above alluded to together with 8 or 10 servants completed our strength. The carpenter of the Nimrod, by the bye, who was left at Tatta, to repair a boat belonging to her, we supplied with a musket and a pouch, and transformed him into a soldier. The next day (Friday) word was brought in that the Beloochees, to the number of 500, were then in Tatta, that they were momentarily expecting an order from the Ameers to attack us, and that they would positively do so that night. We instantly set to work and erected a battery of all the available stores, both Government and private, and after digging a trench all round, two feet deep and four wide, we pitched a rowtee in the centre, and both males and females all huddled together prepared to bivouack there for the night. At five in the evening a Naick and three Sepoys, on special duty from Kurrachee, came in and reported that the town of Tatta was crowded with Beloochees armed to the teeth, and that they would be on us that very night. This was another addition to our party, but they had left their muskets behind them. Ensign Dawson, however, had 7 extra muskets and pouches with 40 rounds of ammunition in each, which we distributed to them half an hour after their arrival. The son of Conductor Hicks, a little boy seven or eight years old, was brought in on the back of a dooly walla. He is a very intelligent little lad, and informed us that his father, who was proceeding in charge of ordnance stores to Sukkur, was attacked by a host of Beloochees, a few miles this side of Hydrabad, a laboratory man and his wife accompanying him killed, and the boats containing Government stores taken to Hydrabad. A few of the party, after being stripped to their skin, contrived to make their escape, among whom was Conductor Hicks and his child. While following the course of the river on their way back to Tatta, to their surprise they found that they had been followed by a party of Beloochees, when Mr. Hicks and three Sepoys ran into the jungle to conceal themselves. His son, with two or three Natives, the Beloochees overtook; and forcing the child from them, and holding the poor little fellow in the air in one arm, with a drawn sword in the other, they would have cut him down for being a little feringee, had not the men begged and prayed of them to spare him. A great many words having been exchanged on both sides, our men with the child were allowed to pass unmolested, and the Beloochees retraced their steps to the boats as it was supposed; but as neither Mr. Hicks nor the sepoys have yet made their appearance, there is every fear that they were traced by the Beloochees and murdered. Four sowars, who were on their way to Hydrabad, returned at the same time very nearly, and informed us that they found it impossible to proceed on their way. Here, then, was another opportune addition to our party. Information was brought in at the same time that 400 Beloochees had marched on Garabaree, at the mouth of the river, for the purpose of plundering the Government stores lying there, and murdering the 'feringees' there stationed. Friday night, however, passed over as the former had done, leaving us in excruciating suspense of momentary expectation of being attacked, without the means of defending ourselves. About nine o'clock on Saturday morning, while a few were trying to make the best of a breakfast they could get, word was brought that the Beloochees had left the town of Tatta, and were on their way to our camp. All our supplies were stopped, and we could not get the most trifling thing in the world, even paying for it with our lives. A Banyan who was bringing in a little flour and ghee, was caught and severely beaten.

"About an hour after, sure enough, the Beloochees were coming in earnest. They formed into three parties, about 50 or 60 in each, and took three different routes to surround our camp—some mounted and others on foot, but all armed. One party proceeded to the bunder and threatened every man with death if a boat was permitted us to make our way down the river. While in this state, a retreat to Kurrachee was proposed, which was eagerly acceded to, as it was too certain that on their attacking us, had we fired a shot and wounded or killed one of their men, not one of us would have lived to tell the tale. Spies, in the meantime, were watching every motion of ours, and twenty minutes had not elapsed after our abandoning the place, and everything we were possessed of in the world, before our tents and houses were crowded with seven hundred Beloochees!

"But more of our retreat by and bye. The worst is to come yet. We have, however, all arrived safe with the exception of two soldiers and two native servants. I shall continue this to-morrow, and forward it by post. I can hardly write, so you must excuse me."

ONE OF THE UNFORTUNATES."

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—May I request the favour of your giving a small room in your most valuable and popular Journal for the general information of the following translation of the Bombay Pregociro da Liberdade dated Saturday, the 18th February, 1843.

I remain, Sir,
Your most obedient Servant,
A CATHOLIC.

For the information of the beguilers, and of the curious who, without the least interest, or precision, have always importunated us, questioning about the negociation pendent between the Court of Portugal and of Rome we have copied an article we found in the Journal received in the last steamer which reached Suez which was extracted from Portafolio Maltese, a Gazette written in Italian which can be easily understood by our friends the Propagators, and if they choose without expense read therein the news arrived from Portugal, and not state hereafter that it has been forged in our office.

Portogallo.—Si annuzia da Lisbona che le negoziazioni fra la Corte del Portogallo e quella di Roma sono felicemente ultimate. A tenor delle recevutte instruzione Monsignor Cappacini ha accettato la lettera di sommissione del patriarca di Lisbona, ed ha riconosciuto la nomina di quattro Arcivescovi i Vescovi. I quattro che rimangono a nominarsi duo saranno nominati dalla regina; e piu due altri sara prima di tutto consultata sua santita. Le Autorita Pontificie e di Portogallo si concerteranno poi sopra alcuni punti meno importanti da regolarsi, e il concordata non tardora motto ad essere sotto eritto.

(Il Portafolio Maltese Lunodi 9 Gennaj, 1843. Numero 243.

☞ Announced in Lisbon. The negociations between the Court of Portugal and of Rome have been happily ultimated. Mons Cappacini in conformity with the Instructions received accepted the letter of submission of the Patriarch of Lisbon and acknowledged the nomination of four Arch-Bishops and Bishops. The remaining four to be nominated, two will be by her Majesty. Concerning the other two it will be first consulted with his Holiness. The Pontifical authority and that of the Portuguese regarding the lesser points respecting regulation and agreement will not be delayed in arranging and subscribing to it.

RELIGIOUS.

THE SPIRIT OF A MISSIONARY.—We (Watchman) have been not a little struck by the following passage in a recently published letter from the Bishop of Calcutta. It breathes a devotedness to the cause of Christ among the perishing heathen, which cannot but excite admiration, and, we trust, imitation also:—"So that I have renounced the prospect of visiting you once more in England before I die. No; unless His Grace the Archbishop should lay his orders upon me, India is my scene of duty, delight, and usefulness. The excitement of a short visit would overset me at my time of life; if I can but 'finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the Gospel of the grace of God,' I shall have enough. Already have I to bless God for nine years and ten months' health in my residence in this land of disease and death. The climate of England would, most probably, not suit me; the joy of my family would break my heart; the voyage to and fro would exhaust my remains of strength. I must not therefore, tempt God, but be content with the intercourse of letters and the communion of the saints in prayer and intercession. Three years ago, I was set upon going home; but my feelings have been subdued by a sense of duty gradually since. Where should a Bishop die, but in his diocese?"—Pat.

THE CHARACTER OF THE DEGENERACY OF THE EARLY CHURCH.—The outward show of a uniform and external organization gradually superseded that internal and spiritual unity, which is the very essence of the religion of God. Men forsook the precious perfume of faith, and prostrated themselves before the empty vessel which had contained it. With the decay of faith as a cementing principle, some other was sought for; and the members of the Church thus came to be bound together by means of bishops, archbishops, popes, mitres, ceremonies, and canons. The living Church, having gradually retired into the secluded sanctuary of some solitary souls, its place was taken by an external Church, which was thereupon declared to be of Divine institution. Salvation no longer streaming from the now hidden word, it was held to be transmitted through the medium of humanly-invented forms, and that none should possess it, unless received by that conveyance (as both Puseyites and Papists hold). No man, it was said, can by his own faith attain to everlasting life. Christ communicated the anointing of the Holy Ghost to the apostles, the apostles to the bishops, and the Holy Ghost dwells in that order alone! In primitive times, whoever had the Spirit of Jesus Christ was a member of the Church; but now the inversion of terms took place, and it was pretended that he alone who was a member of the Church received the Spirit of Jesus Christ!—D'Aubigne's, Ref., Scott's Ed. p. 25.

SCRIPTURAL EDUCATION.—A long debate has taken place in the Town Council in Liverpool on the following motion made with the view of the Corporation retracing their steps in this important matter. The motion was made by Mr. Lawrence, in the following terms:—"That it be referred to the Committee to consider whether, after establishing in the Corporation Schools a system of religious instruction, based on the principles of the Church of England, and, in all respects, in strict accordance with her tenets, such a modification cannot be made in the existing rules and regulations as would render the schools more available for the classes of the poor, professing different religious opinions, by allowing their children the secular instruction of the schools, the parents giving an assurance to the Committee that their religious duties shall not be neglected." Upon a division, it was negatived by 39 to 20. "Although," says the Liverpool Times, "the resolution of Mr. G. H. Lawrence, in favour of admitting the children of Roman Catholic parents to the advantages of a good secular education in the Corporation Schools, has been lost by a large majority, yet it has had the excellent effect of giving the leading Conservative members of that assembly an opportunity of entering their protest against the bigotry and exclusiveness of the present system. Amongst those who have thus protested are the Mayor (Mr. Robertson Gladstone, brother of Mr. W. E. Gladstone), Mr. G. H. Lawrence, the most intimate of Lord Sandon's friends and supporters, together with Mr. Ambrose Lace, Mr. Henry Lawrence, and Mr Alderman Turner, three gentlemen of excellent judgment and moderate opinions. These all voted in favour of Mr. Lawrence's motion; and, in addition to them, Mr. Bushell spoke strongly in favour of educating the Roman Catholic children, though he objected to the plan proposed by Mr. Lawrence; and Mr. Alderman Nicol avowed that he would rather see the schools closed than continued on the present plan. As Mr. John Smith and Mr. Robinson had previously avowed a similar opinion, this makes nine of the Conservative members of the Council who have entered their protest against the present system. All that is necessary to bring over many more converts, is a little more discussion"—Pat.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN FRANCE.—A chapel for Lutheran service has been opened at Nantes; it was closed by the Prefect, in virtue of the law against associations, passed in the reign of His Majesty Louis Phillippe. The Lutherans applied to the Tribunal, and the Tribunal, has sanctioned the law of the Prefect. M. Cuvier and three other pastors protest. The Tribunal, ruled, that, as the Catholic religion needed the approbation of the State to open a place of worship, the Protestants needed it. The pastors plead, that, if the Catholic religion needs this, and submits to this, it is through a Concordat with the Pope; whilst they, the Protestants, should enjoy the benefit of the Article of the Charter unshackled, which grants freedom of worship. The trial has created some sensation.—Ibid.

THE REV. J. KETLY, formerly Unitarian Minister in this town, has obtained the Theological prize this year at Cambridge.—Ipswich Express.

ROME.—A letter dated Rome, 6th inst., published in the Cologne Gazette, states that the news of

MISCELLANEOUS.

LEADERSHIP OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS.—A report has been current of a ministerial difference between Lord Stanley and a leading member of the Cabinet, which might lead to His Lordship's retirement from the Colonial-office. It is most probable, however, that this rumour originated in certain cabals respecting a substitute for the Duke of Wellington in the leadership of the House of Lords. His Grace objects to hold that office in conjunction with the Horse Guards, for "constitutional" reasons; nor is the Duke's health able to endure the double labour. In consequence of this meditated vacancy, two Conservative factions are in a state of active fermentation; one Tory section asserting the claims of Lord Aberdeen to the Leadership of the Upper House; the other cabal urging the superior merit and power of Lord Stanley (with a peerage, of course) for that important Ministerial station.—London Correspondent of Scotsman.

LEADER OF THE UPPER HOUSE.—We are enabled to state that the Duke of Wellington will, in the approaching session of Parliament, as in the last, act as the leader of the Upper House, and that no intention exists, or has ever existed, of anticipating Lord Stanley's elevation to the Peerage by the ordinary process of succession.—Times.

SIR CHARLES BAGOT.—Letters report that Sir Charles Bagot's illness had assumed the most serious character. His complaint is said to be an affection of the lungs, produced by excited action of the heart, and causing great difficulty of breathing, with an almost total want of natural sleep. It was supposed that he had tendered his resignation by this mail, and believed that he would not live to receive Lord Stanley's answer.—Toronto Herald, Nov. 24.

THE REV. WILLIAM BAILEY, L. L. D., who, it will be remembered, stands charged with forging a promissory-note for 2,875*l.*, purporting to be drawn by Robert Smith, deceased, on Miss Anne Bailey (sister of the prisoner), has been committed for trial. —Pat.

ABOLITION OF THE SLAVE-TRADE IN TUNIS. —The Governments of Spain and Portugal ratified a thousand times Treaties with Great Britain for the abolition of the slave-trade, and a thousand times they, the Christians of Spain and Portugal, broke those Treaties. The Bey of Tunis ratified no such Treaties with Great Britain, but promised Great Britain and her representative at his Court, Sir Thomas Reade, to abolish the slave-trade in his territory; and the Bey has kept his promise. Among other evident proofs, we cite one which very recently took place, from a letter of Mr. Lusco, at Sfax, dated 25th November, 1842. In this letter, Mr. Lusco says:—"A caravan of many slaves arrived on the frontiers of the kingdom of Tunis a few days ago, when immediately the shiekhs of those districts presented themselves to the chiefs of the caravan, and, in the name of the Bey, informed them, that, as soon as they passed the frontiers with the slaves upon the territories of the Bey, those slaves were free, and the masters had no more control or right over them. The chiefs of the caravan, seeing that the Bey's orders were precise and absolute, retired forthwith." It is a great pity that the ordinances of many Christian Princes and Governments are not equally well enforced!—Malta Times, Dec. 5.

A TORY SUPPORTER OF SIR R. PEEL.—A gentleman residing not seven miles from Coupar Angus, who has all his life long been a warm friend and supporter of Sir Robert Peel and his Tory measures, finding his pockets and those of his constituents (being factor for a number of Tory landlords), not a little affected by the operations of the Tariff, has allowed his former love suddenly to change into determined hatred; and, to such a length has he carried his resentment, that, not content with removing a full length portrait of Sir Robert Peel that adorned his dining-room, and consigning it to the lumber-room, has also had his gardener employed for some time back in uprooting and casting out every plant and shrub from the garden bearing the name of Peel—nay, even those beautiful dahlias and other sweet flowers and shrubs whose gentleness and delicacy marked them out to be fit objects to be named after Lady Peel—have all been destroyed by stern command, that not a vestige may remain of the hated name.—Dundee Warder.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF TRIPOLI.—The public have, from time to time, heard not a little respecting a certain individual, calling himself the Archbishop of Tripoli, whose false pretensions were exposed through the preserving exertions of the Rev. J. Allport, of Birmingham. If any doubt existed as to the real character of this person, he is now placed in a position which must deprive him of the benefit of it. Dr. Wiseman, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Melipotamus, has addressed a letter to the Rev. Mr. Cunningham, of Leamington, in which he designates the soi-disant Archbishop as "the unhappy man who has been going about the country levying contributions on the credulous;" adding, "he is none of ours; nor could we consent ever to admit him amongst us, save as a humble penitent." "He is in open rebellion against his own Patriach, and against the Pope," &c. &c. Dr. Wiseman's Letter is published in the Leamington Courier. The Christian public should reimburse Mr Allport his expenses in running this fox to earth.—Bath Herald.

THE TOILS OF A NEWSPAPER.—Newspaper literature (says Captain Marryat) is a link in the great chain of miracles which proves the greatness of England, and support should be given to newspapers. The Editors of these Papers must have a most onerous task. It is not the writing of the leading article itself, but the obligation to write that article every week, whether inclined or not, in sickness or in health, in affliction, distress of mind, winter and summer, year after year, tied down to one task, remaining in one spot. It is something like the walking a thousand miles in a thousand hours. I have a fellow-feeling for them; for I know how a periodical will wear down one's existence. In itself, it appears nothing,—the labour is not manifest; nor is it the labour—it is the continual attention which requires. Your life becomes as it were the publication. One week is no sooner corrected and printed, than on comes the other. It is the stone of Sisyphus—an endless repetition of toil, and constant weight upon the mind—a continued wearing upon the intellect and spirits, demanding all the exertions of your faculties, at the same time that you are compelled to do the severest drudgery. To write for a Paper is very well, but to edit one is to condemn yourself to slavery.—Pat.

THE AUSTRALASIAN COLONIES.—A subject of the utmost moment for the Australasian colonies (including New Zealand) called for Lord Stanley's attention when he entered Downing-street. He had to determine what use should be made of the power of colonisation which had been recently found to be at the disposal of the State through a particular mode of dealing with colonial waste lands. The very principle of the new plan was the creation of a fund for emigration, through the sale of waste lands, with a pledge to employ the purchase-money in adding to the value of the lands by means of emigration. Well, Lord Stanley adopted the method of selling the land instead of giving it a way, but appropriated half the purchase-money to the ordinary purposes of Government. In other words, while professing, and no doubt intending, to promote emigration by means of using a new power, he taxed that power to the amount of 50 per cent. His Colonial Lands Law is so self-contradictory as to create an enormous impediment to its own successful action—it blows hot and cold with the same breath. This sort of law-making never added to any man's reputation. It is a remarkable fact, that emigration to the Australasian colonies had reached its maximum during the year previous to Lord John Russell's retirement from the Colonial-office, and that it has now almost entirely ceased. This change is attributable partly to the stagnation of enterprise both at home and in the colonies, arising from causes over which the Colonial-office had no control; but it has also been occasioned in part by Governor Gawler's reckless extravagance in South Australia, and by the land-jobbing of the Government in New South Wales and New Zealand, where the influence of the highest authority has been prostituted to the end of exciting an artificial competition at the Government sales of land, and by the total inaction of the New Zealand Company, which is said to have abandoned its projects of colonization in consequence of finding itself unable to contend against the jealous ill-will of Governor Hobson and the Colonial-Office. Whatever may have been Lord Stanley's share in these causes, the effect is indisputable. Emigration to the Southern Colonies takes place no longer, and there are not wanting indications of a tendency in Lord Stanley's mind to approve of the policy of Downing-street and the local governments, to which that effect is in a great measure due. We may be mistaken; the public, which is beginning to draw comparisons between Lord John Russell and Lord Stanley, far from flattering to the latter, may be in error; but time will soon show, and let it be remembered that we speak only of appearances.—Colonial Gazette.

THE FRENCH IN THE PACIFIC.—In our last Thursday's Number, our readers will have observed the account given, in an official Report from Admiral Dupetit-Thours, of his having taken possession of the Marquesas or Mendoza Islands, in the name of the King of the French. We had no room for any observations upon the transaction; but it is one which gives rise to many grave reflections.

It is not, by any means, the first attempt of the French to obtain, by not the most honourable methods, a political ascendancy in the South Pacific, not for the purposes of colonization or legitimate commerce, so much as of Romish propagandism. Our readers will recollect the notorious doings of Capt. La Place at Tahiti and the Sandwich Islands, a few years back. The present "impudent act," as the Times styles it, may be treated as politically unimportant. The ridiculous pretensions on the part of the French Admiral can scarcely be maintained; but they may, nevertheless, be productive of future mischief.

The Marquesas are a cluster of five islands, lying between lat. 8 deg. 30 min. and 10 deg. 30 min. south, and long. 138 deg. 45 min. and 140 deg. 30 min. west, at the entrance of the great Polynesian labyrinth; and we find a French Journal, the Presse, speculating upon the importance of this advantageous position, in case the long projected scheme of cutting a ship canal through the Isthmus of Panama shall be carried into effect, the possibility of which is pronounced to be no longer problematical. Another idea started by the Paris Journals is, that the French Government intend to make the Marquesas a penal colony! The Constitutionel deprecates transporting political offenders to those islands, but would approve of sending convicts thither; and the Univers thinks, that making them a penal colony would not prevent the islands being turned to good account politically and commercially; while the Presse more rationally observes, that it is not by what is most impure and corrupted that a nation should make itself known to those whom it intends to civilise; that it would not be the way to make the name of France respected, to send murders and convicts there as apostles! All these speculations may turn out, however, to be somewhat premature. The real object of the occupation would seem to be, what we have already intimated,—the establishing a Romish Missionary Station there for the conversion of the Polynesian Christians to Popery, and the ruin, it is fondly hoped, of the English Protestant Missions. The following extract from a French Journal will show what is in contemplation:—

"A most interesting ceremony took place on the 8th instant, at St. Malo. The Archbishop of Chalcedon and Bishop of the Marquesas Islands, surrounded by a number of clergymen, walked in procession to the ship, the Mary Joseph, which is about to sail for that destination. This vessel takes out the Bishop and twelve missionaries, whose object is to convert the inhabitants of the Sandwich Islands. The Mary Joseph takes out likewise twelve nuns of the religious establishments at Peru, and operatives of the Society of St Joseph, who have devoted themselves to teach the inhabitants several branches of manufactures. The Mary Joseph hoisted three flags—one a red cross, similar to the Templars, with the ciphers 'M. J.;' another flag, with the same ciphers, intermixed with flowers; and a third with the Pontifical tiara."

It may be in the recollection of our readers, that Capt. Laplace, in his Narrative of a Voyage round the World, speaks in terms of rapture of the Papal Vicar-Apostolic of Polynesia, whom he met at Teneriffe, and he predicts, that "he will very soon bring under civilization the barbarous tribes over whom the English Missionaries have not been able to obtain any influence.—Pat.

SPAIN.—The Regent set off for Valencia on the 22nd. General Van Halen had not left Barcelona at the same date. He had published a proclamation against such members of the revolutionary Junta, who had betrayed their duty as officers or as Government employés, to join the insurrection, forbidding any to harbour them under pain of death. The Regent, on going away, sent two dollars to each soldier in hospital, The municipality in vain endeavoured to soften the Regent on the subject of the contribution. He refused to listen to them, but gave eight days more to collect it.

The Regent has shown great mildness towards the insurgents, and no use whatever has been made of the state of seige. None but military have been executed; and this might have been done without martial law. Every civilian almost has been set at liberty. Accordingly, instead of the Reign of Terror which the French Journals depict as hanging over Barcelona, it is, on the contrary, the reign of licence and defiance. The Press thunders against the Government as freely as in Paris or Madrid; and the Moderados intrigue and use full liberty to turn the Municipal Elections against the Government. One of their agents, a Monsieur Gibert, has been arrested.—Ibid.

TOWN MAJOR'S OFFICE,
Fort William, 3d March, 1843.

The following Memorandum is published for general information, and all persons not belonging to the Garrison, who have obtained Passes for the different Gates, and Sorties, are requested to return them to the Town Major's Office, such Passes being from this date cancelled.

GEORGE WARREN, Lt.-Col.,
Town Major.

"MEMORANDUM."

The indulgence of Passes for the different Gateways and Sorties of the Garrison having been greatly abused, and instances having been brought to notice of individuals having obtained "egress" and "ingress" by feigned Passes, rendering it thereby a matter of difficulty to the different Sentries in what manner to enforce their orders, and subjecting them also to punishment, for neglect of duty, it is therefore notified, that from this date all former Passes are cancelled, and for the future the privilege of all Gates will only be granted to "His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief."
"Members of the Supreme Council."
"The Town Major."
"Officer commanding Troops in Garrison."
"Surgeon of the Regiment in the Garrison."—
(Entrance by the Hospital Sortie only.)

These names pasted on a board will be fixed up in the Guard Rooms at the different Gateways, and further precautions adopted, to prevent other persons entering, or going out, by any other than the proper Gates and Sorties of the Garrison.

By order,
GEORGE WARREN, Lt.-Col.,
Town Major.

BY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Head Quarters, Camp Loodianah, 19th January, 1843.

The appointment by Major T. Skinner, commanding the escort proceeding with a mission to Lahore, of troop Sergeant Major R. Pearson, of Her Majesty's 16th Lancers, to act as Sergeant Major to the party, from the 2d instant, is confirmed.

The following orders are confirmed as temporary arrangements:

The Presidency Division Orders of the 31st ultimo, appointing Surgeon J. Row, of the 7th Battalion of Artillery at Dum-Dum, to officiate as Superintending Surgeon at Barrackpore in the room of Superintending Surgeon W. Findon permitted to retire from the service, from the 1st of January, and Surgeon A. Wood, recently returned from furlough, to afford medical aid of the 7th Battalion of Artillery at Dum-Dum, during the period Surgeon Row may continue to officiate as Superintending Surgeon.

The order issued on the 5th instant, by Major J. A. Thompson, commanding European Artillery drafts and Infantry recruits, appointing Private A. D. Ramsay, Infantry recruit, to act as Apothecary and Steward to the Hospital of the detachment, in the room of Assistant Steward W. H. Crawford placed in arrest.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to make the following appointment:

66th Regt. of N. I.—Lieut. John MacDonald to be Adjutant, vice Chowne promoted.

Gunner Bernard Meehan, late of the 4th Company 2d Battalion of Artillery, who was by General Orders of the 20th of October 1842 invalided, and directed to be sent to Europe, having been examined, and found fit for active service, is reposted to his former Company.

Head Quarters, Camp Loodianah, 20th January, 1843.

The Cawnpore Division Order of the 6th ultimo, appointing Gunner Adam Lunn, of the 1st Troop 3rd Brigade of horse Artillery to act as a farrier to the horses of Her Majesty's 9th Lancers and the Cavalry depot, is, with the sanction of Government, confirmed.

The leave of absence granted to Captain C. H. Thomas, of the 11th Regt. of N. I., in General Orders of the 18th of Oct. last, to enable him to join, is to be calculated from the 19th of December 1841, instead of the date therein specified.

The leave of absence, for three months, to visit Bombay, preparatory to applying for furlough to Europe, on medical certificate, which was granted to Lieut. J. C. Haughton, of the 54th Regt. of N. I., in General Orders of the 7th instant, is commuted to leave to visit Calcutta, for the same period, and on the same account.

The undermentioned officers have leave of absence:

4th Regt. L. C.—Captain H. Clayton, from 15th February to 15th July, to visit the hills north of Deyrah, on private affairs.

2d European Regt.—Ensign W. Graham, from 10th January to 1st March, to proceed to Meerut, on medical certificate.

17th Regt. N. I.—Capt. F. W. Burroughs, from 3d October 1812 to 3d February, to proceed on the river towards the Presidency, preparatory to applying for furlough to Europe, on medical certificate.

This cancels the leave granted in General Orders of the 29th Sept. last.

47th Regt. N. I.—Capt. C. Boulton, from 1st December 1842 to—, in extension, to remain at the Presidency, till the sailing of the vessel on which he has taken his passage to Europe.

55th Regiment N. I.—Captain W. Carnegy, from 2d February to 15th April, to proceed to the Presidency, preparatory to applying for furlough to Europe, on private affairs.

74th Regiment Native Infantry.—Surgeon A. McK. Clark, from 20th January to 1st July, to remain at Loodianah.

At a General Court Martial held in Fort William, on Friday the 30th day of Dec. 1842, Assistant Surgeon Henry Nicholas Nugent, of the Bengal medical establishment, placed in arrest by order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, was arraigned on the following charge:—

Charge.—"For unbecoming conduct, and wilful evasion of his duty, in the following instances:

"1st. In not having proceeded on the transport ship Victoria to the medical duties of which he had been appointed, when that vessel sailed from Calcutta for China, on the 18th of March 1842.

"2d. In having neglected to report to the proper authorities the circumstances of his not having proceeded on the said ship: his unauthorized presence at Calcutta having been accidentally discovered, on or about the 3d of April 1842.

"3d. In having disembarked at Singapore, on the 9th of June 1842, from the transport ship Shah Allum, in which he had proceeded from Calcutta under positive orders to join the transport Victoria, on the first favourable opportunity.

"4th. In not having proceeded on Board the said transport Shaw Allum, from Singapore to China, with a view to his joining the transport Victoria; and in having returned from Singapore to Calcutta, on the 9th of July 1842."

Finding.—"The Court, upon the evidence before it, finds the prisoner Henry Nicholas Nugent, of the Bengal medical establishment of the charge exhibited against him.

"Upon the 1st instance, not guilty, and acquits him of the same.

"Upon the 2d instance, guilty.
"Upon the 3d instance, guilty.
"Upon the 4th instance, guilty.

"The Court further finds, that the conduct of which it has found the prisoner guilty, upon the 3d and 4th instances, is unbecoming, and a wilful evasion of his duty; but in the 2d instance that it amounts only to unbecoming neglect of duty.

Sentence.—"The Court sentences the prisoner Assistant Surgeon Henry Nicholas Nugent, of the Bengal medical establishment, to be suspended from rank and pay and allowances for six months."

Confirmed.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

EUROPEAN AND ORIENTAL AGENCY.

MR. PARKE PITTAR

HAVING arranged the formation of an Agency, the particular object of which will be the transaction of affairs, connected with this country and Europe, begs to offer his services to the community of India, in any way they can be rendered available.

A peculiar and important feature in the Agency now established, will consist in the annual return of Mr. P. Pittar to India. Taking advantage of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's Steam Vessels, he purposes re-visiting Calcutta about the latter end of every October, and returning to Europe about the middle of the following February, thus affording to persons entrusting the management of their affairs to his care, the opportunity of a personal conference and explanation of their views and intentions,—an advantage in the transaction of affairs of a complicated, or family nature, the greatness of which need not be commented upon.

A long residence in India, combined with an intimate knowledge of almost every description of manufactured article, and its various manufacturers, rendering him peculiarly fitted for the office of Agent to persons procuring their supplies or other articles, such as Table Equipages, Philosophical and Optical Instruments, Books, Maps Sporting Apparatus, Musical Instruments, Military Equipments, Wines, &c. &c. direct from Europe, he offers them his services with every confidence that his selections will give the most perfect satisfaction, whether as regarding quality, cheapness, or adaptation to the climate; but in the execution of these commissions, a previous remittance for their full amount, or reference for payment, will invariably be required.

Every article purchased through this Agency will be most minutely examined previous to its being packed and the same care under every circumstances, taken as if persons were themselves individually present and superintending. Packages of a large size will, as usual, be shipped by post-vessels to their destined port; but those of smaller dimensions, will, (unless otherwise instructed,) be sent through the Peninsular and Oriental Company's Office, Overland: thus enabling persons in most instances to receive their orders fully executed within four months from the date of the transmission of their instructions.

In transactions of a private and confidential nature a fair remuneration, according to circumstances, will be expected; in those of the ordinary nature of Agency Business, the Commission will be regulated by the customary rates; and for the selection, purchase and shipment of goods, a Commission of 5 per cent. on the gross amount will be charged.

Letters to the address of MR. PARKE PITTAR, EUROPEAN AND ORIENTAL AGENCY OFFICE, LONDON, will meet with the most prompt attention.

Reference in Calcutta, R. J. Lattey, Esq. of the firm of Messrs. Lattey, Brothers and Co.

MEMORIALS OF AFFGHANISTAN.

BY J. H. STOCQUELER.

ON the 15th of April, 1843, will be published, in one volume, the whole of the dispatches, narratives, state papers, &c. connected with the expedition to, and occupation of, Affghanistan, between the 1st of October, 1838, and the 1st October, 1842. These documents, arranged in chronological order, will be connected by a brief and succinct narrative of the operations in Affghanistan and Scinde, commencing with the assembly of the Army of the Indus at Ferozepore, and terminating with the evacuation of the former state after the restoration of the prisoners.

The object of this work is to present, at one view, the whole of the occurrences which have distinguished a most eventful period of British Indian History, and thus to facilitate the references of the student, the politician, and the soldier.

The work will be illustrated with sketches of remarkable places, striking incidents, portraits, costumes, &c. &c.

PRICE 20 RUPEES.

SCINDE.—We received the proclamation issued by Lord Ellenborough on hearing of the battle of Hydrabad, just in time to insert it in our last issue; but were unable to offer any remarks upon it. It appears evident from the tenor of this document that His Lordship intends to keep the country. "Victory has placed at the disposal of the British Government"—not as formerly at the disposal of the Governor General—"the country on both banks of the Indus from Sukker to the sea. The power, which victory has thus given, will be used in the manner most conducive to the prosperity of the people of Scinde, so long misgoverned;" and this can be accomplished only by giving them a better system of Government. His Lordship also intends that the crime of treachery in Princes shall be punished in such a manner as may deter all from its commission. If the Princes are to be made an example of, this cannot be effected by restoring to them the Government of their country. It appears evident, therefore, that the territories thus placed at our disposal, will be made an integral part of the British dominions; and there are few who will not rejoice at an arrangement by which the interests of humanity will be so effectually promoted. No princes in India ever fell from power amidst fewer regrets than the Ameers of Scinde. The worst managed district under the British administration is better governed than the country of Scinde has been under their rule. No princes have made so selfish a use of their authority, or manifested so entire a disregard of the interests of their subjects. Under no dynasty have the people pined away, or the country itself become so desolate as under the Talpooras. Every benevolent mind will rejoice to find that the royal hunting grounds are to be converted into smiling fields and happy villages; that the navigation of the Indus will now be disturbed by no hostility, and that this silent stream, which presents so gloomy a contrast to the Ganges, crowded with vessels of every description, will in a few years be animated with a busy traffic. Bombay will find a new and profitable outlet for its redundant capital and be enabled to apply it to the revival and extension of commerce in this neglected region.

The treachery of the Ameers, who had signed the treaty with the British representative on the 14th, and the next day led on their troops to an assault on his residence appears to afford a sufficient justification of the course which has been pursued. No option was left to the British authorities after such an act of perfidy but to advance on the capital, or to retreat at the risk of being exterminated. The terms of the treaty dictated by the Governor General, may have been unpalatable,—though there is at present no evidence that under all the circumstances of the case they were unjust—but after they had been acceded to, they became binding even on the semi-barbarous Ameers; and the attack on Major Outram was an act which demanded the most condign punishment. The Ameers are not indifferent to the guilt and mischief of bad faith in their own cases, for they made it a plea for disarming the officers sent on the Mission to them in 1809, that an attempt had been made by two vakeels from Jeypore to assassinate one of the Ameers at a public levee. That baseness they have now perpetrated of their own accord by their cowardly attack on the Residency, while Major Outram, reposing on the faith of a treaty, was guarded only by a hundred men. The casus belli appears therefore to be quite as clear as that which led to the dethronement of the Peshwa, after his treacherous assault on Mr. Elphinstone.

The despatch of General Napier is a vigorous description of a vigorous action. It is simple, clear, and business like, and will lose but little by comparison even with those well known dispatches of Sir Robert Sale, which in the opinion of our home journalists have given him so enviable a place among the literary characters of the day.

There is one part of the despatch of the General upon which all our contemporaries have offered their comments, and which it is to be hoped will command the attention of the Court of Directors. Sir Charles Napier laments the great paucity of European officers with the Native Regiments, and states that on two or three occasions the sepoys recoiled under the ferocious assaults of the Belochees when their own officers had fallen; and again rushed on their foes, when other European officers stepped forwards to lead them on. It has been justly remarked that the sepoys in this engagement were not superior in courage to the enemy opposed to them; and that their success was owing partly to their superior discipline, but more especially to the confidence which the presence of their European officers inspired. Had those officers been cut off to such an extent as to leave their men without a head, it is possible that even the military dispositions and the daring courage of Sir Charles might have been unavailing. If he had experienced a repulse, it is difficult to calculate the consequence of the disaster in the present inflammable state of some of our provinces. Independently of the politieal result of such a disaster, it would have entailed an expense on Government ten fold greater than that which is saved by leaving their army under officered. The remarks of Sir Charles Napier, written from the field of battle, and with the danger of this miserable policy yet present to his eye, ought to carry weight with the Home Authorities. If any thing is wanting to give value to his representations, it may be found in the fact that it comes from a Queen's officer, and is free from the remotest suspicion of interestedness.

DWARKENATH TAGORE AND THE HURKARU.—Our Contemporary appears, from an article which appeared on Friday last, to be somewhat vexed that we should have been enabled to quote in favour of the general system of Government, the opinion of one so eminently qualified to form a judgment of its character, as Dwarkenath Tagore. He says that this eminent individual, never committed a greater mistake than when he said that Government had manifested "a noble solicitude for the welfare and improvement of the millions committed by providence to its charge." Whether the supposed mistake has reference to the interests of the party of which the Hurkaru has recently become the organ, or to the interests of truth, we are not informed. That Dwarkenath must have given offence to the movement party, which has recently been organized in Calcutta, can be easily understood. But we see no reason why our contemporary should feel such deep regret that the letter was ever written. It may possibly be a little more complimentary than the rigid truth would warrant; but it is infinitely nearer the truth than the statements which have been published in the Hurkaru from the pen of the Mookerjee Baboo, and the Old Hindoo.

The Hurkaru says that the Tagore family had no objection to Dwarkenath's going to England and feasting with the English. They have it seems excluded him from society, and cut him off from all social intercourse because he dared to say that the British Government had been a blessing to India. We think our contemporary has not mended the matter by this new version of their motives. They will gain little in public estimation by being relieved from the charge of bigotry to be saddled with that of tyranny. Their bigotry may be chargeable on their creed; their intolerance is their own sin. There was some shew of consistency and even reason in the bigotry. We learn upon enquiry that Hurookoomar Tagore, who took the lead in that proceeding, is esteemed among the Peer Alees, a holy man. He has long cherished the hope of being one day restored to the society of the orthodox, and nothing was more likely to further his views than such a blaze of orthodox zeal; nothing more calculated to render him worthy of restoration to the full honours of caste, than this excommunication by bell, book, and candle, of the illustrious member of his own family who had ventured, contrary to the rules of the enlightened shastras, to dine with the Queen of England and the King of France. The character of the victim was likely to add value to the sacrifice. Such an act, from such a motive, we can easily comprehend by a simple reference to the superstition which renders it meritorious.

But the explanation which the Hurkaru gives of this conduct is incomprehensible. We are told in his columns that the "intelligent inhabitants of the capital of British India are beginning to acquaint themselves with the nature and character of Government, under whose thraldom it has been placed, and that no man ought to discourage their laudable disposition." That they should make a beginning by abusing the Government which delivered them from the thraldrom of the Mahomedans, may be excused; they are new to the science of Government; and naturally think that its great secret consists in the art of defamation. But that they should begin by turning out of society by far the most eminent native in the country, simply because he has spoken a good word for the Government, is—but we leave Mr. Thompson to characterise it. Is this the liberty which is to mark this new era in the history of native society in Calcutta? Alas, for the seekers after truth, and the lovers of free discussion, the sworn foes of "error and exaggeration" in the metropolis of British India, that they should be so little able to bear the slightest opposition to their views, as to associate such intolerance with such patriotism. Alas ! Alas ! that the "laudable disposition" to "acquaint themselves with the nature and character of Government," should bear so strong a resemblance to the proceedings of the Inquisition as depicted by Le Sage in the character of Don Raphael. "Mon ami, vous oubliez qu'il ne faut point dans votre interrogatoire excuser Samuel Simon ; je vous en ai dit les consequences. Vous ne devez dire que des choses qui soient contre lui, et pas un mot en sa faveur."

But the Hurkaru has evidently been misinformed by the Tagores. We are happy he has afforded us an opportunity of relieving them from this charge of inconsistency. Whatever may be the feelings of the Old Hindoo and his colleagues towards all who will not join them in railing at Government, we acquit the Tagore family in this instance of any wish to deny to others that right of private judgement which they claim for themselves. The exclusion of Dwarkenath was an act of religious bigotry and not of political intolerance. The Bhaskur, from whose columns we borrowed the information, has given us the most satisfactory evidence on the subject. There does not appear to have been a spark of national feeling in the business. The idea of giving a patriotic turn to the proceeding, and thereby acquiring favour with the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, is evidently an after thought. Hurokoomar had better stick by the bigotry, and give up the patriotism.

The grand discovery of the Native writers who have figured in the Hurkaru, appears to be that the Government of British India is a grinding tyranny. If so, it is the most singular and inscrutable tyranny the world has ever seen. Here we have a meeting of the intelligent and wealthy inhabitants of the metropolis of British India, in the Fouzdaree Dispensary, whose families have grown up to wealth and importance under the institutions of this tyrannical Government; whose ancestors, to use the language of a Hindoo of the last generation, never dared to shew a clean garment under the old dynasty lest they should become the objects of plunder. We find them trained up to an acquaintance with the English tongue which enables them to appreciate the eloquence of George Thompson ; and instructed in that knowledge which gives dignity to man ; and all by this very same tyrannical Government. It is this tyrannical Government which allows them to vilify its character, to impugn its motives, to blacken the character of its officers, and to invoke foreign aid, with perfect impunity; nay, it is this same tyrannical Government which has furnished them with materials for declamation, by the unreserved publication to the world of those documents which exhibit the defects of its administration.

Mr. George Thompson has spoken in terms of censure of the course pursued by the Press in reference to the present agitation. Our contemporaries are well able to answer for themselves. For our part we have no hesitation in saying that we have little confidence in the permanence or utility of the movement, since the power of a movement depends on the character of the movers. We have some little experience in these matters. The animosity now manifested towards the British Government is perhaps less violent than that which was exhibited in 1829, when Lord W. Bentinck abolished Suttees. At that era the whole fabric of Native society was shaken to its foundation, and a degree of hatred was excited against Government, which had not been felt since the day when Rajah Nundkoomar was executed. Large funds were raised ; a society was organized, consisting of the most wealthy and influential members of society, and an agent despatched to England to advocate their cause ; yet all this zeal evaporated in two or three years ; and the Dhurma Subha ended, where the present agitators are said to have begun, by persecuting those who differed from it. We cite this example not because there is any analogy between the object of that great movement and the present, but to shew how little past experience will allow us to calculate on the permanence of any such feelings of exuberant zeal. The same burning excitement has in every instance that we know of, been succeeded by the same frigid apathy. Neither does there appear any thing in the object now set before the young men calculated to sustain their ardor. It has been observed, and not without justice, that if as a conquered country India has few rights, it has fewer wrongs. The prime actors in this movement have really little to complain of in their own case except that the Civil Service is not abolished, to make room for themselves. Solicitude for the welfare of others—for any general improvement in the condition of the people is in this country too transient a feeling to afford a solid foundation for a permanent edifice of patriotism. The chances are therefore ten to one that on Mr. George Thompson's departure, this movement,—which is confined to the section of educated Hindoos in Calcutta, and is supported neither by the Mahomedan nor the European population, nor by the country at large, —will subside ; and that no trace of it will remain but in the records of the Press.

Its utility is very questionable. We of course allude only to the written and spoken speeches which have been reported in the Hurkaru, and they appear to us more likely to endamage than to promote the cause of Indian amelioration, by associating it with the most virulent and unjustifiable abuse of our rulers. We have seldom been struck with greater surprise than to find the Hurkaru admitting into its columns, without rebuke, a letter in which the Civil Service, than which a more honourable body of men does not exist, is charged with having habitually fostered native corruption from the most nefarious personal motives. It is not from such attacks or from such men as the Old Hindoo and his associates that India can ever look for any benefit. A movement like this, based on misrepresentation, can only serve to disgust all men of honourable and benevolent feelings, and cause them to rally round a government so unjustly aspersed, which has done much and is doing still more for the welfare of India, and which in the short space of three months has abolished lotteries, and signed the death warrant of slavery. There is moreover no grievance now the subject matter of agitation, which the Press has not been steadily and calmly endeavouring to remove. The inadequacy of the allowances given to the native officers of Government, the glaring defects of the Police, the necessity of extending education, and of employing native agency to a greater extent in the administration, have been urged on the public authorities, by our contemporaries and by ourselves without interruption. However the conductors of the public journals may have quarrelled among themselves, they have made common cause against public grievances. In many instances their labours have been crowned with signal success, in all they have a hope of ultimate triumph. It is not because we are jealous of any rivals in the province of public agitation, which belongs especially to the fourth estate, that we object to the present movement, but because we are satisfied that in proportion as its virulence increases so will the cause of improvement be retarded.

After these remarks had been written we received the Hurkaru of Tuesday last, in which Baboo Oopendur Mohun Tagore has come forward to deny that the expulsion of Dwarkenath from society arose from the praise he bestowed on Government. Our contemporary has quoted a letter with which Hurokoomar Tagore intended to honour us, but did not send, in which he affirms that the excommunication arose from the purest patriotism, and not from bigotry. Any man who knows any thing of the feelings of Native society, and more especially of the position of the Tagores, will feel no hesitation in giving a preference to the statement of Oopendur Mohun over that of Hurokoomar.

THE SOMNATH GATES ARE AT REST.—The hot winds have set in, and the season is too far advanced for their farther advance; they are therefore deposited in the Fort at Agra. The escort has been broken up. Major Leech is put on the duty of catching Thugs, and the sepoys have been sent to their respective Regiments. It is scarcely to be supposed that when the cold weather comes round, the Major and the escort will be re-assembled to commence the journey afresh to Somnath ; the procession may therefore be considered as brought to a close. The next journey of the Gates will be to the Asiatic Society's Museum in Calcutta, if Lord Ellenborough's successor should not rather feel disposed to bestow them on the British Museum. Whatever may be their future destination, it is matter of sincere gratitude that they are not to be paraded through the country to our shame and confusion. What may be his Lordship's motive for thus consigning them to oblivion, after having issued so flaming a Proclamation, and dispersed copies of it to all the chiefs, big and little, in India, on coloured paper, with the impression of the great vice-regal seal attached to them, it is of little consequence to surmise. Lord Ellenborough may have thought that public attention had been sufficiently aroused, to convince the most incredulous Natives that we have actually humbled the Affghans and recovered our honour ; or the impulse which dictated the measure may have died away ; or his Lordship may have become wiser and may not be ashamed practically to acknowledge it ; or he may have resolved, from his great regard to the Court of Directors, to anticipate their wishes. It is sufficient to us to know that the affair is ended, and that just at the time when the political opponents whom his Lordship has provoked by his attacks on Lord Auckland's administration are bringing the Gates into Parliament, and daring Sir Robert Peel to justify this measure, the Gates themselves have been left to rot in the Dewanny Am at Agra.

RAIL ROADS.—Several years back, before the Affghan war had drawn off the attention of Government from internal improvements and absorbed the funds which might have been devoted to them, the establishment of a superior mode of communication between the Western Provinces, and the port of Calcutta, was brought under consideration. The opening of a canal between Rajmahl and the capital was then thought the most feasible scheme, and the plan of a rail road which we strenuously advocated was considered visionary. The canal is apparently laid on the shelf, and attention has again been drawn to the feasibility and propriety of devoting a portion of the revenues of this country to the construction of a rail road, which shall extend, not to Rajmahl only, but on to Benares and even to Delhi. The Englishman and his correspondent Ferrum, have recently discussed the subject with much ardor and ability; and we gladly take advantage of the interest which it has excited to lay before our readers, a plan for a rail road which was recently submitted to the Court of Directors, by a young and zealous officer in their service on this establishment, whose talents were so highly appreciated by Col. Paisley, that when on a recent occasion the Senate of Hamburgh applied to him for an Engineer to blow up a vessel which obstructed the navigation of the Elbe, the author of this plan was selected for that employment. Just at that time however the news of our disasters in Affghanistan, reached England, and every officer on furlough was hurried out to India, to prevent the sack of Calcutta by Akbar Khan and his mountaineers. He was thus deprived of the opportunity of distinguishing himself.

We publish the sketch, to keep alive the present discussion. The circuitous line of route which he has chosen is we think open to objections, as the object in all rail roads is as far as possible to choose the shortest distance between two points. The facilities which this detour may afford for transporting the produce of particular districts, will, we fear, offer but a small compensation for the extra expense which must be incurred. Be that as it may, our object will be gained if the publication of this plan and estimate, should attract attention, and serve in any degree to advance the most important scheme which has yet been devised for the improvement of the country.

Slavery in India.—At the beginning of this year, the Government of India promulgated the draft of an Act which will terminate the legal bondage of every slave throughout the country, and give every man now held in slavery a right to claim his freedom by an appeal to the Courts of law. This Act was followed up immediately after by another which extinguished the status of slavery through the settlements in the Straits. We have now the pleasure of learning, that the slaves on the Island of Ceylon, a Crown colony, have been restored to freedom, as the following extract will shew:—

"We give prominence to the following extract from the letter of a correspondent in the Northern Province:—'Some months ago a Circular letter from the London Anti-Slavery Society, containing queries on Slavery in India, was put into my hands. I collected a mass of curious information which may hereafter, if time permit, be rendered available towards a history of a system which too long existed in Ceylon, but which I hope and believe is now for ever numbered with the departed. I delayed replying to the circular until after the 1st of January, when the effect of the late ordinance would be seen. The result has been such as must give pleasure to every friend of freedom. The sun of the 31st December 1842 set on about 4000 men, women, and children in this district (Wademoratchy) bearing the name of slaves;—that the 1st of January 1843 beheld them all free! Not a single slave has been registered in this Court, and I am happy to be enabled to inform you on the best authority that such also has been the result in the following Northern Districts: Jaffna; Malagam; the Islands Temoratchy and Putchalepaly.

'In addition to this I am enabled on the authority of a respectable correspondent at Trincomalie to say, that before the passing of the late ordinance slavery had no longer any existence in that district.

'The number of slaves in Ceylon was recently set down at 30,000, the vast majority of whom belonged to the Northern districts. Seeing the effect of the ordinance here I think I may safely assure you that the same result has followed in every district of the Island, and that slavery no longer pollutes our Isle. If in any part it is otherwise, I should feel much obliged to any correspondent who through the medium of your columns will inform me of the fact.'"—Ceylon Observer.

When the Acts which are now in embryo have become mature, and are incorporated with the laws of India, we shall have the satisfaction of seeing slavery extinguished throughout the English dominions in the East; and it may then be said with truth that in whatever portion of the globe the British flag waves, it waves over freemen. This is a proud distinction for a nation which was till lately one of the greatest abettors of slavery. It is true, that in this country the bondage of the slave except in some districts, was so extremely mild as scarcely to deserve the name of slavery, and that the abolition will make little perceptible difference in the condition of the country. Still it was an object worthy the attention of a great Government to remove every obstacle to the enjoyment of complete freedom by its subjects. It is gratifying likewise to the benevolent mind, as a proof that liberal principles have taken root in our Indian administration, and that we may look with confidence for other measures of improvement.

One of our contemporaries appears to think that the Act will be inoperative unless severe penalties are inflicted on those who may continue to hold their fellow creatures in slavery in defiance of its prohibitions. There can be little doubt that such an enactment will be requisite, before the benevolent views in which the abolition originated, are fully realized. But we must not attempt too much at first. Judging from the recorded opinion of the members of Government, and of the Law Commission, we should be inclined to say that a great point has been unexpectedly gained by thus destroying the legal claim of every master throughout India on the services and the earnings of his slave. The present Act has evidently been carried with some little difficulty; and it is far from improbable that if an attempt had been made to render its provisions more stringent in the first instance, the design itself might have miscarried. There has apparently been a laudable effort to avoid any direct and palpable opposition to the prejudices of those who were unable to make up their minds to the instant extinction of all slavery. Such obstacles, from which the best constructed administration is not free, must be taken into account in judging of the provisions of the proposed Act. In England it was not till the slave trade had been abolished twenty-six years, that society was prepared for the abolition of slavery itself. The disappearance of a whole generation with its prejudices and predilections, was requisite to complete the great act of freedom. Some time may therefore be reasonably allowed in this country to elapse between this announcement of personal freedom, and the enactment of penalties for infringing it.

Report of the Calcutta Corresponding Committee of the Church Missionary Society.—We now proceed to review the Missionary exertions made during the past year, under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society at this Presidency. The number of Missionaries engaged under its direction, is twenty-five; viz. twelve in Bengal, and thirteen in the North West Provinces. Four labourers are engaged in Calcutta, at the Head Quarters of the Mission at Mirzapore. The number of communicants is forty-six; the usual Christian congregation, two hundred; no additions appear to have been made during the year. The Native Christian Institution under the superintendence of Mr. Long, is designed to give an English and oriental education to Hindoos and Mahomedans on Christian principles. It numbers forty youths in the male department. The first class, consisting of seven scholars, have been engaged during the past year in the study of the Scriptures, Milton's Paradise lost, the History of England, the History of India, Lennie's English Grammar, Goldsmith's Geography, Arithmetic, the Latin Grammar, and the Elements of Geometry.—The female department contains thirty-four girls. The Head Seminary, intended to train up Native Catechists, does not flourish. It appears to have had but two students last year; and they have been sent to labour at Kishnaghur. It is right to mention however that Mr. Long has under his charge a class of eight Christian boys whom he is training up for Catechists and School Masters.

The Church Missionary Society has also a sphere of labour, like the Incorporated Society, the Independents and the Baptists in the villages to the south of Calcutta, where a spirit of enquiry was excited about eighteen years ago by the labours of the late Mr. Trawin, who may be considered the founder of a Mission which has produced larger results than any other Mission in Bengal. The number of Christians connected with the Church Society in eighteen villages, amounts to three hundred. The number of individuals baptized last year was sixty,—thirty-seven adults and twenty-three children.

Mr. Long reports that he has last year entered upon a new branch of labour; that of preaching to adults in their own vernacular language. We are happy to hear it. We think however he is disposed to attach too much importance to the concentration of Missionary labour in the metropolis; and to the diffusion of Christian truth through the English language. No missionary, says he, can have a more important department of labour than that of superintending an English School. This is not the place for combating a doctrine to which we cannot subscribe; we will only therefore remark, that the other department of labour on which he has lately entered, that of instructing the people, like the apostles, in "the wonderful works of God, in their own tongue wherein they were born," appears to us quite as important as teaching them English.—There is also a Hindoostanee department of labour in Calcutta under the superintendence of Mr. Thompson and Mr. Lindstedt. The attendance at the Chapel in the morning amounts to fifty; the number baptized last year amounted to six, and the communicants to twenty-three. There are also eleven candidates for baptism.

The report of the Institution at Agurpara is rather meagre. We never pass the Refuge on our way to and from Calcutta, with its gothic towers reflected on the waters of the Hooghly, without being impressed with the inconstancy of human prospects. This institution was created by the indefatigable exertions of the noble minded Mrs. Wilson. To its establishment she devoted the whole energy of her character. It is a monument of her zeal and benevolence in this sacred cause; yet it had scarcely been completed, when a change in her religious views deprived her of the privilege of superintending it, and others have now entered into her labours. Their labours are doubtless equally conscientious, but they have not been equally successful, and the report before us shews how deeply the absence of her animating spirit has been felt.

The Mission at Burdwan, under the management of Mr. Lincke, has received accessions by the baptism of nine of the elder orphan girls and two enquirers, one of whom was formerly a religious devotee. The English School at the station, the only institution of the kind in this wealthy and populous district, contains seventy lads, who are regularly instructed in the truths of Christianity. The indigenous Native Schools have been gradually reduced to five. The system of instruction is deficient, and the range of instruction very limited. Hence they do not stand high in the estimation of the Natives, and it is proposed, if they cannot be improved, to close them. We hope they will be improved. With so many Missionaries in this country, acquainted in so eminent a degree with the vernacular tongue, and enjoying so much leisure, it would be very strange if a system of vernacular education could not be brought to maturity. This station has two orphan establishments, one for boys in which there are thirty, and the other for girls which contains thirty-eight children.

It is in the district of Kishnaghur, however, that the efforts of the Society in the province of Bengal have been most successful. Some years ago a new sect which had recently broken off from the grosser doctrines of idolatry sought Christian instruction, and the Church Missionary Society eagerly embraced the opportunity to plant the gospel, and to build up Christian institutions among them. Five stations in different parts of the district have been the result of this effort. The report before us does not afford any data for judging of the present number of converts, but we find that at four of the five stations, the number of baptisms during the past year was three hundred and sixty-three; of these, as far as we can judge, two hundred may have been children and infants. Christian Boarding Schools have been established at each station, which though very expensive, are likely to be very useful in training up readers, catechists and School-masters. It is highly desirable that the Mission in this district should train up its own Native teachers in every department of labour, and not depend on importing them from Calcutta. The Calcutta Native teachers would soon be above their business, and only serve to introduce discontent in the Christian community. That Mission stands in need of many labourers, but they must be men adapted by the simplicity of their habits to the circumstance of the people among whom they are called to travel and labour. The Boarding schools should be converted at the earliest period into seminaries, and the scale of instruction improved, and they will then become useful in the highest degree.

The conduct of too many of the converts has been distressing. When so large a number is admitted at once into the Christian flock, such disappointments are inevitable. Mr. Blumhardt writes, "there is a painful indifference, perverseness and insensibility to spiritual objects, observable in most of the people, which renders the work among them a great trial." The native Catechist at Bohergachee writes, that they treated him shamefully, that they came to beat him, and said that both the missionary and he had deprived them of the Rupees they got from the Committee.—"I do not know," says he, "when these men will understand that religion is not a trade." Mr. Lipp says, "while it is to be lamented that the majority of those who some years ago became Christians by name, shew little desire for Christian instruction, and still less exhibit by their life a converted heart, yet there are some who appear to be touched by the grace of God, and who may prove in the end, that the work of love and patience has not been in vain among them." These extracts will serve to shew that quite as much labour is requisite, to keep alive the spirit of Christianity among those who have been baptized and confirmed, as to bring over fresh converts from heathenism. In such circumstances nothing perhaps could be more disastrous than the employment of teachers who should tell the people, that if they relied for salvation on the sacraments administered by an episcopally ordained minister, they could not go wrong.

At Benares there are two Missionaries besides an English School-master; but the Church Missionaries, like their brethren of the London Society, are still obliged to labour in hope. At Juanpore, the Rev. Mr. Haines has been laboring for the past twelvemonth. At Chunar, resides the veteran missionary, Mr. Bowley, superintending a circle of Schools, and itinerating through his own and the neighbouring districts. Goruckpore has been the scene of an experiment undertaken by Mr. Wilkinson, the late Missionary, to raise a Christian and agricultural colony on land reclaimed from the jungle. The plan has not succeeded to the extent of his wishes; but there is no cause for despair. The grant consists of 1192 acres, one half of which is under cultivation, but the greater part of the cultivators are Hindoos. There is a handsome Church, with its spire rising above the trees, but the number of houses belonging to the Christians does not exceed twenty-five; and they can scarcely be prevailed upon to turn their attention to agriculture, while they can obtain a livelihood by cutting wood and selling it in the market. The Christians moreover shew few signs of spiritual life, and the orphan boys are very troublesome, as Mr. Wendnagle says, both there and every where else in India. This experiment however will doubtless succeed in time. The Native Christians will learn to trust more to their own exertions, and to lean less on others; the Hindoos on the grant, will gradually come over to Christianity, through the predominance of Christian influence, and the labours of Christian teachers among them. At any rate, their children may be weaned from idolatry by early and evangelical tuition; and a few years of perseverance will probably make the prospects of this station as bright as they now appear gloomy.

This review has extended to such length, that we have only room to remark that the station of Agra enjoys the labours of four Missionaries. During the past year, one native has been received into the Church by baptism; but we regret to learn that ten vernacular Schools in which three hundred children received instruction have been relinquished through the failure of local funds.

The sum expended in the Mission throughout this Presidency during the year, amounted to Rs. 115,969; of which Rs. 100,819 were contributed by the Parent Society, and 15,150 Rs. raised in the country.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.—Within the last week we have received copies of two new Journals from the sister Presidencies. The Record, a tri-weekly journal has been started at Madras, at the very moderate charge of 10 Rupees a year; a sum we fear far too low to meet the mechanical expense of the paper and to admit of the engagement of superior talent for the Editorial department. We wish our new brother every success.

A second attempt has been made to establish a daily paper at Bombay, but the specimens we have seen of the Journal, which has been named the British Indian Gentleman's Gazette and Bombay Daily Newspaper do not augur length of life. In a place where the indefatigable Times and the witty Courier, carry the day, a competitor must bring very strong claims to public favour before he can obtain a footing. Yet the British Indian Gentleman's Gazette and Bombay Daily Newspaper calculates upon a subscription list as long as the tail of the new Comet. Nothing short of five thousand subscribers will satisfy his ambition. If he should succeed in these hopes, Government have reason to bless him, for the postage on his paper will amount to the sum of Two lakhs and twenty-five thousand Rupees a year. We see our Bombay contemporaries have been making themselves merry at the expense of the new comer; but a little professional jealousy must not discourage the Editor. He will not attain the five thousand subscribers, but he may improve his editorials, and thus silence the voice of slander.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, MARCH 16.

—The last letters from Hydrabad state, that more than a crore of Rupees of prize money have been discovered, and that Capt. Basett had been appointed prize agent. The office would have been given to Captain Tucker, but for his wounds. The case of this gallant officer is exceedingly unfortunate. He was turned out of his place in the Military Auditor General's office, and remanded to his regiment. On arriving at Sukkur on the Indus, he proceeded with his troop towards Hydrabad, was engaged in that well foughten field, and severely wounded, and thus through the effects of his own gallantry is deprived of the valuable office which would otherwise have fallen to him.

—The Delhi Gazette states, that two Hurkarus had arrived at Lahore from Cabul with despatches from Akbar Khan, in which he said that he was about to send 12,000 Cavalry with 7,000 Infantry to Peshawur to escort his father back. The escort is rather more numerous than General Avitabile could wish, and there is some reason to think that if the troops were once permitted to enter Peshawur, they would be in no hurry to quit it. The news writer at Peshawur had written to Lahore to say that there was no doubt of Akbar Khan's intention to visit Peshawur; and that he would then proceed on to Mooltan.

—Letters from Bombay of the 8th instant state, that the Council sat on Sunday the 7th till four o'clock; that troops were to be sent off immediately to Cutch, and that there was little doubt of Scinde being annexed to the Bombay Presidency. Three steamers had left Bombay during the week with 800 additional troops for Scinde. Major Outram, it is said, will not be allowed to proceed to Europe. It was rumoured that the communication between Hydrabad and Kurachee had been cut off, and that another attack was meditated on General Napier.

FRIDAY, MARCH 17.

—The Native gentry in Calcutta appear to have entered in good earnest upon the question of taking the management of municipal matters into their own hands. It is singular, that two years should have been suffered to elapse since the Act was passed without any effort whatever, and that the present effort should be the result of a flapper from Government House. But the time has now, it seems, arrived when the offer of Government will be accepted. A Sub-Committee of House-holders was held yesterday, when preliminary arrangements were made. It was suggested that 30 Rs. a quarter, should be the lowest qualification, for a vote. These 10 Rs. a month rent payers are very numerous, and the constituency must necessarily be large. An application, it is said, will be made to Government for the appropriation of the Liquor tax and the Canal returns to municipal purposes.

— Capt. P. Nicholson, lately in charge of the Dost, arrived at Ferozepore from Loodianah on the 25th February.

— Colonel Wallace, with the detachment of Bengal troops, which was recently sent back from Scinde, and which would have proved so invaluable an auxiliary in the present emergency, arrived at Ferozepore on the 28th February.

— Letters from Rangoon, the 17th of February, state that the casting of the great bell which had been so long talked of, was to take place on the next day, and that several hundred artificers had been assembled from various quarters to assist on the occasion.

SATURDAY, MARCH 18.

— The Star states, that one of the out-posts in the Bundlekund or Saugor districts, had been attacked by the insurgents. They were successfully repulsed.

— Letters from Bombay received at the Star office state, that the most active preparations were making to send reinforcements to Scinde and Cutch. On our side the 9th Native Infantry is to proceed from Ferozepore, and the 55th from Delhi, we suppose down the Sutledge. Such active military preparations, such hot haste in urging forward reinforcements, is a strange comment on the announcement that there was "tranquillity in Bundlekund, and peace in India."

— At the Annual Meeting of the Parental Academy on Thursday evening, upwards of two hundred ladies and gentlemen assembled to hear the report read and George Thompson speak. Dr. Corbyn in moving the first resolution, passed a high eulogium on the Institution, a ceremony, which after twenty years existence, might have been dispensed with. Mr. George Thompson moved the Second Resolution, but his speech is not fully reported. We are happy to learn that the Institution has got over the difficulties which lately threatened its existence, and is now in a flourishing condition. From Mr. Byrne's vote of thanks we augur that it has been liberally succoured by the donations of friends.

— Sir Hugh Gough has arrived at the Madras Presidency and been received with the most enthusiastic greeting.

— The Englishman states on the strength of a letter from Arracan, that a severe volcanic irruption has manifested itself in that province. The occurrence of this eruption, according to our contemporary, has probably saved us from another earthquake. What with burning mountains at our door, and comets above our heads, the year will not lack memorabilia.

— The Bombay papers just received, state that a detachment of fifty sepoys at Vikkur in Lower Scinde, had been attacked and cut up by the enemy. The spirit of opposition will of course run like wild fire through the country and put in jeopardy every European, and every native connected with us.

MONDAY, MARCH 20.

— The intelligence from Scinde becomes daily more interesting. Peace has disappeared; and we are again called to chronicle, week by week, the progress of Military enterprizes. The accounts received this day are deeply, and in some respects painfully interesting. The Englishman's correspondent at Bombay, in his letter of the 10th states, that the Regiment at Sukkur being isolated is considered in great danger; and that many officers are missing. The Beloochees have been driving away all the cattle, with the view of starving out the British. General Napier has entrenched himself at Hydrabad; but is sadly in want of officers. The Beloochee army, though defeated, is not annihilated; and it is said to menace the province of Cutch. The Bombay Government is all activity. Council upon Council is held and its sittings are prolonged to the night. All available troops are ordered off to re-inforce Sir Charles Napier. Detachments have been sent to Mandavie in Cutch. Major Outram is refused permission to return to England. Of what inestimable service at this juncture would have been H. M. 40th, which has been so prematurely shipped to England, and the Bengal column under Brigadier Wallace, which has returned to Bengal. But the Beloochees are foolish in reasoning from our position in Affghanistan to our position in Scinde. There is no Bolan and Khyber pass, but a broad river, and before they can look about them, British troops will be every where prepared to keep down opposition. We have conquered China by Steam; and by Steam shall we keep Scinde.

— The treasure found at Hydrabad is in the last accounts stated at Two crores of Rupees. A considerable portion of this sum will doubtless be given as prize money; but there will be enough left to cover the expenses of the war. A war that pays itself is generally popular in England.

— The Bengal Herald of yesterday has an article on the Civil Service somewhat oddly constructed. The first sentence of the first paragraph says in allusion to them, that "It is not at all surprising that the members of a profession, favoured by the Governor General, should be ready to praise his administration." The first sentence of the second paragraph runs thus. "It is said that Lord Ellenborough dislikes the Civil Service, and would, if he had the power, throw open the employments now monopolized by that favoured class to public competition." Are the two paragraphs from the same pen?

— Mr. Powell, an Assistant in the Board of Revenue, has just put an end to himself in a fit of mental aberration. He conceived himself the victim of a conspiracy.

TUESDAY, MARCH 21.

— Neither the Hindoostan steamer nor the Express were in last evening. Last year the Mail arrived on the 23d of March; but if it be delayed to that date, it seems more than probable that the Steamer will bring us the first intelligence.

— The Somnath Gates arrived at Agra on the 9th instant, and Sir W. Nott two days after.

— A very extraordinary correspondence has just appeared in the papers of the Presidency between Mr. O'Hanlon, a Justice of the Peace, and Mr. Gordon, the Secretary of the Union Bank, marked private, but written in an official style. The Justice of the Peace charges Mr. Gordon with having been criminally wasteful of our property: that is of the Proprietors of the Union Bank; and he states his own loss at 10,000 Rs. He then proceeds to state that he intended at one time to attend a meeting of the Bank and rip open Mr. Gordon's past life, and invite him to retire, but he had not nerve for it; for as he says, it is a terrible thing to impeach a man with whom one has been on terms of intimacy. But it seems he had nerve for another act, which was to demand of Mr. Gordon to make good the sum of Four thousand odd hundred Rupees which his son lost ten years ago by the failure of Mackintosh and Co. The letter says very categorically, "Will you pay, or shall he proceed?" Mr. Gordon in his reply to this, we had almost said insane, letter, enters very unnecessarily into the defence of his own conduct, and demands to know on what ground the claim is made. The particulars are given, but Mr. Gordon's final answer does not appear, though it is very easy to guess its nature. Would it not be as well for the Deputy Governor to extend to the Police Magistrates the superannuation Pension rules, by which servants when incapacitated for further employment by "bodily or mental infirmity," are allowed to retire on a pension?

— The Hurkaru of yesterday contained an account of a brutal outrage committed by a body of natives on Mr. Oldfield the Opium Agent at Patna.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 22.

— No Hindoostan—No Express up to last night and though the comet looks brighter, now the moon has ceased to eclipse it, yet up to the time of our going to press there has been no inundation.

— The latest news of Scinde is we believe that given in the Hurkaru of this morning. It extends to the 1st. General Napier had no intention of marching into the desert to Umercote where it was said that the Belochees had assembled in great numbers. He was still encamped at Hydrabad, where he was so strongly posted as to be able to resist every attack. The whole country is in a blaze; but reinforcements were pouring in from Bombay with unexampled rapidity. The natives on either bank of the river had removed the wood collected for the Steamers; and it was with much difficulty they moved up and down. Captain Ennis of the 21st N. I. who had fallen into the hands of the Beloochees, had been barbarously murdered.

— The Hurkaru states that a flaming proclamation relative to the annexation of Scinde to the British dominions is likely to appear in this evening's Calcutta Gazette; that Scinde will be formed into a new Presidency with Sir Charles Napier at the head of it.

— The Delhi Gazette just arrived, contains news from Hydrabad to the 3d and from Sukkur to the 5th, up to which date no attack had been made on our posts.

Lord Ellenborough has erected Scinde into a province of the British empire, and appointed His Excellency Sir Charles Napier, Governor. We subjoin the three first acts of sovereignty.

GENERAL ORDERS BY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

The Governor General is pleased to appoint Major General Sir Charles Napier, K. C. B., Governor of the province of Scinde.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

From Major General Sir C. J. Napier, K. C. B.,
Commanding in Scinde and Beloochistan,
To the Right Honourable Lord Ellenborough,
Governor General of India,

Meeanee, 6 miles from Hyderabad, 18*th Feb.* 1843.

My Lord,—The forces under my command have gained a decisive victory over the Army of the Ameers of Upper and Lower Scinde. A detailed account of the various circumstances which led to this action does not belong to the limited space of a hasty despatch, I, therefore, begin with the transactions belonging to the battle. On the 14th instant the whole body of the Ameers assembled in full durbar, formally affixed their seals to the draft Treaty. On leaving the durbar, Major Outram and his companions were in great peril, a plot had been laid to murder them all. They were saved by the guards of the Ameers, but the next day (the 15th) the residence of Major Outram was attacked by eight thousand of the Ameers' troops, headed by one or more of the Ameers. The report of this nefarious transaction I have the honour to enclose. I heard of it at Hala, at which place the fearless and distinguished Major Outram joined me with his brave companions in the stern and extraordinary defence of his residence against so overwhelming a force, accompanied by 6 pieces of cannon. On the 16th I marched to Muttaree, having there ascertained that the Ameers were in position at Meanee, (10 miles distance) to the number of twenty-two thousand men, and well knowing that a delay for reinforcements, would both strengthen their confidence and add to their numbers, already seven times that which I commanded, I resolved to attack them, and we marched at 4 A. M., on the morning of the 17th; at 8 o'clock the advanced guard discovered their camp, at 9 o'clock we formed in order of battle, about two thousand eight hundred men of all arms and 12 pieces of artillery. We were now within range of the enemy's guns, and 15 pieces of artillery opened upon us and were answered by our cannon. The enemy were very strongly posted, woods were on their flanks which I did not think could be turned. These two woods were joined by the dry bed of the river Fulaillee which had a high bank. The bed of the river was nearly straight and about 1,200 yards in length. Behind this and in both woods were the enemy posted. In front of their extreme right and on the edge of the wood was a village. Having made the best examination of their position, which so short a time permitted, the artillery was posted on the right of the line, and some skirmishers of infantry with the Scinde irregular horse were sent in front to try and make the enemy show his force more distinctly; we then advanced from the right in eschelon of battalions, refusing the left to save it from the fire of the village. The 9th Bengal light cavalry formed the reserve in rear of the left wing: and the Poona horse, together with four companies of infantry, guarded the baggage. In this order of battle we advanced as at a review across a fine plain swept by the cannon of the enemy. The artillery and H. M.'s 22d regiment in line, formed the leading eschellon, the 25th N. I. the second, the 12th N. I. the third, and the 1st grenadier N. I. the fourth.

The enemy was 1,000 yards from our line, which soon traversed the intervening space. Our fire of musketry opened at about 100 yards from the bank in reply to that of the enemy: and in a few minutes the engagement became general along the bank of the river, on which the combatants fought for about three hours or more with great fury, man to man. Then, my Lord, was seen the superiority of the musket and bayonet over the sword and shield and matchlock. The brave Beloochees first discharging their matchlocks and pistols, dashed over the bank with desperate resolution; but down went these bold and skilful swordsmen under the superior power of the musket and bayonet. At one time, my Lord, the courage and the numbers of the enemy against the 22d, the 25th and the 12th regiments bore heavily in that part of the battle. There was no time to be lost, and I sent orders to the cavalry to force the right of the enemy's line. This order was very gallantly executed by the 9th Bengal cavalry and the Scinde horse. The details of which shall be afterwards stated to your Lordship, for the struggle on our right and centre was at that moment so fierce, that I could not go to the left. In this charge the 9th light cavalry took a standard and several pieces of artillery, and the Scinde horse took the enemy's camp, from which a vast body of their cavalry slowly retired fighting. Lieut. FitzGerald gallantly pursued them for two miles, and I understand, slew three of the enemy in single combat. The brilliant conduct of these two cavalry regiments decided in my opinion the crisis of the action, for from the moment the cavalry were seen in rear of their right flank, the resistance of our opponents slackened; the 22d regiment forced the bank, the 25th and 12th did the same, the latter regt. capturing several guns, and the victory was decided. The artillery made great havock among the dense masses of the enemy and dismounted several of their guns. The whole of the enemy's artillery, ammunition, standards and camp, with considerable stores and some treasure were taken.

Meer Roostum Khan, Meer Nusseer Khan and Meer Wullee Mahomed of Khyrpore; Meer Nusseer Khan, Meer Shadad Khan and Meer Hoosein Khan, all of Hyderabad, came into my camp and surrendered their swords as prisoners of war. Their misfortunes are of their own creation, but as they are great, I returned to them their swords. They await your Lordship's orders. Their Highnesses have surrendered Hyderabad, and I shall occupy it to-morrow.

It is not to be supposed that so hard fought an engagement could be sustained without considerable loss on both sides. That of the British force is two hundred and fifty-six men killed and wounded. The enemy is generally supposed to have lost five thousand; Major Teasdale, while animating his sepoys, dashed on horseback over the bank amidst the enemy, and was instantly shot and sabred; dying like a glorious soldier!

Major Jackson, in like manner, rushed forward, two brave havildars followed him: too far advanced before their men, they fell under the sabres of the enemy, but it is said not before he killed several.

Captains Mead, Tew and Cookson, with Lieutenant Wood, all fell honourably, urging on the assault with unmitigated valour.

Lieutenant-Colonel Pennefather was severely wounded, as with the high courage of a soldier he led his regiment up the desperate bank of the Fulaillee. Major Wyllie, Captains Tucker and Conway, Lieutenants Harding and Phayre, were all wounded while gloriously animating their men to sustain the shock of numbers. And now, my Lord, I have to say that British officers could not shew greater gallantry in leading their men into action than did the Queen's and Company's officers on this day, and the troops well maintained their reputation.

From the heads of departments and regiments I have received every assistance throughout the whole campaign, and in the battle.

The gallant charge of the Bengal Cavalry was intrepidly led by Lieutenant-Colonel Pattle, second in command, and Major Story, nor were the Scinde horse under Captain Jacob idle. To this able soldier and his regiment I am indebted for the most active services, long previous to, and during the combat. He won the enemy's camp, from which he drove a body of three or four thousand cavalry.

Major Lloyd powerfully worked his artillery, ably seconded by Captains Whitlie and Hutt. The destruction caused by their guns is said to have been immense.

Major Waddington of the Engineers, has given me great assistance throughout the campaign, and in the action lent me his aid in carrying orders.

Nor is the country less indebted to Major Reid for his gallantry at the head of the 12th N. I. The grenadiers under Major Clibborn, owing to a misconception of orders, were but slightly engaged.

Major Poole of the 22d, and Captain Jackson of the 25th, who succeeded to the command of those regiments, proved themselves worthy of their dangerous posts. In the medical and commissariat departments both activity and zeal have been shown by Dr. Dalrymple and Captain Blenkins.

Major Wyllie, Assistant Adjutant General, was wounded while leading up the bank, and I have thereby lost, for a time, his valuable assistance, no man has been more serviceable to me in all our previous operations.

The Acting Assistant Quarter Master General Lieut. McMurdo, of the 22d regiment, had his horse killed, and while on foot leading some soldiers in a desperate dash down the enemy's side of the bank, he cut down a chieftain. He has greatly assisted me by his activity and zeal during the whole of our operations. Allow me to recommend to your Lordship's notice and protection Major McPherson, my Aide-de-Camp, an old soldier of the light division, from whom I have received that assistance which was expected from a veteran of the 43d regiment. To my Acting Aide-de-Camp Lieutenant Pelly, I am much indebted in many ways both during the campaign and in the action, as also to Lieut. Thompson, 9th light cavalry, who acted as my orderly officer during the day, and Lieut. Younghusband, staff officer.

Captain Henderson of the Madras Engineers, took a standard, and did good service with his excellent little band of sappers and miners, not only in this engagement but through the campaign. His Lieutenants Boilean and Outlaw, have also distinguished themselves.

Innumerable are the individual acts of intrepidity which took place between our soldiers and their opponents, too numerous for detail in this despatch, yet well meriting a record. I hope that your Lordship will pardon the length of this letter written in the midst of great interruptions and at various times.

Finally, I trust for receiving indulgence from one who so well knows how difficult my position has been for the last five months up to the present moment, and how hard I have labored and how much I have risked to avoid a recourse to arms. This sanguinary engagement has been forced upon me by the duplicity of the Ameers, though I must say that until the attack upon the Residency, neither Major Outram nor myself, believed they were resolved to fight, and against which duplicity, I never ceased to warn them. My conscience acquits me of the blood which has been shed. The tyrannical and deceitful Ameers brought on the battle, the fierce tribe of Beloochee robbers were resolved that it should be so, and bravely did they execute their resolution.

I perceive that I have omitted to mention three officers well worthy of being named. To Captain Tait, of the Poona horse, I entrusted charge of the baggage on this day of battle, and I have no doubt that the steadiness and imposing attitude of the detachment under his command, held the enemy aloof, for I assure your Lordship no post gave me greater anxiety than that of the baggage guard. Lieutenants Leeson and Brennan have, throughout the whole campaign, been of the greatest use as Baggage Master and Provost Marshal, and during the action Lieutenant Brennan was scarcely from my side a moment, except when conveying orders, nor will I omit to mention the Moonshee Alli Akbar, an Arab, who exhibited the coolest courage, and attended me every where.

I ought to have observed in the body of this despatch, that I had, the night before the action, detached Major Outram in the steamers with two hundred sepoys to set fire to the wood in which we understood the enemy's left flank was posted. This was an operation of great difficulty and danger, but would have been most important to the result of the battle. However, the enemy had moved about 3 miles to their right during the night, and Major Outram executed his task without difficulty at the hour appointed, viz. 9 o'clock, and from the field we observed the smoke of the burning wood arise. I am strongly inclined to think that this circumstance had some effect on the enemy. But it deprived me of the able services of Major Outram, Captain Green and Lieutenants Brown and Wells, together with two hundred men, which I much regretted for their sakes and for my own, for I much wanted the officers; and here I hope your Lordship will pardon me for saying that the want of European officers in the native regiments at one period, endangered the success of the action. The sepoy is a brave and excellent soldier, but like all soldiers he expects to be led on in certain moments, and as he looks to his European officer, if he misses him, the greatest danger arises—three times I saw them retreat, evidently because the officers had fallen, and when another appeared and rallied them they at once followed him boldly. This, my Lord, accounts for the great number of European officers killed and wounded in proportion to the whole. I am sure that in observing a defect in the formation of the company's troops, the effect of which might have been so serious, I shall not be deemed presumptuous or impertinent.

The defence of the Residency by Major Outram, and the small force with him against such numbers of the enemy, was so admirable, that I have scarcely mentioned it in the foregoing despatch because I propose to send your Lordship a detailed account of it as a brilliant example of defending a Military post. I have, &c.

On board the Planet Steamer, 15 miles above Hyderabad, 6 P. M., 15*th February*, 1843.

SIR,—My despatches of the last few days will have led you to expect that my earnest endeavours to effect an amicable arrangement with the Ameers of Scinde would fail, and it is with much regret I have now to report, that their Highnesses have commenced hostilities by attacking my residence this morning; which after four hours' most gallant defence by my honorary escort, the light company of Her Majesty's 22d regiment, commanded by Captain Conway, I was compelled to evacuate in consequence of our ammunition running short.

At 9 A. M. this morning a dense body of cavalry and infantry* took post on three sides of the Agency compound (the fourth being defended by the Planet steamer about 500 yards distant) in the gardens and houses which immediately command the enclosure, and which it was impossible to hold with our limited numbers, a hot fire was opened by the enemy and continued incessantly for four hours, but all their attempts to enter the Agency enclosure, although merely surrounded by a wall, varying from 4 to 5 feet high, were frustrated by Captain Conway's able distribution of his small band, and the admirable conduct of every individual soldier composing it under the gallant example of their commanding officer and his subalterns Lieutenant Harding and Ensign Pennefather, H. M. 22nd regiment, also Captains Green of the 21st regiment native infantry and Wells of the 15th regiment who volunteered their services, to each of whom was assigned the charge of a separate quarter, also to your A. D. C., Captain Brown, Bengal Engineers, who carried my orders to the steamer and assisted in working her guns and directing her flanking fire. Our ammunition being limited to 40 rounds per man, the officers directed their whole attention to reserving their fire, and keeping their men close under cover, never showing themselves or returning a shot, except when the enemy attempted to rush, or showed themselves in great numbers, consequently great execution was done with trifling expenditure of ammunition and with little loss. Our hope of receiving a reinforcement, and a supply of ammunition by the Satellite steamer (hourly expected) being disappointed, on the arrival of that vessel, without either shortly after the commencement of the attack, it was decided at 12 A. M. after being three hours under fire, to retire to the Steamer, while still we had sufficient ammunition left to fight the vessel up the river. Accordingly I requested Captain Conway to keep the enemy at bay, for one hour, while the property was removed; for which that time was ample, could the Camp followers be induced to exert themselves; after delivering their first loads on board, however, they were so terrified at the enemy's cross fire on the clear space between the compound and the vessel, that none could be persuaded to return except a few of the officer's servants, with whose assistance but little could be removed during the limited time we could afford, consequently much had to be abandoned, and I am sorry to find that the loss chiefly fell upon the officers and men who were too much occupied in keeping off the enemy, to be able to attend to their own interests. Accordingly after the expiration of another hour (during which the enemy despairing of otherwise effecting their object, had brought up 6 guns to bear upon us,) we took measures to evacuate the Agency. Capt. Conway called in his posts, and all being united, retired in a body, covered by a few skirmishers, as deliberately as on parade, (carrying off our slain and wounded) which, and the fire from the steam boats deterred the enemy from pressing us as they might have done. All being embarked, I then directed Mr. Acting Commander Miller, commanding the Satellite steamer, to proceed with his vessel to the wood station, three miles up the river on the opposite bank, to secure a sufficiency of fuel for our purposes ere it should be destroyed by the enemy, while I remained with the Planet to take off the barge that was moored to the shore. This being a work of some time, during which a hot fire was opened on the vessel from three guns which the enemy brought to bear on her, beside small arms, and requiring much personal exposure of the crew (especially of Mr. Cole, the Commander of the vessel.) I deem it my duty to bring to your favourable notice their zealous exertions on the occasion, and also to express my obligations to Messrs. Miller and Cole, for the flanking fire they maintained on the enemy during their attack on the Agency, and for their support during the retirements and embarkation of the troops. The Satellite was also exposed to three guns in her progress up to the woods and station, one of which she dismounted by her fire. The vessels were followed by large bodies of the enemy for about three miles, occasionally opening their guns upon us to no purpose; since then we have pursued our voyage up the Indus about fifteen miles without molestation; and purpose to-morrow morning anchoring off Muttarie, where I expect to find your camp. Our casualties amount to two men of H. M. 22d regiment, and one camp follower killed; and Mr. Conductor Kiely, Mr. Carlisle, Agency clerk, two of the steamer's crew, four of H. M. 22d regiment, and two camp followers wounded, and four camp followers missing.

Total, three killed, ten wounded, and four missing.

KISHNAGHUR RELIEF FUND.

In submitting the subjoined Statement for the information of the public, and especially of those friends who have so kindly supported the Kishnaghur Relief Fund, the Secretary begs to offer his warmest thanks for the aid already obtained, and performs a pleasing duty in being able to assure them that the fund has been the means of alleviating much misery, under the Superintendence of the Reverend Missionaries in the district, during periods of inundation and epidemic sickness; and has afforded comfortable subsistence to many families who without it would doubtless have been reduced to distitution. In the name of the Committee, the Secretary earnestly solicits a continuation of public support to enable him to carry out future plans of pecuniary relief, and will most thankfully receive the smallest donations which the friends of the Relief Fund may be pleased to entrust to his care for transmission to the Missionaries.

REPORT ON THE APPLICATION OF RAILWAY COMMUNICATION IN INDIA.

Having during my residence in England on Furlough paid particular attention to the subject of Railway communication, I have done so solely with a view of ascertaining whether this mode of transit can be adopted in India with any probability of success; and in committing to paper my views on the subject for submission to the Honourable Court of Directors of the East India Company I have to state that I have only consulted authentic sources for the information obtained, and the statements of cost are taken from the most liberal estimates while the statements of traffic are under-rated if anything; but better information on this point can be acquired in India.

2. I have assumed that if a Railway is constructed, it will be done in the most efficient manner, capable of transporting the whole traffic of the country which I think I shall be able to shew it can do as cheap as the present water communication.

3. The line along which I would propose to construct a Railway would be, the present water communication from Calcutta to the Upper Provinces, starting from Calcutta and proceeding along the left bank of the River Hooghly through Barrackpore, Kishennuggar, Moorshedabad, thus passing through a rich silk and indigo District; from Moorshedabad the line would proceed still along the left bank of the River Hooghly here called the Bhaugaretty to Jungypore, at or near which it would cross the Bhaugaretty, and thence pursuing the track of what is called the old road to Benares, would arrive at Rajhmal having continued to pass through a District productive of Silk and Indigo; from Rajhmal the line would proceed along the foot of the Rajhmal Hills through Sielygully to Bhaulpore and thence on through Monghyr and the Behar District to Patna, Districts productive of Indigo, Opium, Sugar, Saltpetre, &c. besides supplying Calcutta with grain and sheep; from Patna continuing on the south or right bank of the Ganges the line would cross the River Soane, pass through the Districts of Arrah and Buxar, and then crossing the Ganges a little below Benares would arrive at that important city; from which it would continue along the north or left bank of the Ganges till it again crossed the River at Allahabad from which the line might proceed higher or not through the centre of the Dooab.

4. It may be said that a water communication already exists, but it will be found that all the successful railways in England are on those lines where communication existed before, and as a proof that the water communication is not sufficient, it is only necessary to refer to the project for a canal from the Ganges at Rajhmal to the River Hooghly already surveyed and estimated for.

5. Branches might be advantageously made from several points, as found necessary; one from a little below Kishennuggur to proceed across the River Hooghly into the Burdwan coal District, another from near Benares to the large commercial Town of Mirzapore.

6. The above is, of course only a general idea of what the line would be, for until the country is accurately examined and surveyed with a view to lay out a line of communication it would be ridiculous to attempt to lay down the exact course the line would take.

7. That this line of country affords every facility for forming a Railway will, I think, be allowed by every one acquainted with it. It is only necessary to state that from Calcutta to Rajhmal a distance of 200 miles it passes through the Delta of the Ganges, and that in the survey undertaken under the superintendance of General Macleod and Major Forbes, with a view to construct a canal from Rajhmal to the Hooghly River, it was ascertained that the fall in the distance of 120 miles proposed for the canal was only 30 feet, as will be seen in the Report by those Officers of the 15th February 1841; and as there are no difficulties in the way of high lands for the canal to contend with, none need be anticipated for a line of railroad; from Rajhmal along the Banks of the Ganges, with the exception of one point where a [illegible] from the Rajhmal Hills extends into the [illegible] at Sielygully, no difficulty occurs; indeed the only engineering difficulties at all would be the passage of the rivers, and these I trust would [illegible] shewn not to be insurmountable, for it has already been proposed to build bridges over the rivers Jumna and Ganges at Delhi, Agra, Allahabad and Benares; and plans and estimates for a masonry bridge across the Jumna at Delhi were in preparation when I was at that station; besides the bridges could be built of sufficient width to allow of the construction of another road along side the portion marked off for the rails, for the passage of the ordinary traffic of the country.

8. In estimating the expense, I would premise that I have calculated on laying down a double line of the best and strongest construction capable of carrying the heaviest loads of merchandize, as from this the returns are chiefly expected.

9. In the anylysis made of the expenditure on the different lines of railways in England, it will be found that the expenses are divided under the different heads of

1. Parliamentary Expenses.
2. Land and Compensation.
3. Works.
4. Permanent way (timber, rails, &c.)
5. Engineering and Surveying.
6. Law charges—conveyancing—Landvaluers.
7. Stamps for debentures.
8. Office expenses, Direction salaries, &c.

Now in constructing a railway in India, items Nos. 1, 6, 7 and 8 may be entirely struck out, No. 2 would be very little, and we should have to consider first No. 3, viz. works, which means all the earth work and bridges, and fencing on each side of the line; and this as regards expense can have no comparison with any line in England; the earthwork in the line proposed would be very little and I think, I may safely say, that the earthwork and ballasting for the rails, will be much the same as the construction of the grand trunk road in India, which consists of an earthen road 30 feet wide on an average 3 feet high. with a portion 16 feet wide metalled, the metalling being one foot deep; the cost of the trunk road including the small bridges, but exclusive of the bridges over the large rivers and Engineer Officers' salaries, is under 2500 Rupees a mile; the fencing, which must be strong enough to keep out cattle, will cost 1000 Rupees a mile. The large bridges will be a heavy item which cannot be estimated without a proper survey of the line, but if laid down at 2500 a mile, will I think include every large bridge required over the Ganges, Soane and all smaller rivers —making altogether 6,000 rupees a mile for works.

10. The permanent way, meaning the sleepers and rails, cannot be estimated to be done cheaper in India than in England. The sleepers will require to be kyanised (but if kyanising is not found to resist the while ants, it will be necessary to use stone blocks, or perhaps to use Reynolds cast Iron sleeper) and their cost will be two rupees each, and as 3520 are required in a mile of double line, the cost of these will be 7040 rupees a mile; the rails should be of the full weight of 65lbs. to the yard, and the cost will be £12 or 120 rupees a ton, making 24,000 rupees a mile; then the chairs, pins, and wedges for fastening down the rails, and labour in doing so, about 6600 rupees a mile, making a total of 37,640 rupees a mile.

11. The remaining item of Engineering and Surveying, would be very small and might be put down as 360 rupees a mile, thus making for the total cost of the Railway.

|---|---|
| Work, ................ | 6000 rupees a mile. |
| Permanent way,......... | 37,640 |
| Engineering & Surveying, | 360 |
| Total ........ | 44,000 Rs. a mile. |

12. Before considering the returns, perhaps it will be as well to see at what rate goods and passengers can be conveyed. The principal Railways in England may be safely consulted for the cost of conveyance, and in referring to the statements of the London and Birmingham, and Great Western Railways, for the half year ending December 1841, it will be seen that the expenditure is about 36 per cent (viz. London and Birmingham 35, Great Western 37,) on the receipts, but this includes milage duty, rates and taxes, amounting to 55 per cent. so that the actual expences for Locomotion establishments and maintenance of way may be said to be 30 per cent on the receipts, and as the charges are limited to 2d. a mile a passenger and 2d. a mile a ton for goods; it may be assumed that to cover the charges that would be applicable to India, where fuel is cheaper and many goods would be conveyed several hundred miles without packing or unpacking, a material item in the cost; 30 per cent of 2d. or 0·6 of a penny a mile per ton a passenger would pay the current expenses after the line was complete, and any charge above this would go to repay the capital expended. Therefore if a charge of a penny a mile per ton of goods or per passenger be taken as the sum to be charged, it will leave 40 per cent. of the receipts for the payment of interest on the capital expended.

13. The present cost of conveyance of goods in India way be stated as follows; a four bullock hackery is loaded by the Commissariat with 30 maunds, and travels on an average 12 miles a day, its hire being 1 Rupee a day—this is 30 maunds at 80lbs. a maund equal 1 ton 1 cwt. 48lbs. carried 12 miles for 2*s*. or 24 pence = 1*d*.808 a mile a ton, so there can be little doubt but that a charge of 1*d*. a mile a ton would bring all goods now conveyed by land, to the railway.

14. The Iron Steamers on the Ganges charge 1½ rupee a cubic foot from Calcutta to Allahabad, which at 50 cubic feet a ton is 75 Rupees, or £7-10 a ton, the distance being about 500 miles in a direct, or 600 miles in the course to be taken by the proposed line of railway would give at the latter distance 3*d*. a ton a mile. All goods now conveyed by these vessels would therefore naturally come to the Railway.

15. In the Commissary General's letter to Capt. Johnson, Superintendent of Steamers in Bengal, appended to Captain Johnson's Report on the Iron Steamers and Flats on the Ganges the cost of conveyance by country boats is given; to Allahabad for instance in the favourable season of the year for boats going up the river the charges are stated as follows:

|---|---|---|---|
| A 600 maund boat to Allahabad hire for 2½ months, ...... Rupees, | 122 | 8 | 0 |
| 1 Peon for Ditto, ............... | 12 | 8 | 0 |

which taking the distance as before at 600 miles, and 28 maunds to a ton (the maund being equal to 80lbs.) will give 0.252*d*. a mile a ton, a sum considerably less than what the railway must charge, but all goods going by boats on the Ganges are liable to loss from wrecks and damage from leakage, which they would not be by the railway, and the Insurance to cover these risks is very high—to Allahabad for instance the rate is I believe as high as 5 per cent.; consequently the cost of transporting goods by water is considerably increased by the Insurance. If for instance the value of the articles conveyed be 12 Rupees a maund, and this value will include cotton, sugar and wool, the insurance on a 600 maunds boats of such goods at 5 per cent. would be $\frac{5}{100}$ + 600 × 12 = 360 Rupees, which being added to the freight above stated, viz. 135, would give 495 Rupees for the actual cost of conveying 600 maunds of goods of the value of 12 Rupees a maund 600 miles equal to 0.925*d*. a ton, a mile; so I think it may be concluded, considering the quickness of transit, that all goods above the value of 12 Rupees a maund, and this includes sugar and cotton, would be conveyed by railway in preference to country boats.

16. With regard to passengers the only means of conveyance now are by dak (travelling in a palanquin) at a charge of half a rupee or 1 shilling a mile; or proceeding by the flats tugged by the Iron Steamers up the Ganges to Allahabad, at a charge of 200 rupees the trip with the privilege of taking one servant, or creeping up in a country at about the same charge but a longer time, so there is little doubt but that all passengers who now use these means of conveyance would come to this channel of communication

17. It may be as well to shew the cost of conveying troops by water, assuming that a detachment of European troops are proceeding by water from Calcutta to Allahabad we have as given above the cost of a 600 maund boat for the trip, 135 rupees, and as each European (vide pay and audit regulations, page 88,) is allowed 50 maunds tonnage, such a boat would convey 12 men; supposing the detachment to consist of 300 men, it would require 25 such boats—besides boat allowance to the Officers in charge of such a detachment the number of which (vide pay and audit regulations, page 72,) would be 1 Field Officer, 3 Captains, and 10 Subalterns, and a Surgeon. The cost then of a detachment of 300 men proceeding by water to Allahabad would be as follows.

| Boat Allowance to 1 Field Officer (say a Major) for 2½ months at 360 .... ... .. | 900 |
| Boat allowance to 3 Captains for 2½ months at 180 ... .. ... .. .. .. | 1350 |
| Do. Do. 10 Subalterns at 100 | 2500 |
| Do. Do. 1 Surgeon at 180 | 450 |
| 25 600 maund boats for men, ... .. .. | 3375 |
| Rupees | 8575 |

and if to this is added, the boats for the accommodation of the sick, row boats, and storeboat, the amount will be considerably increased, without taking into consideration the extra establishments proceeding with such a detachment, whereas the cost of conveying such a detachment by the Railway at a penny a head a mile for 600 miles would only be £750 or 7500 rupees.

18. The cost of extra establishments with European Troops marching, I cannot so accurately state, but it will be found I think to exceed the cost at which they could be transported by railway.

19. The cost of the construction of the Railway having been estimated as above at 44,000 rupees a mile, or allowing for contingencies, &c, 50,000 a mile, to give a return of 5 per cent. on the capital expended would require a sufficient number of passengers and quantity of goods to yield a profit equal to 2500 rupees a mile a year; then saying that the charge of one penny a mile a ton or passenger would yield 40 per cent. as shewn in para. 18 towards payment of capital, after the payment of current expenses, it would require such a number of tons of goods or passengers as there are 2-5 or 40 per cent. of a penny, in 2500 rupees, which will be taking the rupee at 2s. or 24 pence 2500 × 24 ÷ 5 = 150,000.

20. In the Report on the Rajmhal canal by Major General Macleod and Major Forbes, dated 15th February 1841, it is stated in paragraph 47 "that the receipts of toll for one year on the Nuddeah Rivers at the rate of one rupee, per 100 maunds amounted to 150,000 rupees, and this whilst two of the Rivers were only passable for dinghees (the smallest description of boats and the third was only navigable for the smaller description of cargo boats" thus shewing that (the ton being equal to 28 maunds) 160,000 + 100 ÷ 28 = 5,35,714 tons passed along a portion of the proposed line, and this was only a part of the traffic on the Ganges as none but small boats could pass through these Rivers.

21. In the Parliamentary paper entitled "Report on India produce, ordered to be printed on the 21st July 1840," the following are the quantities of the principal articles exported from Calcutta annually, viz.

|---|---|
| Cotton, .... | 3,00,000 Maunds. |
| Grain, .... | 20,00,000 |
| Indigo, .... | 100,000 |
| Sugar, .... | 8,00,000 |
| Saltpetre, .. | 5,00,000 |
| Opium, .... | 60,000 |
| Silk, ...... | 14,000 |
| Silk and Cotton pieces | 300,000 |
| | 100,000 |
| | 4,174,000 maunds which at 28 |

Maunds to a ton will equal 150,000 tons. Again there are the imports and internal traffic of which I have at present no means of making a correct estimate.

22. The quantity of salt sold in Calcutta averages 4,500,000 maunds as stated in the "Report on Salt ordered by the House of Commons to be printed on the 2nd August 1836," and a considerable portion of this proceeds up the country and would pay the expense of Railway carriage as it is very liable to damage from leakage in water carriage.

23. The number of travellers I have no means of estimating beyond the Europeans, who form such a small portion of the community; and therefore will not attempt to shew what the returns would be from this source without further information on the subject.

24. I trust that in the above I have shewn the feasibility of constructing a railway in India with the probability of its amply repaying the expense of construction, and should the Honourable Court think fit to direct further enquiry to be made in India on the subject, and a survey of the country to be undertaken to ascertain the best course for such a communication as well as to prepare estimates of the cost, I would beg to offer my services for the duty in case they are not required in the Military line on my return to India, and would be happy at once to submit an estimate of probable expense of such a survey and enquiry.

COLONEL STODDART AND CAPT. CONOLLY.

The sad fate of Colonel Stoddart and Capt. Conolly has been made the theme of several paragraphs in the papers lately, and we are very much obliged to a friend (lately a Captive himself) for the following particulars relating to the unfortunates. Government either at home or abroad have no reason to pride themselves upon their conduct in this sad affair. Even whilst we write and when a portion of the following relation is in type, a gleam of hope arises from letters received by some Moollahs from their Gomastas at Bokhara stating both parties to be alive, though still in confinement, no date is however given to the letter and as there are circumstances connected with the property of the parties that would render it the interest of the others to persuade the relatives of the unfortunates that they are still alive, we fear that Sir John McNeil's letter to our Government must contain the truth. Fervently do we hope that the latter tale is a correct one, but we will give our correspondent's communication.

"As I have observed no mention in your paper of the sad intelligence lately received in an official form, by the Governor General, from Sir John McNeil, regarding our unfortunate countrymen, Charles Stoddart and Arthur Conolly, the following brief details may not be unacceptable to your readers. After a protracted confinement in a loathsome dungeon had so seriously impaired their health as to render their speedy dissolution nearly certain, it seems they were led out for execution before the assembled populace of Bokhara. They were then offered their lives on condition of embracing the Mahomedan faith. This they nobly refused to do, and were immediately beheaded, preferring rather to die as martyrs than to live as renegades. I knew them both intimately, and they were men whom to know was to admire, to honor, and to love. Of the many valuable lives, which have fallen a sacrifice to our ill-advised Affghan policy, I know of none that may be more truly characterized as a public loss.

Lieutenant Colonel Charles Stoddart distinguished himself at the very outset of life by his extraordinary attainments at Sandhurst, where he carried off the first prizes in every department of knowledge and science studied at that institution, and, as the highest reward the Government could bestow, he was honoured with a commission in the Royal Staff corps. After serving with considerable distinction in various parts of the globe, he was selected to accompany Colonel Chesney's expedition to the Euphrates, the result of which is already well known. Shortly after his return to England he was attached to the suite of the British Embassador about to sail for Persia, as Secretary of Legation. In Persia by his mental acquirements, his nobility of soul, his generous chivalry, aided by his commanding stature and soldierly bearing, he speedily won the esteem and regard of the King and people, and, with a view to placing before the aspiring young Monarch some bright exemplars for imitation, he laboriously translated into the Persian language the lives of many of the most eminent public characters in ancient and modern times. On the invasion of Affghanistan by our army he was dispatched by Sir John McNeil on a mission to the Court of Bokhara, the principal object of which was to negociate for the liberation of any Russian slaves that might be there lingering out a wearisome existence.

This was indeed an employment well suited to one of his benevolent enthusiasm of character, and, regardless of all personal risks, he faithfully pleaded the cause of human suffering in the very presence of the tyrannical despot of the modern Bactria. The result was disastrous to himself and useless to the victims whose cause he advocated. All attempts at reasoning, apart from any appeal to self interest, was utterly thrown away upon a monster whose mind was debased to a level with the brutes by habits of debauchery too gross and degarding to be named to Christian ears. Many days had not elapsed ere poor Stoddart's independent bearing having wounded the barbarian's pride, he was suddenly seized and consigned to a dark disgusting den, filled with vermin, filth and noxious reptiles, where besides suffering grievous bodily torments he was exposed to every species of insult and disgrace from the bigotted populace. It may not be generally known that Mahomed Ukbur Khan was for many days a tenant of the same prison with him, but managed to effect his escape. He always spoke of Stoddart in terms of high admiration, and I really believe felt for him a genuine attachment.

At length, a grave having been dug, Stoddart was placed within it and told that his choice lay between being immediately buried alive or pronouncing the Kulima-i-Shuhadut, or Mahomedan creed, adopting thenceforth the laws of Islam for those of Christ. Weakened by long fasting and the sufferings he had undergone, and naturally shrinking from so horrible an alternative as that placed before him, let not us, his fellow Christians, who have never ourselves been called upon to endure so trying an ordeal, be too ready to condemn our gallant countryman if, for once, the love of life prevailed, and his strong mind gave way in circumstances where perhaps few would have been found to hesitate for a moment. His life was spared, and, having been clothed in a dress of honour, he was at once advanced by the fickle tyrant to a post of dignity and confidence. But, like the venerable Cranmer, after a similar act of temporary weakness, his life was embittered by remorse for what so many would deem a venial offence, but which his well tutored mind, weighing the act in the scales of eternity, viewed in a far different aspect; and it has been seen how, at a subsequent period, when again called upon to choose between life and death, he held fast his profession, and enrolled his name in the noble army of Christian martyrs.

On my arrival at Cabul in April 1841, I opened a correspondence with this friend of my early days, and received from him a reply, which, for depth of feeling, manliness of sentiment, and liveliness of wit and fancy. was eminently characteristic of the writer's mind. At that time he was living in tolerable comfort, being in high favour with the king, who had even consented to his leaving the country. Of this he assured me it was his intention to avail himself shortly; his sole object in delaying his departure for a single day, being to forward the views of the British Government by acquiring valuable information, and extending the influence of our name. Hopes, alas! never to be realized. On the news of the Cabul insurrection, and the successes of the Affghan rebels reaching the king, Mahomedan bigotry at once prevailed over every other feeling, and poor Stoddart was a second time consigned to a miserable dungeon.

Let me now turn to Arthur Conolly. This officer's name has already become famous throughout the civilized world from his most interesting personal narrative of an overland journey to India via Russia, Persia, and Affghanistan. The same spirit of enterprize which he then exhibited in so favourable a light, animated and influenced him to the last. The situation of Political Assistant to his illustrious relative, Sir Wm. Macnaghten, opened a fine field for his ambition, which, tempered as it was by a generous spirit of universal benevolence, continually prompted him to devise schemes for the moral amelioration of Toorkistan, into which country he was sent on a mission, and whence he, from time to time, forwarded to Government most valuable and interesting information, illustrative of the manners, laws, and customs of the people, which, it is to be hoped, will ere long be laid before the public.

He was diligently pursuing his investigation in the country of Kokan when he received a flattering invitation from the king of Bokhara to visit his capital, to be present at a feast. Ignorant of the unfavourable turn in our affairs at Cabul, and anxious, of all things, to have a personal interview with Col. Stoddart, with whom he had been long in constant correspondence, he accepted an invitation which seemed so complimentary to our nation, and little suspecting the black treachery that lurked beneath the surface. No sooner had he entered the Bokhara territory than he was seized and thrust into the dismal cell, of which poor Stoddart was a forlorn occupant. Well was it for Arthur Conolly that he had long accustomed his mind to lean for support on the never-failing prop of Christian faith in every exigency. Well was it for Stoddart, that in the hour of his greatest need, a friend should, in so unlooked for a manner, have been raised up to sustain his drooping spirit, and animate him afresh for the fearful conflict between human frailty and Christian duty. That these two brethren in adversity, were a mutual support and comfort to each other in circumstances of extraordinary suffering, was apparent from the two letters received at Cabul in the summer of 1842, by John Conolly, (then a hostage in the house of Nuwab Zeman Khan,) from his brother Arthur, which the latter had prevailed on one of his keepers to forward. In the first letter he mentioned that Stoddart and himself had then been eighty days without change of raiment, in the heated and deadly atmosphere of a small dark den that teemed with vermin. In his second and last letter they had been one hundred and twenty days in a similar state. Stoddart, the noble and manly Stoddart, was described as wasted to a skeleton, his body almost naked and covered with sores, into which he was perpetually digging his long overgrown nails for relief against the noxious vermin that were literally gnawing his raw sides. They had both just risen from their knees, having committed their souls to God in the full expectation, that a very short time would probably terminate their sufferings. Shortly after General Pollock's arrival at Cabul, reports were rife that Conolly had died a natural death; but this is now contradicted by the recent account received from Sir John McNeil, by which it would appear that a more honourable fate was reserved for these two intrepid sons of Britain, even that of sealing their testimony to the Christian faith, in the very stronghold of Mahomed, with their own blood. As Christians we have grounds for thankfulness that the honour of our religion has been thus upheld by two such worthy voteries; but, as Englishmen, how humiliating that a petty barbarian of Central Asia should thus presume to set at naught our power—that he should triumph unpunished—that they should perish unavenged!"—Delhi Gazette, March 8.

RELIGIOUS.

THE SCOTTISH CHURCH.—The Patron and Presentee of the parish of Auchterarder have applied to the Court of Session, "to have it found and declared," that the minority of the Presbytery of Auchterarder, "who are willing to obey the law," may "legally and effectually" take Mr. Young on trial, and

"if qualified, admit and receive him to the benefice." The case came before the Lord Ordinary on the 6th of December, who gave it as his opinion, that "the conclusions of the action were well founded, and the decree, with expenses, ought to be pronounced in terms thereof." But, there being several new points involved in the action, His Lordship thought it advisable, in the circumstances, to report it to the Inner House. The Interlocutor is accompanied by an elaborate Note, in which the respective jurisdictions of the Civil and Ecclesiastical Courts are so clearly and forcibly stated, that it is impossible to resist the conclusion, that, if the claims to exclusive and spiritual jurisdiction now put forth by the Non intrusionists of the Church of Scotland, were granted, the civil and religious interests of the community would be seriously endangered.

The Defenders in the present case, it seems, whilst they deny that the Supreme Court of Scotland has any right to interpret the statutes touching ecclesiastical affairs, allege, that the Supreme Civil Courts of England possess that right solely because the King is the Head of the Church; while it is added, "that every such right of the Sovereign over the Scottish Church was cut off by statute, at the Revolution."

In reply to this, Lord Cunningham thus forcibly observes:—

"Now, whatever may be the difference between the constitution and the principles of the English and the Scottish Churches, the proposition that the English Civil Courts derive their power of expounding the statutes from the position of the Sovereign as Head of the Church, is a theory utterly at variance both with law and with history. The reverse is laid down by every authority of any value on the question. Mr. Hallam, in his 'Constitutional History of England,' adverts repeatedly to the subject; and he shows, with his usual accuracy, (vol. i. p. 440, 441,) that the clergy of England,' both before and after the Reformation, made different attempts to oust the jurisdiction of the temporal Courts, and to put themselves solely under the spiritual Courts, on this very ground, that the King was their Head, and, therefore, that the spiritual excluded the temporal Courts; but the Judges uniformly resisted that pretence; and, even when they were too subservient to the reigning Sovereign on other points, Mr. Hallam remarks, that they earned some confidence and gratitude from the nation for their firmness in opposing every excess of power by the clergy. They adhered rigidly, and in spite of the orders and intrigues of Cranmer in one era, and of Laud in another, to the great constitutional principle, that they were the legitimate expounders of the law."

There is much truth in these remarks; but, while we denounce the principle of exclusiveness and ascendancy, which the Non-intrusionists are seeking to establish in Scotland, we could wish to see the power of the Ecclesiastical Courts of England curtailed, and their jurisdiction "under the King as the Head of the Church on earth," limited to "proper spiritual causes," and pronounced more frequently than they are "within their statutory authority." The exclusive demands of the sister Establishment on the other side the Tweed, find but too much sympathy in the constitution of the Church of England; and, therefore, the less said on that topic the better.

But, arbitrary and oppressive as the Ecclesiastical Courts of the Church of England are, an obnoxious Presentee has a better chance of getting justice than he could have under Non-intrusion law in Scotland; for, says the Lord Ordinary:—

"If the English practice may be referred to, it is understood that any candidate for holy orders in England, when refused ordination by one Bishop, may apply to another, who is not precluded from giving ordination, if he find the candidate qualified. In other respects, ordination in England and Scotland are essentially different rites. In England, ordination is given by the Bishops as the successors, in an unbroken line of descent, from the Apostles; and a peculiar spiritual effect is supposed to attend ordination when received from Episcopal authority. The Presbyterians, however, disclaim that doctrine, and at first rejected even the simple ceremonial of the imposition of hands by the co-presbyters.—See 'First Book of Discipline,' chap. 4, § 10. No doubt, the 'Second Book of Discipline,' published in 1578, directed imposition of hands as a ceremony probably agreeable to the feelings of the people; but even that was repugnant to the earlier Presbyters, as Dr. M'Crie, in his 'Life of Knox,' informs us, that, 'in common with all the original Reformers, he (Knox) rejected the necessity of Episcopal ordination, as totally unauthorised by the laws of Christ; nor did he even regard the imposition of the hands of Presbyters as a rite essential to the validity of orders, or of necessary observance in all circumstances of the Church!'"

According to Drs. Cunningham and Candlish, there can be no collation without ordination; and ordination, being essentially a spiritual act, the Civil Courts dare not interfere with it. Hence, the spiritual independence of the Church! John Knox thought differently; and we agree with him; but Dr. Pusey and his quondam brethren of the "Reformed Catholic Church in Scotland," will sympathise with the new notions; and we may congratulate Dr. Chalmers on his Oxford allies. Denounce Puseyism as they may, the Non-intrusionists of Scotland are contending for principles that are viciously Popish at the core; and, bad as Romanism is, we would much rather have the Popery of the Church of Rome, in its voluntary isolation, than the Popery of Protestantism, fed and fostered by State support.

In the course of the Non-intrusion controversy, the appeals that have been made to the Great Head of the Church Universal, as pre-eminently the approver of the Non-intrusion movement, have been bold and reckless in the extreme. Lord Cunningham alludes to that topic; and the remarks of the Learned Judge upon the Jus Divinum pretensions of the Non-instrusionists, are exceedingly severe, but not more severe than just and seasonable.

"In so far, then, as the Established Church is connected with the State by special statute, it cannot, it is supposed, be maintained, that the Scottish Presbytery have any peculiar privilege interpretation of statutes, as the servants of the Divine Head of the Church. Although much declamation is sometimes resorted to in popular harangues on this subject, it is not distinctly asserted in the pleadings before the Court, that, because Our Saviour is the spiritual Head of the Kirk, their office-bearers have a peculiar gift of discovering mind of Christ in their interpretation of the mere statutes of the Legislature. Such a pretension could only rest on an assumption of infallibility or inspiration, and would open a door for the grossest imposture and deception. If admitted, it would be placing the Church again above the law, and depriving the country of one of the most valuable fruits of the Reformation. Dr. M'Crie, in his 'Life of Knox,' states, that the claim of the Catholic Church to have their sentences blindly enforced, whether legal or illegal, early attracted the notice of sagacious men in the dawn of the Reformation; and he gives great credit (vol. i. p. 8) to John Major, the tutor of Knox, who was one of the first to maintain 'that ecclesiastical censures, and even Papal excommunications, had no force, if pronounced on irrelevant grounds.'"

The Note concludes thus:—

"In proposing that the jurisdiction of this Court shall be sustained on the present occasion, it is hardly necessary to advert to the apprehension repeatedly expressed by the defenders, that the Ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Kirk, as settled at the Revolution, may be encroached on. It is sufficient to answer, that, in the present question, and in others which have preceded it, the Civil and Ecclesiastical Courts were placed, as they generally must be, in very different positions. There was nothing ultroneous on the part of the Court in any process instituted before them, or in any judgment pronounced by them. These proceedings were not created or sought by them. It was established in the previous branches of the Auchterarder case, that the Church, in the supposed exercise of their Legislative powers, enacted some time ago new laws, affecting the rights of patrons and presentees, whereby they altered the law of the land as it stood on the statute-book, and had been enforced for ages; while they, at the same time, inflicted severe and illegal sentences on their brethren who refused to join them. The parties aggrieved applied to this Court for redress and protection, and the Judges were bound by their oaths to take cognisance of their cases, and to decide them according to law. In these questions, the Church Courts were parties, not judges. When this Court, therefore, and the Court of Appeal, sustained their jurisdiction, and pronounced those decrees which the law and the constitution required at their hands, these determinations might be unpleasing to the unsuccessful litigants, but they formed no breach of the compact between Church and State at the Revolution. On the contrary, when the Ecclesiastical Courts are restrained in their excess of jurisdiction, and compelled to an implicit observance of the law, the Establishment is exempted from many hazards to which it would be exposed by the enjoyment of absolute and irresponsible power. At the same time, the firm maintenance of the law is indispensably necessary for the preservation of the civil and religious liberties of all classes of the community, and for the protection, both of the people and of the Clergy themselves, from an ecclesiastical tyranny, which, if it were riveted on the country, would be as fatal to the religious interests, as it would be to the peace and well-being of society."

These arguments are unanswerable. An imperium in imperio we cannot recognise; and, if the Non-intrusionists were truly honest, straightforward, and sincere in their efforts to realise spiritual independence, instead of wasting time and money, and exposing themselves to the scorn and contempt of the world, by seeking to carry out their principles in connection with the State Establishment, they would burst their bonds asunder, and boldly say, "We're free!"—Pat.

SINCERITY OF THE NONINTRUSIONISTS.—SIR,—Will you permit me to express my regret, that you have been unable to accord the meed of sincerity to the men engaged in the Nonintrusion Controversy in Scotland? I have sometimes thought, that the manner in which they have been spoken of in your columns, was intended merely to goad them onwards to decision; but again I have imagined, that, as this course involved an absence of sincerity on your part, it could not possibly be the real one.

It is not probable, certainly, that we shall see, in the first instance, such results as we, who have been schooled into our principles by some centuries of hard discipline, might desire; but imperfect knowledge does not involve hypocrisy, and the Nonintrusionists may be acting with absolute honesty up to the extent of their information. Nothing in their published documents appears to me to be fairly calculated to bring their motives into question; and, from personal acquaintance with several of the leading men in the Controversy, I have, on my own part, no hesitation in concluding favourably of their sentiments. During a prolonged tour in Scotland this last summer, I was repeatedly thrown into the most unreserved intercourse with the Clergy, and particularly with some individuals who are reckoned to have the almost entire moral control of the Nonintrusion movement; and, although our views did not, in all points, agree, either as to the nature of the Christian church, or as to the state of religious parties in England, there was left on my mind, as a mere observer, no more doubt of the integrity with which they adhered to their published principles, no more doubt that the majority of them were prepared to carry out those principles at all hazards, than of the fact that such is really the duty of honest men. I have reason to know that efforts, strictly private, are already in progress for the building of places of worship, for provision for families, and for sundry domestic movements, which bear on them, to my mind, the unquestionable features of sincerity. Four hundred, it appears, have already publicly signed resolutions pledging themselves to retire from the Establishment if their Memorial remains unheeded. All I would say is, Let us judge charitably. If they do prove to be true men, men whose consciences render them superior to the temporal advantages proposed by an Establishment, men who are prepared to encounter vast immediate inconveniences, and in some instances, probably, great deprivation in the pursuit even of imperfect views, it will not be a pleasant reflection that we withheld our sympathy from them in the crisis of their struggle

With much regard and esteem,

Liverpool, Dec. 21, 1842. A DISSENTER.

SILESIA.—Great sensation has been excited by the conversion of several Roman Catholic families at Landeck to the Protestant religion. The ceremony of receiving them into Protestant communion took place, a short time ago, in the church of Gabelschevert. It is the more remarkable, as it occurred in a strictly Roman Catholic district, and in a place where the newly-appointed Bishop of Breslaw, Dr. Kraner, was formerly parish priest. Real conviction seems to be the only cause of this step, from which not the slightest temporal advantage is likely to accrue.—Ibid.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE BISHOP OF WINCHESTER AND ST. SAVIOUR'S SCHOOL.—The following statement appears in the Chronicle of this morning:—"The committee for conducting the proposed performance of sacred music as St. Saviour's church, Southwark, for the benefit of the parochial children, having observed a statement in the Morning Chronicle, that the Bishop of Winchester (after having been informed, in reply to a previous inquiry, that the amount expected to have been raised by the proposed performance for the school, would have been from 150*l.* to 200*l.*) had generously given the larger sum, 200*l.*, in order that the funds of the schools should not suffer from his having prevented the performance taking place; and also that such statement had been afterwards copied into other newspapers without contradiction, were surprised at not having themselves heard, directly or indirectly, from the bishop as to the same, and awaited, with great anxiety, the meeting of the boys' school committee—that having been the place where the bishop's letter, interdicting the performance, was made known. This meeting took place last night. No money, however, was forthcoming, nor was any one prepared to confirm the alleged munificent gift of the bishop. It now, therefore, only remains for the committee to give a total denial to the statement contained in your paper, as to the gift of the Bishop of Winchester of 200*l.* to the schools; the fact being, that the committee have not received one shilling towards the expenses incurred by them.—St. Saviour's, Southwark, Jan. 4, 1843."—[NOTE OF THE EDITOR.—The statement was copied by us from the Standard.]

MILDNESS OF THE SEASON.—As a proof of the extraordinary mildness of the season, we may state, that Bishop Philpotts received, with comparative calmness, the news that the Privy Council had adjudged him to pay his own costs in the appeal of Mr. Head, the Rector of Feniton.—True Tablet.

NEW YEAR'S EVE AT HANWELL.—Five years ago, benevolence prompted the present matron of the Middlesex Pauper Lunatic Asylum, at Han-well, (Mrs. Bowden), to make an attempt to diffuse some of the joyousness of the Christian festival amongst a selection of the inmates of that institution, and the experiment being perfectly successful, has been repeated from year to year. Nearly three hundred of the female patients in Hanwell, for the most part the incurably insane, were thus assembled together on the eve of the present new year (Saturday last.) The females, all neatly dressed, were assembled shortly before five, and ranged, as they arrived, on seats placed on each side of one of the long galleries, profusely decorated and festooned with evergreens. Pendent lamps of the same were suspended from the ceiling, which, with other lights attached to the walls, produced a pleasing and scenic effect. After the patients had partaken of tea and cake, they mingled in the dance with the attendants, to the music of a pianoforte transferred to the gallery for the occasion. At half-past eight, warm spiced beer, an orange, and a piece of cake, were distributed to each patient; after which, the Evening Hymn was sung, and at nine they all retired in the most orderly manner, and expressing their cordial thanks and best wishes to the officers and visitors who surrounded them.—Pat.

THE MODEL PRISON, PENTONVILLE.—The dietary rules and regulations for the government of this criminal establishment having at length received the approval of the Secretary of State, it is now definitively settled that the prison shall be tenanted by the prisoners who may be convicted of felony, and receive the sentence of seven years' transportation at the ensuing Epiphany sessions, which commence generally throughout the country at the beginning of next week. By the rules of the prison, the term of captivity will extend from two to three years, but this will in a great measure depend upon the good conduct of the convict, for in case of refractory behaviour he will be at once removed from Pentonville to the hulks, to undergo the full term of his sentence. The convicts will be employed in various useful trades, for which purpose each cell is provided with gas, which is so arranged as to afford a good and sufficient light. The hours of labour are from 6 in the morning until 9 in the evening in the summer, and from 7 until 8 o'clock in winter. The convict dress is dark grey, with the letters "P. P." embroidered in red on the collar. A county gaol upon the same plan as the Model Prison is forthwith to be erected at Reading, and a similar one at Gloucester, whilst a third is now nearly ready for occupation at Bath.—Ibid.

STATE OF TRADE.—On Saturday the Liverpool cotton-brokers will make up their annual statement of imports, &c. of cotton during the year, from January to December; from sources at hand, it appears in the imports there has been an increase this year of 69,966 bales, and in the exports 16,660 bales; the increase for consumption is about 600 bales weekly.—Leeds Mercury, Dec. 31. We are happy to announce, from personal inquiry, that considerable revival of trade is visible in most of the Gloucestershire clothing districts; where a brisk demand exists for the kinds of cloth manufactured for the China trade. There is fair ground for hope, not merely that this improvement will be sustained, but that it will extend.—Devizes Gazette.

A BROAD HINT TO LANDLORDS.—At a meeting of the Gloucester Agricultural Society, held near Cirencester, Mr. Edward Bowley remarked—"A Noble Lord in a neighbouring county is reported to have said that farmers must exert themselves; that they must not stand idly by when their cart is in a hole, and call upon Jupiter for help. I quite agree with the Noble Lord that it would be useless to call upon Jupiter; but, if times should continue bad, there is another power which the farmer has some sort of right to call upon, and that is the landlord."—Pat.

WESLEYAN WORTHIES OR MINISTERIAL MISNOMERS.—(From the Stations of the Preachers for 1841-42.)

It "union is strength," or if aught's in a name,
The Wesleyan Connexion importance must claim;
For where is another—or Church, or communion—
That equals the following pastoral union:
A Dean and a Deakin, a Noble, a Squire,
An Officer, Constable, Sargeant, and Cryer,
A Collier, a Carter, a Turner, a Taylor,
A Barber, a Baker, a Miller, a Naylor,
A Walker, a Wheeler, a Waller, a Ridler,
A Fisher, a Slater, a Harpur, a Fidler,
A Pinder, a Palmer, a Shepherd, and Crook,
A Smith, and a Mason, a Carver, and Cook;
An Abbott, an Usher, a Batcheler Gay,
A Marshall, a Steward, a Knight, and a Day.
A Meyer, an Alde-mann, Burgess, and Ward,
A Wiseman, a Trueman, a Freeman, a Guard,
A Bowman, a Cheeseman, a Colman, with Slack,
A Britten, a Savage, a White, and a Black,
French, English, and Scotts—North, Southerne, and West,
Meek, Moody, and Meysey, Wilde, Giddy, and Best,
Brown, Hardy, and Ironsides, Manly, and Strong,
Lowe, Little, and Talboys, Frank, Pretty, and Young,
With Garretts, and Chambers, Halls, Temple, and Flowers,
Groves, Brooks, Banks, and Levells, Parkes, Orchards, and Bowers,
Woods, Warrens, and Burrows, Cloughs, Marshes, and Moss,
A Vine, and a Garner, a Crozier, and Cross;

With many such worthies, and others sublimber,
Including a Homer, a Pope, and A RHYMER.

—From the Almanac for the use of Methodists.

The National observes, that "the budget, which last year presented a deficit of 72,000,000f., will, notwithstanding the promises made by the Minister of Finance to reduce the national expenditure to a level with the revenue, leave this year a further deficiency of 47,000,000f. to be provided for. Thus," adds the National, "after twelveyears of a 'glorious' reign, our ordinary budget has reached the sum of 1,400,000,000f., being 500,000,000f. more than in the year 1830. It is little wonder, with these prospects, and the necessity of disposing of another third of the 450,000,000 loan, that M. Lacave Laplange should announce his wish to resign, and withdraw from the difficulties of the Finance Ministry."

The National states that it is the intention of the Government to create the Duke d'Aumale Viceroy of Algeria.—Pat.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—Cape of Good Hope Papers to the 28th of October have arrived. They mention the steady increase in the revenue receipts of the colony; the October quarter, of the present year, compared with last, showing it to be 5,711*l.* the two amounts being respectively 18,028*l.* and 12,317*l.* The pasturages had received benefit from rain. The condition of affairs on the frontier is represented as peaceable.

THE ERUPTION OF MOUNT ETNA.—The day before yesterday, passing along the Marina, or public walk that skirts the exquisitely beautiful bay of Palermo, and casting my eye over the ranges of the Madonian mountains, and beyond the picturesque hills of Termini, I saw resting above the snowy ridge of hoary-headed old Etna (which lies literally east of sunrise from here) a long line of feathery whitish cloud, which, from its peculiar tree-like shape, I knew at once to be smoke from the volcano. Accordingly, towards night, when the sun had dropped down into the bay of Mondello, a deep red lurid glare became distinctly visible at the foot of the column of smoke, and all the world was then aware that the volcano was in active operation.

This has continued ever since, dimly discernible by day in a pillar of cloud of that peculiar form which an eye experienced in eruptions instantly perceives to be the vapour from a crater—and more conspicuous by night in a body of deep red fire, of the apparent size of an ordinary haycock, but brightening and lessening fitfully with the swells and lulls of the blast of the fiery furnace.

The height of Etna is the best ascertained of any lofty mountain in the world. Caccïatore, the present Astronomer-Royal at Palermo, and our countrymen, Sir John Herschell and Captain Smyth, the celebrated trigonometrical surveyor, by processes entirely independent of and unknown to each other, all fixed it at 10,874 feet English, not differing a fathom in the three computations. So exact a coincidence, in a case in which several compensations had to be allowed for, must necessarily have been partially accidental; but as Dr. Wollaston said of it, the accident was one upon which no three fools could have stumbled. It is worth observing, that Etna, which is more than twice as high as Vesuvius, (about twice and a half higher,) has not half so large a cone of clinkers and ashes at the top, nor is its crater anything like so large or deep as that of Vesuvius, which latter is, in fact, quite a model volcano, as if made for show. Generally, in volcanoes, the height of the cone and depth of the crater are in the inverse ratio of the whole height of the mountains to which they belong. It would seem as if the expansive forces within the volcano, having a greater vertical height to work through before they reach the surface, either do not eject the scoriæ and ashes so far, or in so great quantity, or perhaps both these circumstances combine to render the hollow conical cup at the top small in diameter and shallow in depth in proportion as the general elevation of each volcanic mountain is greater.

The present great eruption of Etna (it is at this moment flaming away with undiminished brilliancy and grandeur) is the first that has been visible at Palermo since 1832. Intelligence travels slowly in Sicily, and we have not yet had any authentic advices from the scene of action. E. J.

P. S. I have just seen a letter from Riposto, within fifteen miles of the crater. The hurly-burly began its pother on Sunday night. The smoke that afternoon, and the drying up of the springs, betokened that Enceladus was getting fidgetty; and, in the dead of the night, the mountain heaved and quivered like the midships of a three-decker, when she pours her first broadside into the ribs of the enemy. A roar succeeded, louder than a thousand train of artillery, and myriads of red hot rocky fragments shot up to the heavens. No lava had yet begun to flow. Many persons here saw, or thought they saw, it floating down the flanks of the mountain to-day; but, as I do not tax my imagination for my facts, on this head I can at present tell you nothing.—Extract from a letter, dated Palermo, Dec. 1.—Pat.

PUNISHMENT OF DEATH.—The legislature of Vermont (U. S.) has passed an Act abolishing capital punishment, and substituting imprisonment during life in the Penitentiary, unless the Governor shall, after one year, issue a warrant requiring the criminal to be executed.—Montpelier Watchman

QUEEN CHRISTINA.—"It would appear," says the France, "from information derived from a good source, that Queen Christina has regularly kept, since her arrival in Spain, a journal, in which she has marked down, each day, the principal events of her political life. It appears also that Espartero, a short time back, applied for certain papers concerning the guardianship and civil list of Queen Isabella, which Queen Christina had brought with her to France. Espartero demanded them as being of a nature to be placed in the archives of Madrid. The ex-Regent replied, that she should keep those documents, and that, on the majority of her daughter, whose legal guardian she considered herself to be, they should be placed before Isabella. Queen Christina has also drawn up a paper, in which she defends herself from the reproach addressed to her by the English and German journals, of having brought away with her the diamonds of the crown. This document has, it is said, been communicated to the corps diplomatique.—Pat.

FRENCH SLAVERY.—The Journal des Debats publishes an article in favour of the emancipation of the slaves in the French colonies. The Debats proves by official returns, that the value of property, as well as the commercial transactions of the British colonies, has increased considerably since the emancipation of the slaves. "Those details appear to us conclusive, and ought to be sufficient to remove many prejudices. We, who attach much importance to the consolidation of our colonial possessions, and for that reason congratulate ourselves on the conquest of Algiers and the taking possession of the Marquesas Islands, are convinced that every good citizen will aid us in effecting a satisfactory conclusion.—Ibid.

THE KING OF PRUSSIA, says a letter from Berlin, has ordered an architect of that city to construct at Sans Souci a Greek theatre, where the chefs-d'œuvre of *the ancient Greek tragedians are to be re*presented in the open air in the fine season.—Ibid.

AUSTRIA.—A letter from Berlin states, that it is the intention of the Austrian Government to abolish the transit duty throughout Austria, in order to facilitate commercial communication between the German Customs Union and the provinces of the Danube.—Ibid.

SYRIA.—The Austrian Observer states, that the minister for Foreign Affairs at Constantinople had announced officially to the representatives of the five great Powers, that the Sultan, in order to confirm to the wishes of those Powers, had determined to intrust the administration of the Libanon to two governors, one a Maronite, and another a Druse. These two governors are to be appointed by the Pasha of Saida, to whom they will be subordinate.

A letter, dated Constantinople, the 7th ult., published in the Augsburg Gazette, states that the Porte considers this as an experiment, and reserves the right to dismiss them should it be found necessary.—Pat.

SERVIA.—The Carlsruhe Gazette of the 31st ult. states, that it is the determination of the great Powers to insist upon the restoration of Prince Michael to the throne of Servia, having resolved to defend legitimate right against the spirit of revolt.—Ibid.

SYRIA.—Letters have been received from Constantinople to the 17th. The Constantinople letter announces that the Syrian negotiations have been satisfactorily brought to a close by the reluctant acquiescence of the Porte in the suggestion of her best friends. A hatt, or edict, has since been issued, subsequent to the note addressed to the embassies, specifying the proposed arrangements for the administration of Lebanon. The ancient privileges of the mountain sects are therein acknowledged. They will again elect native princes, subject to the confirmation of the Porte, and be amenable only to the intermediary jurisdiction of those chiefs. A new pashalic will be formed, extending along the coast from Tripoli to Acre, and the Pasha of that division, resident at Beyrout or Sidon, will be vested with suzerain authority. The Turkish troops will be withdrawn from Lebanon, and the Arnaut irregular forces recalled from Syria. The treaty of Gulhane will form the acknowledged basis of administration. As already noticed, the chief part of those concessions had been agreed to some months ago by the Porte, when there remained a single point sought to be withheld in reference to the elective rights of the mountaineers. That point, the liberty of choosing chiefs from among their particular sects, having been now attained, the objects of the negotiation are achieved.

But, although the Porte has thus once more acknowledged the public liberty she had invaded in Syria, she has not done so with a full degree of justice, having merely fulfilled, the strict letter of legal obligation imposed upon her. She has deprived the house of Shehab of their long-established right of succession to the office of Chief Emir, accorded to that family by the Porte at the disposal of the Druse Sheikh Fakred-Din. There is little doubt that it will have ultimately to yield upon this point, as it has done upon the former.—Ibid.

MEMORIALS OF AFFGHANISTAN.

BY J. H. STOCQUELER.

ON the 15th of April, 1843, will be published, in one volume, the whole of the dispatches, narratives, state papers, &c. connected with the expedition to, and occupation of, Affghanistan, between the 1st of October, 1838, and the 1st October, 1842. These documents, arranged in chronological order, will be connected by a brief and succinct narrative of the operations in Affghanistan and Scinde, commencing with the assembly of the Army of the Indus at Ferozepore, and terminating with the evacuation of the former state after the restoration of the prisoners.

The object of this work is to present, at one view, the whole of the occurrences which have distinguished a most eventful period of British Indian History, and thus to facilitate the references of the student, the politician, and the soldier.

The work will be illustrated with sketches of remarkable places, striking incidents, portraits, costumes, &c. &c.

PRICE 20 RUPEES.

☞ Amongst the documents contained in this work will be found Lord Auckland's Proclamation, the despatches of Sir John Keane, General Wiltshire, General Sale, Sir Willoughby Cotton, General Pollock, General Nott, &c.; the narratives of Captain Outram's pursuit of Dost Mahomed; of Captain Gray's escape; of the destruction of the Goorkha Battalion; of Captain Ferris's escape from Pesh Bolak; of the disaster which befell Skinner's horse in the Bolan Pass; of Major Brown's defence of Kahun; of the defence of Kyelat-i-Ghilzie; of the rise and progress of the insurrection at Cabul; of the retreat from Cabul to Jellalabad, &c.; Lord Ellenborough's Proclamation, &c. &c.

Applications for the work are to be addressed to the Editor of the Englishman.

The February Mail reached Calcutta on Wednesday last by the Hindoostan Steamer. It is not barren like some of its late predecessors. The meeting of Parliament always imparts animation to society, and gives interest to our home intelligence. Parliament was opened on the 2d of February; and the speech from the throne, which was read by Commissioners, was worded with such caution as to secure an address without a division. The Opposition members have mustered strong, but we are as yet unable to estimate its relative strength; though there is every reason to believe that the Ministerial majority will be numerically as great as in the last Parliament, if not greater. Notwithstanding the change of opinion on the subject of the corn laws in the minds of some Conservatives, Sir Robert Peel states that he has no alteration to propose in them, and that he has no intention to relinquish his sliding and slippery scale. The Anti-corn law agitation, was in the mean while progressing without any apparent abatement. Mr. Cobden and Col. Thompson had proceeded on a mission to Scotland, and created a considerable sensation. The former gentleman had been honoured with the freedom of the city of Edinburgh. The meetings which had been held in various parts of that country appear to have created a powerful effect. If any relaxation of the laws is obtained, it will manifestly be the result of the pressure from without; of that opposition to the bread tax, which has been so ably organized by the bold and persevering spirits at the head of the movement.

The Affghan campaign had become the subject of Parliamentary discussion, and appears likely to attract much attention, and give rise to much acrimonious debate during the Session. The desolation which our troops spread around them as they advanced and retired had been alluded to with much indignation, both by Lord John Russell and Lord Brougham; and it is probable that the vote of thanks which the Ministry intended to move to Lord Ellenborough and the troops, would be selected as the occasion for a renewed attack on the Governor General. Some of the Ministerial organs of the Press, endeavour to excuse these excesses by attributing them to the uncontrolable feelings of the troops. But they have read the dispatches to little purpose if they have not discovered that the vengeance inflicted on the country was evidently the result of orders from the highest authority. The devastation is duly reported by the commanding officers to the Governor General in their despatches, in language which leaves no reason to doubt that they acted strictly in conformity to the instructions they had received, and that for the havoc they created they looked for praise and not censure. The Governor General himself in his Proclamation alludes with a feeling of exultation to the ruin of Ghuzni, which offered us no resistance, and was demolished after the most scientific fashion.

In the debate on the address in the House of Lords, the Duke of Wellington threw the mantle of his own high character and reputation over Lord Ellenborough. When his Lordship originally took charge of the Government of India, he declared that the approbation of the appointment by the Duke was the circumstance which gave him the highest satisfaction. The Duke has well requited this feeling of veneration. His Grace said—

"I have seen something of Governor Generals of India, and I know a little of military affairs, and of military difficulties, and I must say this—that I stand here prepared on any day to justify every order or movement, either one way or the other, the Governors General of India has given from the moment at which he took upon himself the administration of India."

"I am ready to do that whenever the noble lord chooses to make any charge against the Governor General. Let him come forward and make his charges when he pleases, I shall be ready to reply to them. My Lords, I say that the Governor General, as soon as he attained to his position, did as much as he was enabled to do, according to the state of preparation which he found in India at the moment. He could do no more than he did; every order he gave, whether to halt or to march, was an order absolutely necessary for the safety of the troops at the moment; not occasioned by any omission or act of his, but by acts done or omitted to be done by his rivals. I am bound to say this in defence of an absent servant of the Crown, who, I firmly believe, has done his duty by the public."

There is a boldness in this speech, which in any other individual but the Duke would be deemed rashness; and we cannot but think it is more likely to shake public confidence in the Duke's judgment, than materially to improve the position of his client. The future historian will judge of opinions by facts, even though the present age should be disposed to judge of facts from opinions. In the course of his researches he will find that the troops which achieved our triumphs in Affghanistan, were sent on by Lord Auckland; that between the date of his departure for England, in the middle of March, and the middle of August, when the armies commenced their march to the capital, no additions of men or cattle were made. He will find that the first order issued by the new Governor General was not to halt, but to retire, leaving our prisoners in the hands of the enemy; and that the troops were as fully equipped for the enterprize in June as they were in August. He will ask for some stronger reason even than that furnished by the Duke's affirmation, why it was absolutely necessary for the safety of the troops that their march should he delayed to the verge of winter, when a hundred contingencies might have arisen to expose them to the risks which had proved so fatal to another British army in the previous winter. We rejoice that the Affghan war is to be made the subject of a distinct enquiry. The discussions will elicit many facts; and clear or confirm much which requires to the explained or corroborated. The impeachment of Sir John Hobhouse for his ambitious attempt to enlarge the British dominions in the East is not likely, we perceive, to come on before intelligence reaches England of the annexation of Scinde to the British Territories in India.

In the course of this debate Lord Auckland made a long speech in vindication of the policy he had pursued. "Unaccustomed as his Lordship is to public speaking," we are most agreeably disappointed at the vigor he displayed on the occasion. The tone of moderation which he adopted towards one who had shewed his administration no mercy, seemed to be duly appreciated by both sides of the House.

The Somnath Gate proclamation has created, as might have been expected, a strong sensation in the country. The Times cuts it to shreds, and ridicules Lord Ellenborough's having become a Hindoo by adoption. The Examiner treats it with the keenest contempt. The Morning Chronicle is in extacy. The Brittania, one of the first journals in London, condemns it in sober language which will find an echo in every honest bosom. The Monthly Times in which the value of the 'editorials' is exactly in an inverse ratio to that of the extracts and the arrangement, says in its sweetest accents: "It is a document at variance with the general tenor of the proceedings of the Governor General!" The Morning Post defends it out and out with a degree of courage worthy of a better cause. "It matters but little what is thought in England of the style of the Indian Governor's Proclamations. It matters much what is felt in India of the spirit which animates the British Government." The feeling in India may be described in three words, Disgust, Contempt, Hatred; disgust in the minds of Christians; contempt in those of the Hindoos, and hatred in the bosom of all true believers.

The melancholy intelligence has been received by this Mail of the entire loss off the coast of France of the Conqueror from Calcutta. With the exception of one cabin boy, every soul on board perished. Seldom has the loss of a vessel cast so deep a gloom on the face of society in Calcutta. Mr. Turton has to deplore the loss of a daughter, Mr. John Jenkins, of his wife and three children; and Mr. William Thompson, the Solicitor, of his wife and four children. These two latter gentlemen proceeded to Suez on the Tenasserim, buoyant with the prospect of joining their families in England. At Galle they met the Hindoostan, and learnt how cruelly their hopes had been blasted. Our regret on this occasion is heightened by the announcement that the bodies were treated with the greatest barbarity by the French on the coast, who stripped them and cast them into the sea. There is every reason to suppose that life was not extinct in every instance, and that proper attention might have rescued many from death. The Hurkaru, we see, has treated this conduct with becoming indignation; but the treatment of the bodies would have been much the same if the vessel had been lost on the English side of the Channel. The Cornish, the Welsh, and the Irish wreckers are as great monsters of cruelty as their brethren on the coast of France.

Sir Charles Metcalfe has been constrained to give up his tranquil retreat in Devonshire for the cares of Government. He has been [illegible] suaded to accept the Governor Generalship of Canada; a post of no little difficulty, after the mismanagement of the last year or two. He is the first individual in English History who has been Governor of Jamaica, Governor General of India, and Governor General of Canada.

For other intelligence we refer to our extracts which we have made as copious as possible. The claims of the Opium merchants have been admitted; and the Scrip will be paid out of the twenty-one millions of dollars after all; only the merchants—whose losses have been more than made up through the destruction of the opium—cannot agree with Mr. Goulburn, about its actual value on the day on which it was seized; which might we think be easily settled by enquiring what would be the value of an insurance on the life of a man, under the new drop of Newgate.

THE HINDOOSTAN STEAMER.—The Express from Bombay, with the London Mail of the 6th February, arrived in Calcutta on Friday last at 11 A. M. and for the first time since the establishment of Steam communication between England and India, it has come without creating the smallest excitement. Our own steamer, the Hindoostan, had arrived the previous evening and put us in possession of all the intelligence. The Port of Calcutta has just reason to be proud of this splendid vessel. Her performance in the voyage to and from Suez has exceeded our most sanguine expectations; a distance of 4730 miles has been performed in less than twenty-one days, exclusive of stoppages. She left Suez on the 25th of February, was detained at Aden to take in coal, 43 hours; at Galle, 26; and at Madras 38, and reached Calcutta on the evening of the 23d of March. Under every disadvantage, arising from the novelty and defects of the arrangements for coaling, she has brought the Mail in less time than we have received it by express from Bombay. The boast of our Bombay contemporaries, that for the early receipt of news we must still look to the steamers attached to their port, has been destroyed by the first experiment. The capacity of this magnificent vessel has at once shewn that it is only under very peculiar circumstances that the Mail can ever be expected to reach Calcutta sooner by way of Bombay, than direct from Suez. When the present difficulties have been overcome, and facilities for taking in coal similar to those which the Government steamers enjoy, have been created by the Oriental Company, the Hindoostan and her sister vessels may be expected invariably to give us the mail two, and possibly three days earlier than the express. The superiority of this vessel over the Bombay steamers has been manifested in the most signal manner. We have sought in vain among the Bombay papers for a notice of the time the Atalanta remained at Aden, and cannot therefore ascertain the number of hours occupied respectively in the voyage between Suez and Bombay, and Suez and Calcutta. But between Suez and Aden, the Bombay vessel was behind the Hindoostan by more than fifty hours. The Bombay Times was quite correct in saying that the steamers belonging to that port must look about them now they had such a competitor in the field, or rather on the waters. His worst fears and our highest hopes have been realized. Bombay must get larger and better steamers, or relinquish the dignity of being the steam port of India.

The power of the Hindoostan having now been demonstrated, it is to be hoped, that in the next trip she will be entrusted with the mails for Ceylon, Madras and Calcutta. Had the packets been put on board of her at Suez instead of being sent by the Atalanta to Bombay, we should have received all our letters and newspapers on Thursday last, at a charge of two annas for the former, and one anna for the latter, instead of being obliged to pay fourteen annas for every letter for the privilege of receiving it four days later, and three annas for every journal, the last numbers of which will not reach us till nine days after the Hindoostan was moored off Calcutta. It would perhaps have been unwise to have made any change in existing arrangements, while the success of this experiment hung in doubt; but after the superiority of this vessel has been thus unequivocally established, it would be preposterous to send our packets by way of Bombay.

ANNEXATION OF SCINDE TO THE BRITISH DOMINIONS.—One of the most remarkable features in our Indian career, is the rapidity with which the fate of principalities and kingdoms is decided. On the 20th of June, 1756, our factory in Calcutta was captured, our merchants were murdered or expelled, the name of the town was changed, and our connection with Bengal apparently closed for ever. On the 22d of June, 1757, we had won the battle of Plassey, and become masters of Bengal, Behar and Orissa. It was, however, reserved for Lord Ellenborough's administration, to crowd the events of a year into a month. On the 14th of February, the Ameers of Scinde were in full possession of their kingdom, and as sovereigns signed a treaty with the British representative. By the 14th of March, their whole army had been defeated; the British flag waved over the fort of Hydrabad; they had been placed in confinement on board our Steamers on the Indus; their country had become a province of the British empire; the navigation of the Indus had been thrown open to all nations; slavery had been abolished, and orders had been issued to construct a column of the captured cannon to receive the names of the victors, after the model of the column of Austerlitz.

The territory of Scinde has not been formally annexed to our dominions in so many words; but Sir Charles Napier has been appointed Governor of the province; and we may therefore infer that the kingdom of the Ameers has been converted into a British province. The Acts of Parliament which relate to slavery have been extended to the country, and its independence may therefore be supposed to have terminated. It is somewhat remarkable that while the Governor General reserves it for the Directors to determine what rewards shall be given to the troops, he does not appear to give them a voice in the still greater question whether Scinde shall belong to the Crown or to the Ameers. The three short comprehensive orders promulgated by him are acts indicative of permanent sovereignty. And unless the Directors or the Ministry therefore should command the restoration of the conquered country,—which would be an act of superlative folly,—we may consider the Delta of the Indus, to be as much part and parcel of the British dominions, as the Delta of the Ganges. Such a reversal of the orders of the Governor General by the Directors would indicate a diminution of that strong confidence which they have so signally manifested in the measures of Lord Ellenborough. It would lead to his immediate departure from India. When the Directors therefore have to make their election between the Governor General's return to the Board of Control or the retention of Scinde, it is very probable that they will feel disposed to keep the country, asking no questions for conscience' sake.

This conquest and retention of a country as large as Scotland could not have occurred at a time when it is likely to afford more interesting discussion. The charge against Lord Auckland's administration is the wanton and unprovoked invasion of Affghanistan, from the dictates of ambition, and the love of territorial aggrandizement. The commendation bestowed on Lord Ellenborough's Government is founded on his withdrawal from Affghanistan and his magnanimous declaration that he was content with the limits which nature had assigned to our empire on the 1st of October 1842, and that he intended to cultivate the arts of peace. While that charge and that praise was still ringing in the ears of Parliament, Lord Ellenborough's proclamations of the present month would be laid on the table, announcing that the Beloochees had lost five thousand men in a single battle, and that the extensive province of Scinde, lying on both banks of the Indus, had been annexed to the British dominions. We will venture to predict that if this intelligence should reach England in the midst of an impeachment of Lord Auckland for the invasion of Affghanistan, that impeachment will immediately abate.

On the three acts of sovereignty which we published last week there is little to remark. After the conquest of Scinde, to restore it to the Ameers, would be an act little short of insanity. If it was to become a province of the British empire, Sir Charles Napier had richly earned the title and emoluments of its first Governor. One consideration alone diminishes the value of the proclamations issued consecutively by the Governor General on this occasion. We mean the entire absence of all allusion to Major Outram's services. His defence of the Residency for three hours, with One Hundred men against Eight Thousand is an exploit, of which we have had no example since the defence of their position by Colonel Scott, and Mr., now Sir Richard, Jenkins at Seetabuldee. Lord Ellenborough is not wont to pass over such gallantry in silence. On the contrary he seems to plume himself on the distinction that during his vice royalty, military devotion and talent have been more nobly rewarded than under any former rule. Yet this noble exhibition of the highest qualities of a soldier meets not the slightest acknowledgement. Outram forced himself into honourable notice under Lord Auckland's administration, so did Rawlinson, Pottinger, Macgregor,—and the 'curse' of Auckland rests on their and their prospects. There appears to be such unexampled littleness in thus selecting as the victims of official displeasure, men who are guilty of no fault but that of having served their country with zeal, and raised themselves to distinction under the auspices of a previous Governor General, that we gladly turn from a subject which it is so painful to contemplate.

The abolition of slavery in a country abounding with slaves, before we have been a month in possession of the capital, or have an acre of ground at our command beyond the limits of our own encampment, is somewhat premature. It is preposterous to attempt thus to subvert one of the fundamental institutions of a country before we have obtained a firm footing in it. It is idle to extend laws to a country in which we have not, as yet the slightest means of enforcing them. Yet such is the unbounded gullibility of Jo

Bull, that it would be matter of no surprise to find it asserted, that we had a perfect right to conquer and occupy Scinde, in order that we might proclaim liberty to every slave.

MADRAS BIGOTRY.—We have recently been engaged in discussing an instance of bigotry exhibited in Calcutta by the Tagore Family, who have turned Dwarkenath out of society for having visited England. We have now to record an exhibition of bigotry at the Benighted Presidency, of a more melancholy character, in as much as the parties implicated in it are not priest-ridden Hindoos, but members of a Christian Church.

We need scarcely recal to the recollection of our readers the noble sacrifice made by Sir Peregrine Maitland of the post of Commander-in-Chief at the Madras Presidency, because he would not countenance the compulsory attendance of Christian officers at Heathen festivals, in violation of the dictates of their own conscience. A scholarship was established in Bishop Corrie's Grammar School in his name, either from funds appropriated by him to this object, or raised to commemorate his conduct. The first election of a Scholar for this exhibition is to be held on the 19th April, 1843; and an advertisement has just appeared in the Fort St. George Gazette stating the qualification of the candidate.

"Sir Peregrine Maitland's Native Scholarship shall be open to all Natives, whether Christians, Heathens, or Mahomedans, who shall have been at any time, after they have attained the age of twelve years, receiving their education at Bishop Corrie's Grammar School during the space of three complete years, provided they were born in the Diocese of Madras, and if Christians, are members of the Church of England, and shall on the day of their election have completed their fifteenth year and not exceed their nineteenth year of age."

So it appears that an Institution which cheerfully receives a worshipper of Kalee, and a votary of the false prophet, is closed against the child of a Dissenter; and a Dissenter who may be desirous of obtaining the benefit of this Scholarship, has no other chance but that of becoming a Churchman or a Mahomedan; for the Hindoos will not receive him. It appears to be more revolting to the Christian feelings of the Directors to receive the child of a humble, pious, laborious Missionary, not a Churchman, than the son of a bigotted Mahomedan or a superstitious Hindoo. Though we are entirely ignorant of the names of the Directors, or of the Secretary—and write therefore without personality—we may naturally suppose, that having been selected to dispose of Sir Peregrine Maitland's Scholarship, they participate in his sentiments on the connection of the state with idols. It is possible that some of them may have been among those who were loudest in denouncing the support given to Hindoo superstitions by the Madras Government; yet these men now come forward to tell the Hindoos, by their words and actions, that in their opinion Dissent is more objectionable than Hindooism; that the man who has been offering sacrifice to a senseless idol is more entitled to their countenance and support, than the man who worships the same God and Saviour with themselves, professes the same Christian truth, and is partaker of the same blessed hope of immortality,—but differs from them in the non-essentials of Church Government.

We fully admit that every man has a right to do what he will with his own; that the Christian Directors of this Institution have a right to expend their own money, or the money entrusted to them in establishing a purely Episcopal School, and to make the door so narrow that none but an Episcopalian can enter. If this rule had been adopted on the present occasion, any objection would have been unreasonable. But it is not an exclusively Episcopalian Seminary. It admits those who loath Christianity even in its most dignified and Episcopal form. It freely admits Hindoos and Mahomedans, and excludes none but Dissenters. It is true that the candidates, as we are told in paragraph seven, are to be examined "in the rudiments of religion, as set forth in the Creeds, Articles and Liturgy of the Church of England," but this is only adding absurdity to intolerance. The Directors are fully aware that not one of the Hindoo or Mahomedan candidates knows a syllable of the thirty-nine Articles, or ever heard of the Athanasian creed. The Directors must of necessity admit the worshipper of Doorga and the votary of Mahomed into the Grammar School, without catechizing him out of the Liturgy. The net is intended only to intercept Dissenters.

But the most notable part of the scheme remains to be told. The Scholarship, it is announced, will be void if the Scholar shall be proved guilty of immoral conduct, or in case he be a Christian, if he shall cease to be a member of the Church of England. It seems therefore that there are but two disqualifications; immorality and Dissent. And is this the evangelical doctrine which the Directors are endeavouring to inculcate on the Hindoos and Mahomedans in Bishop Corrie's Grammar School; that the man who forsakes the Church of England, however exemplary his Christian conduct may be, is in their estimation as unworthy of their support, as the rogue, the swindler, and the drunkard! Is it part of the religion of the Bible to brand the poor child of a Dissenter with the same mark of infamy which the Directors consider it necessary to fix on open profligacy of character? Having thus forced on the Heathen around them the remark; "See how these Christians hate one another," is it any wonder that Christianity should not make the same progress in India which it did in primitive times, when the Heathen exclaimed with admiration, "See how these Christians love one another?"

THE WHOLESALE DISMISSION OF THE OFFICERS IN THE SAUGOR AND NERBUDDA TERRITORIES.—The measure which the Governor General has recently adopted in this Proconsulship is the most extraordinary on record in the History of British India. The Government in those provinces was administered by a Chief Commissioner, a Civilian; a first Assistant, also a Civilian, and ten or twelve gentlemen from the Military service. An insurrection broke out in the neighbouring province of Bundlekund, and spread into Saugor,—and the Governor General has at once turned out every covenanted servant of the Company, employed in the administration of the territory. Such wholesale vengeance is altogether unknown in our Government, and it is much to be questioned whether it be just in reference to the past, or politic in reference to the future.

The only plea on which this indiscriminate use of the besom can be justified, is the mismanagement of the province. This mismanagement again is inferred from the disaffection of the Chiefs. But it is quite possible that this disaffection may arise from the system of administration, and not from the personal delinquencies of those employed in it. It is possible that it may have grown out of the natural tendencies of a civilized Government established in the midst of savages; and that the personal efforts of the public functionaries may have served to check and to retard the result of these tendencies. We need not here repeat the hacknied expression that the British administration is the Gureeb ka raj, the poor man's Government. All our institutions have in them this one predominant feature, that they tend to curb the oppressor, and relieve the poor. When we took possession of the country every little district had more or less its petty baron, who placed his chief distinction in being above the laws. We have curbed the power of the baron. We have placed him upon an equality in the eye of the law with his meanest retainer; and we have thereby given offence which can never be entirely obliterated from the minds of those whose consequence we have annihilated. Our efforts in this respect in other parts of India have been apparently successful; that is to say, we have effectually overawed opposition, and brought every man indiscriminately under the empire of laws—though if our fortunes were to begin to wane, we should doubtless find enemies as thick as the warriors in the passes of Cabul, grow up from beneath our feet. But in Bundlekund and the neighbouring territory, which abounds with tracts of hill and jungle, and wild fastnesses, we have allowed this race of petty barons to exist with little interruption. Their importance is derived from the array of their followers, and their independent mode of existence. That darling liberty we have been gradually curtailing. We have obtruded our judicial system, which is as abhorrent to them as ever the presence of the gauger was in Rob Roy's country. They begin to feel that the existence of our Government is incompatible with their independence; that they must be gradually absorbed in the general mass if our supremacy continues; that they must give their children a good education, and turn their followers into useful citizens. The restraint we impose on them becomes daily more galling. We have chafed and fretted their feelings, and rendered them ripe for any project which should pitch us and our government, with all its benevolence, into the sea. The country has been recently denuded of troops; this gave them hopes of success in any rising; and these hopes were confirmed by a rumour very generally spread through the country, that we had not only been defeated by the Affghans, but that the remnant of our troops was proceeding down the Ganges with all haste, preparatory to a general evacuation. The poor barons, encouraged by the surrounding chiefs, who share their feelings because they share with them the loss of importance, rose up in arms because they thought that, now was the day and now the hour, to recover their independence. It was not a popular but a baronial rising. The common people generally through India have gained by our impartial rule, which has been as equitable as their own countrymen, who rule under us, will allow it to be. And, there was perhaps no part of India in which the blessings of our administration had been more eminently felt by the poor, than in these provinces. Such was the remark of Lord William Bentinck when he passed through the country in 1832. But in proportion as we improve the condition of the people, and elevate their hopes, we exasperate the chiefs; and in India we can seldom be wrong in reasoning from the content of the people to the discon-

[illegible] of those who, but for our interference, would [illegible] over them.

The disturbances are to be traced therefore to the principles of our own administration, and to the effect produced on the minds of the Bundlekund and Saugor Barons by our discomfiture in Affghanistan, and not to the mismanagement of our own functionaries; and their universal expulsion from office can be justified upon no ground even of political expediency. If there had been mismanagement, the blame would lie at the door of the controlling, and not of the subordinate, officers. Yet we are informed in the papers that the conduct of the Commissioner has been commended both by Mr. Robertson and Lord Ellenborough, and that he has been promised the first vacant post of equal dignity and emolument with that from which he has been driven. Mr. McLeod, who acted immediately under him, has been promoted, we see, to an office of higher pay. Upon what principle of justice then have the military officers who occupied civil stations in the district been, one and all, expelled, and deprived of those appointments for which they had for years been employed in qualifying themselves? Why should their prospects be so unceremoniously ruined, and they themselves be remanded in disgrace to their corps?

But the measure is equally as detrimental to the country itself as it has been to the interests of the discarded officers. The new men who are to supply their place, are unacquainted with the language, the habits, or prejudices of the people, and have an apprenticeship to serve to their new employment, before they can be acceptable to the community or useful to Government. Was it wise, or prudent, or statesmanlike, at this season of general discontent, to deprive the administration of men possessed of local knowledge and influence, and to make over a province in a state of disaffection if not of revolt, to those who are entire strangers to the people? In these extraordinary circumstances, our only consolation is derived from the local experience and high character of Major Sleeman, to whom the management of the country has been entrusted; but he must feel himself overwhelmed with labours which no human being can long continue to perform, assisted as he is by a machinery so entirely incompetent. Independently of his multifarious duties, civil and political in Bundlekund, he is charged with the superintendence of a country—the Saugor and Nerbudda territories,—containing 30,000 square miles and a population of two millions. Nothing but a miracle can prevent the new system's breaking down, even before it has destroyed the Major's constitution.

One of the greatest objections to the new arrangements is the union of political and judicial duties in the same officer. This has long been considered objectionable in principle; it is now become still more objectionable from the extent of country in which it has been established. We have always understood that it was Lord Auckland's intention to have separated these functions; and if he had ever enjoyed leisure he would doubtless have carried his wishes into effect. But that reform is now past hope. The political duties of both the Saugor and Nerbudda territories and of Bundelkund, have been incorporated with the Commissionership. The officer who is entrusted with the most complicated and harassing military and political duties, is the only appellate authority in a country as large in extent as the principality of Wales, and three times as populous. In a country where disaffection is only smothered, his political duties must necessarily occupy the largest portion of his time; and the labor of presiding over the judicial administration of this extensive region must be performed as leisure can be created. From the simple exigence of his position in a country where every chief is ready to revolt, the duties he owes to the people, as the final referree in all civil disputes, must be too often postponed to the duty he owes to Government as the conservator of political peace. Is this just to the people?

We have trespassed long on the reader's patience, but must add a word or two on the military organization of the constabulary force. We thought on the first blush of the thing that the formation of four battalions of military constables was intended to supersede the necessity of employing our regular troops in these territories; but we find that additional barracks are to be built, and several additional corps to be permanently cantoned in the country. The new force is to be employed in the ordinary judicial and fiscal administration of the country. The civil writs of the Courts are to be served, and the revenue is to be collected, by rifle men, and thus our government becomes emphatically "a government of sentry boxes." The objection does not lie so much to the nature of the weapon,—though the Court will doubtless object to the ruinous and useless expense of providing the constables with rifles;—the objection would be just as strong to the collection of rents at the point of the bayonet. This is at once to proclaim martial law throughout the country, to intrude on the inhabitants an army of strangers whose insolent demeanor, the very few officers placed over them, will be physically unable to restrain, and thereby to exasperate to a more intense degree the feelings of abhorrence with which the independent classes view the introduction of our fastidious laws.

On the whole the change which has now been made in the administration of this province is likely to reflect little credit on our national character, and to confer little benefit on the people. It is sudden, violent and capricious. It is based on an act of injustice towards meritorious officers, which by destroying all confidence in the equity of Government, destroys the strongest hold which Government has upon the zeal and fidelity of its officers.

The Remains of Sir William Macnaghten are now on their way to Calcutta and may be expected in a few days. They were recovered at a large price by Lady Macnaghten, from the well into which they had been cast. The body was recognized from its mutilated condition, and from the absence of the head and the arm which had been cut off by the Affghan ruffians who assassinated him. We have been given to understand that it is not intended to pay the usual public honours to the remains of this lamented public servant, though at the time of his decease he occupied one of the most important and responsible posts under this Government, and had been nominated Governor of the Bombay Presidency. The arrival of the body at Ferozepore was, we hear, fully known to the Governor General, but it was allowed to remain unnoticed. This disinclination on the part of his Lordship to permit any public recognition of the claims of the deceased to a public funeral, renders it of course improper in any subordinate authority at this Presidency, to adopt a different line of conduct. It is therefore much to be regretted that Lady Macnaghten did not direct it to be conveyed down the Indus to Bombay, where it would have been received with those demonstrations of public respect which are so justly due to one who occupied so conspicuous a place in the public administration. But though no official notice is to be taken of the arrival of Sir William's body in the metropolis of British India, we hope those who are entrusted with the management of his funeral will afford his numerous friends an opportunity of assisting at his interment, by making their arrangements as public as possible.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, MARCH 23.

— The Hurkaru gave us reason to expect another of Lord Ellenborough's proclamations in last night's Gazette, annexing Scinde to the British dominions; but it contains nothing beyond the three Orders which we received through the Delhi Gazette, just as our last number was going to press. The only announcement we have that the Talpoora dynasty has ceased to reign, is contained in the order appointing Sir Charles Napier Governor of the province.

— The 9th and 55th Native Infantry are ordered to proceed from Ferozepore to Sukkur without delay together with No. 1, Light Field Battery.

— A letter from Baboo Oopender Mohun Tagore, which appears in this morning's Hurkaru, entirely confirms our statement that the expulsion of Dwarkenath Tagore from the society of the Tagore family was purely a religious act, and had no connection with the patriotic movement now in progress, upon which it has been subsequently engrafted. We republish an extract from that letter, because it sets the matter at once at rest. It is of some importance to record the fact on such unexceptionable evidence that the first Hindoo who returned from a visit to Europe, where he received the most distinguished reception, was immediately expelled from society, and treated as an outcast.

— The Nemesis and the Pluto Steamers are ordered round to Bombay immediately, evidently with the view of their being employed in Scinde. But they will find the Indus present fewer facilities for navigation than the Yang-tse-kiang.

— A letter appears from Captain Engledue in the Englishman of this day on the affairs of the Calcutta Docking Company. He says he attended the meeting of the Company, as the representative of twenty-two shares, and was anxious to shew the proprietors that their affairs were mismanaged, and that by adopting a liberal scale of charges, they would attract more business and secure larger profits. He also wished that the estimates for the timber purchased during the last twelvemonth should be laid on the table and compared with the market prices. The circumstance that the dividends are decreasing every year, shews that there is something rotten in the concern. A heavy debt of 140,000 Rupees still exists, and the docks are going to decay. In his last paragraph he says, "The consequence will be that in a few years the property called the Docking Company will no longer exist." His warning will be unheeded like the voice of Cassandra. When did ever a Ditch Committee shut the stable door, till after the horse had escaped?

—The Star alludes to a recent Government order in favour of the pensioned soldier, which directs that he shall be paid at the rate of 2 shillings and ½ penny the Rupee instead of two shillings and six pence, which will give him an addition of a nearly a fifth to his slender pittance.

FRIDAY, MARCH 24.

— The Semaphore of yesterday announced the arrival of the Hindoostan Steamer, from Suez the 25th February.

— The latest accounts from Hydrabad are those brought by the Sesostris Steamer to Bombay, and they extend we believe to the 7th of March, up to which date no attempt had been made on Sir Charles Napier's post. It is said that the Belochees after their defeat at Meeanee, broke up into parties and dispersed. The wounded officers belonging to the Bombay Army had arrived on the Sesostris; but from a hint thrown out in the papers it would appear that the Bengal officers who had been wounded were to be sent up the Indus on to Ferozepore.

SATURDAY, MARCH 25.

— It appears that the Hindoostan Steamer left Suez eighteen hours after the Atalanta Bombay Steamer, and reached Aden, thirty-six hours before her. The distance is 1340 miles, which the Hindoostan made in 146, and the other vessel in 200 hours! The Express from Bombay reached Calcutta yesterday morning about half past eleven, twelve hours after the papers by our own steamer had been delivered.

— The intelligence from Bombay is somewhat alarming. The Cleopatra Steamer had come in from Cutch on the 15th March, with intelligence that the Ameers of Scinde had been rescued and that the fort of Hydrabad had through treachery fallen into possession of the Ameer of Khyrpoore. It was derived by the authorities in Cutch from a person who left a place ten coss from Hydrabad on the 5th of March; but the intelligence direct from that place extended to the 7th, when no attack had been made. The Bombay Times, by a comparison of dates, pronounces the intelligence unfounded.

— Moulmein papers have been received to the 15th but they contain no intelligence. The Cholera had been raging with much violence and the casualties were duly recorded in the Chronicle. Some individuals of delicate nerves have it seems been frightened by this record of mortality; and the Editor has very considerately put it in the back ground.

— No official notice having been given of the arrival of the Tenasserim Steamer at Madras, no public Mail was sent on by her. She made a splendid run to that Port and was detained there only five hours. The Hindoostan was detained 38 hours.

— The latest accounts from Scinde contradict the report that eight officers had fallen into the hands of the enemy, but Capt. Ennis, of the 21st N. I. had been made prisoner by them, and most barbarously murdered and thrown into the river.

— The Agra papers state, that the Governor General intended to occupy the palace of Agra till the 1st of May; that a strange yellow liquid had lately rained at Futtypore; and that a party had been given by the station to the Governor General at which the health of the Hero of Hydrabad was not drunk.

MONDAY, MARCH 27.

— The Landholders' Society has come to life again. The Star of this morning has a long and interesting account of the Meeting held on Wednesday last. Baboo Dwarkenath's speech was by far the most interesting; and the most agreeable part of this speech was that in which he promised at some future time to put into the hands of the Society a paper now in course of preparation, more fully detailing his proceedings in England, and the feelings of the Indian Authorities, Her Majesty's Government and the British people. We see the Society has appointed a Sub-Committee to prepare a communication to Government on the Registry Act. The 22d Article of the Regulations of the Society which has been dormant for nearly two years, is to be acted upon from the present time, and the Society is to meet once a month.

— The Delhi Gazette states, that the son of Meer Waez is on the throne of Cabul just now and that nothing but the prospect of the Dost's return keeps the people from murdering Akbar Khan who is very unpopular. The intelligence from Lahore regarding Dost Mohamed is that he has been soliciting aid from Shere Singh to punish the King of Bokhara. It would not be amiss if the British Government were to assist him with two or three lakhs of Rupees, to chastise this perfidious monster, the murderer of Stoddart and Conolly.

— The investiture of the Grand Crosses of the Bath is to take place, says the Agra Ukhbar, on Monday the 20th. The Armory has been cleared, out and arranged for the occasion, and the Somnath Gates placed at the Northern end.

TUESDAY, MARCH 28.

— The Hurkaru states that letters from Hydrabad of the 7th of March mention that the Ameers were in confinement with a strong guard over them. The Bombay Times which came in a week ago gave us intelligence from thence of the same date. It is in reference to intelligence of a later date that the dispatches from Cutch relate; and about which some anxiety is reasonably felt.

— From the same paper we learn that the Privy Council has decided the suit of Raja Mitrujeet Sing versus the heirs of the widow of Raja Jeswunt Singh. The suit has been twenty-eight years in progress. Independently of the costs incurred in the various courts in this country, the expences of the appeal in England have amounted to 100,000 Rs. the sum in dispute being 111,000. Of the English costs the Appellant is sentenced to pay 70,090 Rs. and the Respondents 30,000!!

— The Calcutta Star of this morning affirms on the strength of a letter from England, that the Aerial Steam ship is no joke; that some of the most scientific men in the land are deep in a plot which will knock the Hindoostan on the head, and supersede this slow coach. Speaking of the Hindoostan, we are somewhat anxious to learn whether Capt. Engledue really intends to start her as he advertizes, on Good Friday. When Lord Mansfield, who never allowed suits to run into arrears, we do not say twenty-eight years, but twenty-eight days if he could avoid it, had unwittingly declared his determination to sit in Court on Friday, one of the gentlemen of the bar said that in that case his Lordship would be the first Judge who had ever sat on Good Friday, since the days of Pontius Pilate. The rebuke had the desired effect. Certainly if Capt. Engledue starts the Steamer on Friday, it will be the first Steamer which ever left the port of Calcutta for Suez on Good Friday.

— The Englishman's London Correspondent states that Dr. O'Shaughnessy was to accompany Sir C. Metcalfe to Canada; and the Hurkaru's Correspondent affirms that Lord Ellenborough and the Court of Directors are already at issue, on more points than one; that his Lordship has been proposing to turn off all the Collectors and appoint Natives. How the Old Hindoo and the Mookerjee Baboo will rejoice at this news. The Court however are not disposed to sacrifice the Collectors, or the revenue either. They also object to Lord Ellenborough's unceremonious dismissal of political officers. What will they say to the wholesale expulsion in one day, of the whole of the officers of the Saugor and Nerbudda establishment?

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29.

— The last Calcutta Gazette announces that the services of Major Pottinger have been placed at the disposal of the Government of Bombay; that is, he has been remanded to his corps;—but this circumstance demands a distinct notice, which we shall not fail to give it next week. The Star now informs us that Lieut. Charles Brown of the Bengal Engineers, has been appointed Commissioner in Scinde, in supersession of Major Outram!

— The Englishman announces the approaching departure of D. L. R. to England. He is the last of our Indian poets; of that band which included the names of J. G. and H. M. P. and R. A. M. The stern events of the last three or four years have given a more practical, perhaps a more vulgar, tone to the minds of men, and left us few sympathies for the Muses.

— The intelligence from Scinde is pleasing. The rumour of an attack on Hydrabad and of its successful issue turns out to have been false. The Indus Steamer had arrived at Bombay from Kurachee the 13th March, and reports that the country was perfectly quiet. But the Bombay Government will not on this account remit the despatch of troops to strengthen both Hydrabad and Sukkur, and to convince the Belochees of the hopelessness of resistance.

— The Hurkaru has the following notice in his paper of this morning: "We have seen at Messrs. Hamilton and Co's. a splendid 'Triumphal Vase,' designed and executed, for the Governor-General, probably to be displayed on the occasion of the installation of the G. C. B.s. It is in silver-gilt, and bears, embossed on its the names of the principal places CABUL—GHUZNEE—JUGDULLUCK—JULLALABAD, &c., where we gained our principal victories. It is altogether a splendid work." If our advices from Agra be correct, the vase will be too late for the investiture, which we hear, took place on the 20th instant. Lord Ellenborough was seated on Akbar Khan's black throne, according to our informant; Sir G. Pollock and Sir W. Nott advanced to the foot of it, and the ceremony of installation was completed.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the following sums for the Friend of India:—

DWARKANATH TAGORE.

I shall here relate the substance of the proceedings connected with the subject of this excommunication. When news arrived of Dwarkanath having left England for his home, and when he was daily expected, some of the members of the Tagore family, through pure religious motives, apprehending a fatal disgrace to the family, if they were to receive him in society as they used to do before, proposed to excommunicate him on his return and agitated this subject by frequent interviews with each other. Upon this, certain members, I believe to the number of three or four only, agreed upon the subject of the intended excommunication, while the others did not yield to their solicitations, believing it would be inconsistent with their avowed acts and deeds to conform to such a proposal. Things remained in this undecided state for some time. When on the return of Dwarkanath a meeting was held at the house of my respected relative, Baboo Hurrocoomar Tagore, in which both sides of the party met to discuss on the feasibleness, or otherwise of the propriety of the subject in question. I was present at this meeting, and I hereby distinctly state the reasons, that actuated the opposed party to enforce their plan of suggestion. They were based purely on religious principles, and no mention of the said letter to the Court of Directors was even distantly hinted at. From the well-known orthodoxy of Baboo Hurrocoomar, I do not believe, that he ever subscribed to such a sentiment as attributed to him in your editorial, or if he did subscribe, I do not think, he ever understood its purport. Either he or you must have been hoaxed in the matter. I will not pay him such a bad compliment or offend his religious feelings, as to even suppose him capable either to express such sentiments or subscribe thereto without knowing their intent and purposes, for I know them to be directly opposed to his professed religious tenets, and that alone combined with his long standing difference of religious opinion with Dwarkanath actuated him to adopt this rash measure even at the sacrifice of many interests which are dear to him. But, Sir, the real fact, as I am given to understand, is, that the party acting as leader in the affair, to screen his own inconsistency before his European and other friends, has been busily engaged in manufacturing this version of the case. It is a pure offspring of his fertile brain. Neither you nor my respected relative Baboo Hurrocoomar has any share in it.—Beng. Hurk. March 23.

JUBILEE MEDALS.

The Baptist Missionary Society have had two medals struck off in commemoration of the jubilee. The larger medal has an impression of the well-known head of Carey on the one side, and the following inscription on the other:—

"BAPTIST MISSION.

Formed October 2d, 1792; commenced in East Indies 1793; West Indies 1813; Western Africa 1840.

Stations 157; Missionaries 71. Teachers and Native Preachers 127; Members upwards of 30,000; Scholars about 18,000. Scriptures translated into forty languages and dialects; copies issued in the year 1841, 3,6000. Slavery abolished August 1st, 1838.

The whole surrounded with the motto that carried the venerable founder through times of the greatest distress and destitution to the accomplishment of the great object for which he came to this country.—"Attempt great things for God—expect great things from God."

The smaller medal has on one side an impression of the house at Kettering in which the Society was formed—an excellent impression; on the reverse medallions of Carey, Fuller, Sutcliff, Pearce and Ryland, with the Word of God open as a centre-piece. The whole encircled with the words,—"Not by might, not by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord. Zech. c. 4, v. 6." Several of these medals have been received in India.—Cal. Christ. Adv. March 25.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH.

"I learn, that the East India direction are terribly sore at some of Lord Ellenborough's freaks. His last letters contained a scheme for entirely re-modelling the system of collection of revenue. He says, he has with him three accountants, in whose talents he places the highest confidence, and that they have examined the accounts of many collectors, and although he does not in precise terms impugn their probity, he speaks of them upon the whole as very unfit and incompetent servants.

"These accountants have drawn up a plan, by which a uniform system of accounts is to be adopted in all collectorates, to be managed entirely by natives, under the supervision of a head office at Calcutta, thus doing away with a large number of lucrative civil appointments.

"He concludes his despatch by stating, that he expects the thorough and entire confidence of the direction, without which he cannot continue to hold the office of Governor-General; that he has many new plans to introduce, and great reforms in all the services to make, and that he cannot carry these out, unless the Directors place implicit trust in him, and leave every thing to his management, or take the alternative of his at once resigning. This financial plan was immediately answered in a despatch, objecting in the most decided terms to these or any similar alterations; declaring, that the Directors believe the management of revenue affairs to have been conducted most ably and honestly by their servants, that they considered it of the utmost importance to prevent the natives having any idea of the state of their balance sheet: and enquiring how it was possible, that three recent importations from London, could understand the affairs of the Company in a few weeks, better than men of acknowledged talent, whose lives had been spent in managing them. The dispatch then examined in detail all his objections to the present system, refuted each, and concluded by expressing the confidence of the Directors in the ability of their servants, and in the correctness of the present system. This dispatch was sent for approval to the Board of Control, and was returned to the India House for modification.

"After a day's delay, it was again sent to the Board with expressions of regret on the part of the Directors, that after mature consideration they declined using any milder language. The matter was referred to Sir Robert Peel, who directed it to be sent as it was.

"Should Lord E., therefore, have any objection to making a comfortable meal on his own words, he must resign.

"The Directors, it is understood, are greatly annoyed at his conduct, in depriving so many of the politicals of their places."—Beng. Hurk. March 28.

To Correspondents.

Indoctus, we hope to take up next week.

A Subscriber, must consult those learned in the law. In our lay judgement a man cannot be seized in execution of a decree on the Sabbath; but we may be wrong.

One of the Meeting, at Jessore, has our thanks for his letter. We reserve ourselves however for the Catalogue of Grievances.

The valuable paper on Education at Bombay, we have been obliged to "take out of the form" to make room for the contents of the mail, which in Editorial phraseology" wont keep.'

Many thanks to our Agra friend for his letter; which will appear next week.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ISLAND OF MAURITIUS.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

I beg to send you an extract of a letter just received from the Mauritius.

"I have been several times preaching to the Coolies in the bazar and in different parts of the town—it would be a good thing to send Missionaries on purpose for them, a noble field presents itself here, even better than India, because the people being away from the influence of brahmins and family connexions, together with various prejudices and dumb idols, they would be more disposed to listen to the preaching of the gospel—indeed, the very circumstance of their being in a strange land, would induce them to attend to the missionary. They were very glad to hear me speaking to them, and flocked all round me, and seemed sorry when I had done. Regarding the coolies, of whom so much has been said in the papers, I made many enquiries both from themselves and others; those of them who are employed in the plantations get generally 5 Rs. per month and one meal of rice per day and a little salt; they work hard, and are sometimes beaten and put in the stocks, i. e. in case they do not work well, or are guilty of any trifling offence. From all that I have yet learned concerning them, it seems that a good planter uses them well, and they like to stay; but that others use them very ill, and they deeply regret their having come here at all; that they are sometimes made to begin work as early as 3 o'clock in the morning and kept at it until night, with but little time allowed them to eat; that when the stipulated period of 5 years has elapsed many of the planters will not allow them to go away when they wish, but retain them by keeping some part of their pay. This, a native told me, I cannot avouch for the truth of it. On the other hand, those who are qualified for house work get more pay, 10, 12, 16, and even 20 Rs. per month; they are no doubt better off than they would be in their own land; 70,000 coolies are now required on the island, and if not got, there will be a great failure in the crops.

AN ERROR RECTIFIED.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—In a recent No. of the Friend of India, you publicly announce "that Mootee Baboo has earned the gratitude of Society by offering 10,000 Rs. to the first Hindoo who should marry a widow." I beg to say that such is not the fact. That offer has been made to any of his sons, not to any Hindoo. His sons wisely judging that the money of their father will ultimately come to them, will not infringe a custom which will bring on them the odium of their countrymen.

The error would have been rectified earlier had I the honour of seeing that No. before. Your Calcutta Contemporaries have frequently committed the same error, and they will be good enough either to insert this denial or otherwise announce it in any way they wish.

I am, Sir,
Your humble Servant,
WOMES CHUNDER MOOKERJEE.

THE COLLEGE OF FORT WILLIAM.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—Allow me a few remarks on your Editorial reply to my letter on the studies of Fort William College, in your issue of the 2d instant.

You do not state my sentiments fairly when you make me come to the conclusion that it is better to study Persian and Hindee for the Upper Provinces, merely because they go to form Oordoo. I gave two other reasons, one that Hindee (and not Oordoo) is spoken and understood by a vast majority of the people; and the other that Persian would of itself almost enable a Civilian to conduct his Cutcherry duties. Your illustration of studying "the Saxon, the Latin and the French" for the purpose of acquiring English, does not apply to my real argument, not one of those languages being spoken by any portion of the English nation, nor monopolizing in any degree the medium of official business. The Judges in Wales are, I believe, expected to understand Welsh, although English is the language of the Courts.

I think it may be gathered from your article, that you are an advocate for teaching young Civilians the "language of the million" as well as the language of the Courts, and still with apparent inconsistency you reject the widely spoken Hindee.

Again, you seem to think that the studies of the young Civilians will have an influence on the efforts "to give a uniformity and a fixity to the Oordoo official language," and that the study of Persian is likely to perpetuate the too great intermixture of the Persian, but you do not notice, that an antidote is provided for this bane in the study of the popular Hindee. Who so well qualified to promote "the formation of a good model of Oordoo" as the man who is acquainted with Persian and Hindee? And on the contrary is it not to be feared that men acquainted only with Bengalee and the unfixified Oordoo are likely to contribute to keep this latter dialect in its state of "glorious uncertainty," or perhaps even to make confusion worse confounded by the admixture of some other villainous compounds?

I will conclude by repeating, that on the subject of your Oordoo Bengalee scheme, especially in its relation to the North-Western Provinces, "I hae my doots ——"

Yours faithfully,

10*th March*, 1843. OODASEEN.

P. S. What do you say to the following scheme? The Bengal students at Hayleybury learn Sanskrit, Persian and Oordoo. Now, suppose their attention were confined to Sanskrit and Persian, the latter, including so much of Arabic as is contained in Lee's "Jones's Persian Grammar." These languages not being spoken in India might be acquired in England with almost as much facility as here, and in two years with a little additional attention to this point, a sufficient knowledge might be gained for all useful purposes. Here their classico-oriental course might be considered to end, and then on their arrival in this country they might commence the Vernacular course, learning Hindee and Oordoo for the North-West and Bengalee and Oordoo for Bengal. Encouragement being held out for those who had abilities and inclination for higher acquirements. The due proportion of Hindee and Bengalee students might be secured by authority. I confess the course to be pursued in case of the necessity of future transfer from Agra to Bengal, and vice versâ presents a difficulty beyond my powers of selection; I dare say it would not be insuperable in the hands of Government. But I have written more than enough on a subject in which I have no personal interest —so Farewell!

COLLEGE STUDIES.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—Every man has his favourite weakness and your's appears to be "the vernacular for the use of the Mofussil Courts." I observe that you have assailed the College of Fort William for still continuing to instruct its ingenuous youth in the Grammar of "the exploded Persian," and have turned with considerable acerbity on an unfortunate correspondent whose defence of the existing routine of studies appeared in your paper of the 2d March, under the signature of Oodaseen;—nevertheless the majority of Civilians employed in the N. W. P. would, I fancy, if called upon for their opinion pronounce your views erroneous. In the first place Persian is not completely exploded; one office, that of Special Commissioner* still uses it in all its vernacular proceedings and many more do so more or less as circumstances require. It is true however that in our ordinary Courts of justice, Oordoo has been universally substituted. In the next place it is one thing to abolish the use of Persian, and another to introduce the "language of the people." The first has been accomplished. The latter never will be—and the reason of this is that the people at large have no fixed language. The vernacular of the Upper Provinces varies in every district and even in different parts of the same district. It is all Oordoo; but what language is Oordoo? Simply a mixture of Persian and Hindi, the proportions of each used being left to the taste, the knowledge, or habits of the speaker or writer. The consequence is that the proceedings of the Court are held in a language as unintelligible to the people as was the much abused Persian; but even supposing that such was not the case but that the villager with his regale across his shoulder and "his lohue-bund lathee" in his hand could come into Court and understand every word that was spoken it would prove nothing against the system of College study; for admitting, as I suppose you do, the existence of very different dialects of Oordoo in different parts of the country, what more proper preparation can there be, for the Civilian destined for the N. W. P. than a tolerable grounding in the elementary parts of the language, &c. he is to speak—to wit, Persian and Hindi—which will enable him to mix them to suit his district; and I can assure him he will have to vary the proportions at each move. The fact is, that the change of language was, as regarded these provinces, a mere piece of claptrap. Government took away from its officers the use of a fixed, easy, and most excellent business language, and substituted an awkward, unmanageable mouthy and worst of all ever-varying dialect which may or may not happen to be intelligible to the hearer. That the measure was acceptable to the people was a mistaken notion. The mass of the people to this day call the language of the Courts Farsee, and the only effect of the change was to bother the heads of offices and the Amlah. Persian is the favourite business of this part of the world, witness the Hindoo Native States in which it is universally used—but where it might be naturally anticipated that the Hindi would be adopted.

Yours, &c.

Mofussil, 10*th March*, 1843.

P. S. Since writing the above, I have been in Cutchery and there received a petition, of which I cannot deny myself the pleasure of sending you part of the opening sentence. Will you tell me of what country it is the vernacular?

Khodawundee punj beega pookhtu araze mey ek dehnu chah monroosee fidoee kee ki bunam Ujub Sing voozoorg Fidoee ke junab Jehan Muljaee Padshahee maf shoodu bood!!!

A true bill upon my honour! I have copied it word for word. Now this is not "the language of the people" be-devilled by my Amlah or by myself, but the spontaneous effusion of the petitioner. How could I have understood it had I not had the benefit of instruction in Persian from that respectable Moonshee of Fort William College, Abdoolah! You will say perhaps it is no language at all. It is not Oordoo certainly, nor Persian, but it is a language which one of "the People" has chosen to adopt, and which a very slight knowledge of Persian renders perfectly intelligible but which a mere Oordoo Scholar would be mightily puzzled by.

COURT AND FASHION.—The Royal accouchement is expected to take place in the latter end of March or beginning of April, after which it is said her Majesty and Prince Albert intend to visit Ireland at an earlier season than their last year's visit to Scotland.

Her Majesty the Queen Dowager continues in the possession of excellent health at Conford House. It is the general expectation that the Dowager Queen and court will leave for Malborough-house at the close of the ensuing month or early in March, and will remain in town two or three months, and then pass the summer at Bushy.

The marriage of the Princess Augusta of Cambridge and the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburgh Strelitz is to take place this month.

The marriage of the Crown Prince of Hanover is to take place in the third week of February, but the day does not appear to be fixed.

The health of Viscount Melbourne is quite re-established, and it is confidently stated by his friends that he will forthwith resume his attention to public business. It has, however, been thought advisable, in order to perfect his recovery, that his lordship should have the benefit of a few more weeks' country air before he resumes his attendance in the House of Lords. His lordship is at length able to use his left hand, of which he had lost the use by his late severe attack of paralysis.

The subscriptions to erect a monument to the late Lord Holland have already amounted to between 6000£ and 7000£.

The most distressing accounts have been received of the state of health of Sir C. Bagot, who is to leave Canada as soon as possible.

The Earl of Derby has experienced a slight return of the epileptic attack, from which he had been quite free for four years.

The will of the Countess Munster has been proved in Doctors'-commons by Lord De Lisle, Gen. Wyndham, and Mr. Cameron, the executors. Her Ladyship gives to her three younger sons 50,000*l*; and the remainder of her property to her eldest son, the present Earl: her daughters, the two Ladies Fitzclarence, having been separately provided for by their maternal grand-father, the late Earl of Egremont,

The sale of the library of the late Marques Wellesley occupied four days, and called forth an amazing deal of interest. The collection is in very good condition, and many of the books are valuable. It possesses the best editions, rather than works chiefly remarkable for being "excessively rare." There are first-rate, but there are no unique editions. Several of the classical works have MS. illustrations.—London Mail.

The Collegiate Institution of Liverpool, in Shaw-street, was opened on the 6th, with much ceremony. The Institution, is a large building, comprising three day-schools to accommodate the three great classes of society, with separate apartments, playgrounds, divisions of the lecture-hall, and so forth. The foundation-stone had been laid by Lord Stanley on the 22d Oct. 1840. A procession from the Town-hall took place in close carriages, and there was a numerous attendance, including the Bishop of Chester and several clergymen, the Mayor, Sir H. Douglas, Mr. W. Patten, and a great number of the Town-Council; Mr. W. E. Gladstone delivered the inaugural address. He started from the position that the state of our political institutions demands education for all classes, and concluded by stating that the Collegiate Institution was intended to communicate to the rising generation, as the rules declared, "sound religion in connexion with useful learning."

A vast mine was sprung at Dover on the 26th, to blow up the Round Down Cliff, the object being to make a roadway instead of a tunnel for the South-Eastern Railway. A mine, consisting of three cells, was planned and formed by Mr Cubitt, the engineer of the Company, in the base of the cliff, into which 18,500 lbs. of powder was placed; and the ignition of the charges by the voltaic battery was performed by Lieut. Hutchinson, of the Royal Engineers. Punctual to their arrangements, the miners communicated the electric spark to the gunpowder by their connecting-wires, on the signal being given; the earth trembled to half a mile distant; a stifled report, not loud, but deep, was heard; the base of the cliff, extending on either hand to upwards of five hundred feet, was shot as from a cannon, from under the superincumbent mass of chalk seaward; and in a few seconds not less than 1,000,000 tons of chalk were dislodged by the shock, and settled gently down into the sea below. Not the slightest accident occurred.

A report has been again going the round of the press, to the effect that Lord Ellenborough returns immediately to England, probably in the Cambrian frigate; and that his lordship is to be succeeded by the Marquis of Tweeddale.

Sir Charles Metcalfe, whose long habits of command in India, and whose subsequent experience in the West Indies so amply qualify him for the office, has been appointed Governor-General of Canada. He is to leave England for the seat of his government early next month.

The House of Assembly at Jamaica have voted the sum of 3000 guineas towards the erection of a marble statue of Sir C. Metcalfe, to be placed in the square in Spanish Town. This grant, together with the general subscriptions throughout the colony, will enable the committee to perform a work that shall acknowledge with due honour a country's gratitude for the services of a good and great man.

Letters from Constantinople seem to leave no doubt, that Col. Stoddart and Capt. Conolly have been murdered at Bokhara. It is stated that they could have got away through the favour of the Russian political agent, but refused his assistance; and after a number of trials and sufferings, they were at last taken from prison to the market-place, where Col. Stoddart was first beheaded. Capt. Conolly could still have saved himself had he consented to embrace Islamism; but he firmly rejected the offer, and immediately fell under the headsman's knife.—London Mail.

The following anecdote shows that, like his great friend, "the Duke," Lord Hill was on principle opposed to warfare. The truly valiant warrior laments the necessity of war when winning victories:—"The late Lord Hill, when he heard of the successful results of the Indian and Chinese wars, was so overcome that he exclaimed, with tears of joy bursting from his eyes, 'Thank God I have lived to hear of these glorious victories, and to know that there is an end to war, horrid war.' "—London Mail.

The Peninsular and Oriental Company's steam ship, Bentinck, a magnificent vessel, was launched on the 19th January from the building-yard of Messrs. T. Wilson and Co., of Liverpool. The Bentinck is almost in every respect the twin-ship of the Hindostan. She is built, in fact, from the same moulds, and is consequently of the same burden, which is about 2,020 tons. The only difference is that in place of diagonal timber fastenings, she has diagonal timber ceiling—the two modes being equally approved by scientific men, and both so closely approximating to what is deemed perfection as regards strength, that argument in behalf of either resolves itself into a mere matter of taste, rather than experience, in their respective merits. A more beautiful model was never turned out of any yard. She has a fine figure-head of Lord W. Bentinck, a carved stern, with the coast of arms and motto, "Craignez honte." Mrs. Williams undertook the duty of "throwing the bottle," and all being in readiness, at about 20 minutes past one o'clock, Mr. Thomas Wilson gave the necessary orders, and she started off splendidly, without a perceptible creak on her bed (notwithstanding her weight was nearly equal to her tonnage), but went on majestically along the ways, increasing in speed until she plunged into the deep, and released from her ties to land, bounded lightly, and rushed rapidly from the shore.—Ibid.

WHITEHALL, JAN. 26.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Viscount Melville, Lord Belhaven, H. H. Drummond, Esq., James Campbell, of Craigie, Esq., E. Twisleton, Esq., the Rev. Dr. P. And William Smith, Esq., Adv., to be Secretary to the said Commission.—Ibid.

HOUSE OF LORDS, FEB. 2.—OPENING OF THE SESSION.—The Lord Chancellor, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Duke of Buccleugh, the Earl of Shaftsbury, and Lord Wharncliffe, having taken their seats in front of the throne, and the Speaker, with a number of Members of the House of Commons, having appeared at the bar, the Lord Chancellor proceeded to read the following speech:—

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"We are commanded by her Majesty to acquaint you that her Majesty receives from all princes and states assurances of a friendly disposition towards this country, and of an earnest desire to co-operate with her Majesty in the maintenance of general peace.

"By the treaty which her Majesty has concluded with the United States of America, and by the adjustment of those differences which from their long continuance had endangered the preservation of peace, her Majesty trusts that the amicable relations of the two countries have been confirmed.

"The increased exertions which, by the liberality of Parliament, her Majesty was enabled to make for the termination of hostilities with China have been eminently successful.

"The skill, valour, and discipline of the naval and military forces employed upon this service have been most conspicuous, and have led to the concluson of peace upon the terms proposed by her Majesty.

"Her Majesty rejoices in the prospect, that by the free access which will be opened to the principal marts of that populous and extensive empire, encouragement will be given to the commercial enterprise of her people.

"As soon as the ratifications of the treaty shall have been exchanged, it will be laid before you.

"In concert with her allies, her Majesty has succeeded in obtaining for the Christian population of Syria the establishment of a system of administration which they were entitled to expect from the engagements of the Sultan and from the good faith of this country.

"The differences for some time existing between the Turkish and Persian Governments had recently led to acts of hostility; but, as each of these states has accepted the joint-mediation of Great Britain and Russia, her Majesty entertains a confident hope that their mutual relations will be speedily and amicably adjusted.

"Her Majesty has concluded with the Emperor of Russia a treaty of commerce and navigation, which will be laid before you. Her Majesty regards this treaty with great satisfaction, as the foundation for increased intercourse between her Majesty's subjects and those of the Emperor.

"Her Majesty is happy to inform you that complete success has attended the recent military operations in Affghanistan. Her Majesty has the greatest satisfaction in recording her high sense of the ability with which these operations have been directed, and of the constancy and valour which have been manifested by the European and Native forces.

"The superiority of her Majesty's arms has been established by decisive victories on the scenes of former disaster, and the complete liberation of her Majesty's subjects who were held in captivity and for whom her Majesty felt the deepest interest, has been effected.

"We are commanded by her Majesty to inform you that it has not been deemed advisable to continue the occupation, by a military force, of the countries to the westward of the Indus.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"Her Majesty has directed the estimates for the ensuing year to be laid before you. Such reductions have been made in the amount of the naval and military force as have been deemed compatible, under present circumstances, with the efficient preformance of the public service throughout the extended empire of her Majesty.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"Her Majesty regrets the diminished receipt from some of the ordinary sources of the revenue.

"Her Majesty fears that it must be in part attributed to the reduced consumption of many articles, caused by that depression of the manufacturing industry of the country which has so long prevailed, and which her Majesty has so deeply lamented.

"In considering, however, the present state of the revenue, her Majesty is assured that you will bear in mind, that it has been materially affected by the extensive reductions in the import duties, which received your sanction during the last session of Parliament, and that little progress has been hitherto made in the collection of those taxes which were imposed for the purpose of supplying the deficiency from that and other causes.

"Her Majesty feels confident that the future produce of the revenue will be sufficient to meet every exigency of the public service.

"Her Majesty commands us to acquaint you that her Majesty derived the utmost gratification from the loyalty and affectionate attachment to her Majesty, which were manifested on the occasion of her Majesty's visit to Scotland.

"Her Majesty regrets that in the course of last year the public peace in some of the manufacturing districts were seriously disturbed, and the lives and property of her Majesty's subjects were endangered by tumultuous assemblages and acts of open violence. The ordinary law promptly enforced was sufficient for the effectual repression of these disorders. Her Majesty confidently relies upon its efficacy, and upon the zealous support of her loyal and peaceable subjects, for the maintenance of tranquillity.

"We are commanded by her Majesty to acquaint you that measures connected with the improvement of the law, and with various questions of domestic policy, will be submitted for your consideration.

"Her Majesty confidently relies on your zealous endeavours to promote the public welfare, and fervently prays that the favour of Divine Providence may direct and prosper your counsels, and make them conducive to the happiness and contentment of her people."

The Earl of Powis in moving the Address congratulated the House on the prospects of peace, and proceeded thus. The next question to which I shall take the liberty of directing your lordships' attention is the conclusion of the war with China. We were all aware that nothing could equal the gallantry, the zeal, the spirit, or the energy of British troops or British seamen—(cheers)—but we did not expect that this war would so soon have been brought to such a happy result. Our troops and seamen had to encounter many difficulties and dangers, but notwithstanding, they have shown themselves worthy of their established reputation, and have taught the Chinese Emperor that peace is better with the British empire than a continuation of the present state of things—a state of things in which their own obstinacy had unfortunately involved them. It is with great satisfaction that I perceive the manner in which her Majesty has been pleased to characterise the exertions of the troops and seamen, both native and British, employed in this arduous service—(hear hear). The next subject to which I wish to direct your lordships' attention is the conclusion of the war in Affghanistan. That war has also been brought to a happy result. It would be unmanly if I attempted to deny the sad reverses which we previously experienced in the country, it would be unmanly if I did not admit that the difficulties under which we laboured in that country, in consequence of those reverses, were very great. It must be admitted, indeed that our reverses in that country had been disastrous in the extreme. Our duty in the first place was to redeem the honour of the British flag, which had been tarnished, and in the next to restore to liberty the portion of her Majesty's subjects, both male and female, who had had the misfortune to be detained in captivity in Affghanistan. I will not now stop to raise the question, whether those ladies were justified in placing themselves in such a situation as to subject themselves to the chance of being involved in the manner in which they had been. It is sufficient to know that they were involved in such circumstances to make it our duty, in the first place, to vindicate the honour of the British flag, and in the second place to restore those captives to liberty. Happily both those results have been accomplished—(cheers). The first step in the great work was accomplished by the noble and gallant defence of Jellalabad by Sir Robert Sale—(hear, hear.) That was the first step in advance. I need not allude more particularly to the noble and gallant conduct of the troops under the command of Gen. Pollock and of Gen. Nott, in the various operations in which they have been engaged in Affghanistan, but I must be allowed to express the great satisfaction I feel at the manner in which her Majesty has been pleased to characterise the exertions of the forces in those countries. I am happy to say that not only have the British forces merited these encomiums, but that the native forces of the East India Company have proved themselves equally worthy with the British troops. Both the British and the native Indian troops are entitled to be highly lauded for their conduct during the campaign. I may be permitted to allude more particularly to this subject on account of the connections of my family with India. I have an hereditary feeling on the subject.—(hear, hear.) His lordship having briefly alluded to the other matters noticed in the speech, read the usual address.

The Earl of Eglinton in seconding the address, briefly noticed that paragraph in the speech relative to Affghanistan, eulogising the conduct of the troops who were recently engaged there. He also noticed as briefly the peace which had been happily concluded, between China and this country, as well as what had been effected in Syria, and the arrangements entered into between the Russian Government and Great Britain.

The Marquis of Lansdowne expressed his approbation of the judicious manner in which the Royal speech had been framed, with the view of preventing the expression of any difference of opinion as to the terms of the address. With regard to the Corn Laws specially, no mention of which had been made in that speech, he believed that no period had ever occurred in which greater embarrassment had been occasioned to the trade and internal resources of the country, than since the present Corn Laws had come into operation. He regarded the conclusion of the Treaty of Washington with satisfaction, not unmixed with regret that the granting of such large concessions had not been made the means of arranging other important matters of settlement with the United States, which still remained prolific causes of misunderstanding, and referred especially to the question of the Oregon Boundary and the Right of Search. In adverting to our Eastern successes, he took occasion to notice the prevailing impression that some unwillingness had been manifested on the part of Lord Ellenborough to re-enter Affghanistan, and to the proclamations in which the Governor-General had imitated the Schahs and Sultans to whom the country he now ruled over had formerly been subject. He complained of the paragraph in the Royal Speech by which the successful issue of the China war was attributed to the "liberality of Parliament," and contended that the increased means of conducting the war had been suggested by Lord Auckland, for whom also he claimed the honour of having pointed out the very plan of operations by which the expedition had at length succeeded. He implored the attention of Ministers and of the country to the means of securing and improving the trade with China, now for the first time laid open to the civilized world; and after speaking in feeling terms of the patience with which the great mass of those who had suffered severe distress had borne with their privations, concluded by declining to offer any opposition to the Address.

The Duke of Wellington, in reply, vindicated the justice of the Chinese war, and contrasting the force which had been employed by the late and by the present Government, claimed for the latter all the credit of having at last, conducted it to a sucessful termination. He complained, that after the forbearance in the Royal speech of any allusion to our disasters in Affghanistan, the noble Marquis should have intruded such a topic upon that night's discussion; and, after referring to his own experience in India, and of military difficulties, declared that he was ready "to justify every order or movement, either one way or the other, the Governor-General had given since he took upon him the administration of the affairs of India." With respect to the Treaty of Washington, which had been also prematurely brought before their Lordships, he expressed his general approval of Lord Ashburton's conduct, but wished that all further discussion might be suspended until the papers were regularly before the House.

Lord Brougham, too, heartily concurred in the sentiment of universal exultation at the settlement of the differences of America, in comparison with the importance of which he was utterly indifferent to the sacrifice of a few miles of territory, or even of the navigation of the St. John's River. He then proceeded more in detail to defend the concessions which Lord Ashburton had made for the sake of peace, and contrasted most eloquently the blessings of such a policy with the horrors which our invasion of Affghanistan had entailed, not only upon the inhabitants of that country, but upon our unfortunate troops. Retaliation had been exacted for these horrors by devastation and excesses which he stigmatized as ruthless and superfluous—without object, except to gratify a fierce, brutal, and unchristian spirit of vengeance—and without result, except as working out a self-destructive policy which left on the minds of the Affghan an unquenchable abhorrence of the British name and character.

Lord Auckland shared with Lord Brougham the horror with which all war was to be contemplated, and had only entered upon that in Affghanistan, because, after long and painful hesitation, he felt convinced that it was essential to the very safety of England. He had at last determined to meet the threatening danger in advance, and the result was to dispel cause of apprehension then imminent, and now no longer formidable because thus decisively met. He referred without asperity to the late orders issued by Lord Ellenborough, but would decline to follow his example in bandying with him terms of depreciation and disparagement. He had laboured most earnestly during the last weeks of his administration to lessen the difficulties his successor would have to encounter, and his ill-success was owing rather to the force of circumstances than to any omission or mismanagement on his part. He defended the part he had taken in the direction of the several expeditions on the coast of China, and, without detracting from the vigour and ability with which the plans by which success was ultimately attained were carried out, he firmly believes that the same plans, and nearly the same amount of force would have been employed had there been no change of Government at all.

Lord Colchester endeavoured to exonerate Lord Ellenborough from any share of the blame which had been cast upon the British army for their excesses during the evacuation of Affghanistan, and described the difficulties the Governor-General had had to encounter upon his arrival in India. He found there a beaten army, a diminished revenue, the public works at a stand, and a mutiny among the troops. The revenue was now improving, the Affghan war had been concluded, and that in China, upon which so much blood and treasure had been uselessly expended by the languid operations of the late Government, was now brought to a successful termination.

The Marquis of Clanricarde declined to enter upon the Eastern questions until the papers were before the House.

Lord Minto defended the conduct of his late colleagues as to their naval operations on the coast of China; and was followed by Lord Ashburton, who, while deprecating a debate on the late treaty when there were so many other subjects before the House, explained that a settlement of the right of search had formed no part of his mission. On the boundary question he had made no important concessions which were not amply compensated, and he anticipated no difficulty on the subject of the Oregon territory.

Lord Haddington explained a mistake into which M. Guizot had fallen as to the number of cruisers employed by England in the suppression of the slave trade, and claimed credit for the present Board of Admiralty for the promptness with which a sufficient naval force had been despatched to conclude the Chinese war.—The Bishop of Exeter said that Great Britain was now for the first time to be introduced to China as a great and powerful country, and he hoped that advantage would be taken of such an event to make it known to the Chinese as a Christian country also.

After a few words from Lords Haddington and Minto, Lord Stanhope gave notice of a motion for the 9th inst., embodying an amendment which he had intended to have proposed on the Address.

The Address was then agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Lord Courtenay moved an address embodying the topics of the speech. He declared his peculiar satisfaction at the adjustment of the differences with America, and congratulated his hearers on the successes in Affghanistan, doing justice to the exploits of military valour, and to the no less striking examples of female fortitude, as exhibited in the East. He rejoiced in the fortune which had attended our efforts in China, and hailed in their results a hope of extended markets for our domestic produce; expressing a deep sympathy with his suffering countrymen, but deprecating all partial sacrifices as between the different classes of British industry, and avowing his confidence in the dispositions and abilities of her Majesty's present advisers to relieve the country and promote her welfare.

The address was seconded by Mr. P. Miles in adverting to Eastern events, he relied with peculiar gratification upon the pacific policy announced by our Indian Government, and upon the commercial prospects opened by our treaty with China. He touched, with praise, upon the arrangements concluded between England and America, expressed his regret for the domestic disturbances of last year, attributing them in great measure to the unprincipled endeavours of those who had excited the indigent; and declared his general approbation of the vigorous measures adopted to restore the credit and finance of the country.

Mr. C. Wood desired to reserve his judgment upon most of the points of the speech until the House should be in possession of further information: but gave his opinion decidedly in favour of the maritime right of visitation which was now claimed by England in her discussions with America. Generally speaking, he believed the speech would be satisfactory; but he lamented that on the subject of domestic distress it held out only sympathy, and no practical relief. With respect to finance, he apprehended that the state of affairs was worse than it had ever been before. Unless the produce of the income-tax should be double the amount at which Mr. Goulburn calculated it last year, the deficiency in the current quarter could not be made up.

Sir R. Peel trusted, that the address to be laid before her Majesty would be unanimous. On the subject of the American treaty he should be prepared to show, that, if it had not obtained for us all which we were strictly entitled to expect, it was, on the whole, an eligible adjustment, giving us more than had been awarded by the arbitration of the King of the Netherlands, and securing to us all that was really important in our claims. On the subject of finance, he admitted that there was a great deficiency. He had stated last year that, in addition to the deficiency which he had found on coming into office, he proposed to cause a further deficiency still. He had accordingly remitted duties on 700 articles; reductions had all taken effect; but the income-tax imposed to meet them had not yet come into productiveness. Undoubtedly there had been a great falling-off in the excise, mainly on the article of malt; but that had arisen in a great degree from the very unfavourable harvest of 1841. There still, indeed, existed severe distress; but let not the House infer thence that there must needs be a permanent diminution of consumption. Another cause of the late falling off had been the disturbed state of the manufacturing districts. This was not a fit occasion for entering at large upon financial statements; but he did now discern some favourable changes on which he could not forbear from founding good hopes. It was complained that the speech announced no new measure with respect to corn. He had no such great measures of change to propose as gentlemen seemed to expect. Whenever he should make a change, it would be a change accordant with the principles he had propounded; but he must always remember that in this country the general rule had been protection. He believed the reduction which had already taken place in the price of the necessaries of life had actually verified his prediction that the income-tax would be compensated by the general cheapness of living.

Lord J. Russell, in reference to a notice, given before the debate, of a motion of thanks for the services of our officers in India, adverted to some Indian topics upon which he deemed it requisite that further information should be previously furnished—one, the vindictive excesses said to have been committed by our troops; the other, the share of Lord Ellenborough in issuing the directions which led to our successes. There were a couple of proclamations too remarkable to be passed over. One of them contained such a misrepresentation of a preceding Governor's policy as was seldom uttered even in the heat of party debate; and it breathed, with respect to Affghanistan itself, a spirit rather of revenge than of calm and statesmanlike policy. The other proclamation was so oddly worded that many people who had last year been taken in by the clever imitation of a debate in the French Chambers, and were therefore much on their guard against a second deception, were thoroughly persuaded this was another hoax. For his own part, he viewed it more seriously; especially in respect of the tone which it took, a strange tone for a Christian Governor, of reverence for the objects of idolatrous worship. These things, he owned, had raised in him some misgivings as to the judgement of the individual intrusted with the grave and almost awful responsibility of governing India. With regard to the American treaty, he would say that he did not view it with the satisfaction which some seemed to feel; he doubted whether any treaty would be really advantageous which on its very face was detrimental to the country consenting to it. Coming to domestic affairs, he would declare that the experience of the past year had confirmed him in his objection to the sliding scale, and in his conviction that a fixed duty was the thing required. Under the present scale, the foreign wheat was poured in just as the home harvest was becoming available: the garden was watered at the moment when it was beginning to rain. He had, however, heard nothing to-night which convinced him that Sir R. Peel would not yet make much further alteration in the Corn Laws. But on such a question to withhold alterations which were really intended, was vastly inconvenient and injurious, and left everything unsettled both for the grower and for the labourer. The agricultural members were now placed by the Government in a very awkward situation; the arguments on which they were put to defend the tariff were arguments which forced them to condemn the Corn Law, and vice versa. He was no subscriber to the opinions of the Anti Corn Law Leaguers; he wished the Minister would propound something which should put an end to agitation. He was glad to hear that the prospects of the revenue were more favourable than they had been supposed; but he must say that the opinion he had always expressed, by his vote and otherwise, against the income-tax had been confirmed by the experience of what had recently happened.

Sir C. Napier and Mr. Wallace having spoken,

Lord Stanley censured Lord J. Russell for a premature introduction of the questions connected with Affghanistan. He would, however, now declare, that it was the intention of Ministers, on the approaching motion for a vote of thanks, to claim for Lord Ellenborough a share in the honour of our Indian successes. There might be faults to be found with the taste of particular phrases, but when the whole case, with all its facts, should be before the House, the House would judge of it as a whole, and then he should not fear their verdict—nay, he should scarcely fear the verdict of the noble Lord himself. If the Indian Government, in retiring within its limits, had left anarchy behind them in Affghanistan, it was that anarchy which the invasion of the country by the late Government had originally generated. He lamented the excesses of the Indian army, or rather of the undisciplined mass by which an Indian army is always followed; and he assured the House, that nothing was further from the mind of the Governor-General than to countenance the idolatry of the people under his rule. The noble Lord had blamed the Ashburton treaty as though it would have been easy to conclude a more favourable one; but if that was so easy, why had not the late Government done so in their ten years of Administration? He believed that the territory given up was valueless in an agricultural, and valueless in a military, point of view. If Lord Ashburton apprehended the separation of Canada from England, the boundary question, so far from being of less, must have appeared to him of so much the more importance; for when Canada should become a separate state, deprived of England's auxiliary resources, it would be of vital consequence to her to be protected by available limits from the encroachments of the United States.

Lord Palmerston, as it was his intention to bring the Ashburton treaty by specific motion under the notice of the House, would not now follow Lord Stanley into the details of the subject; but considered Lord Ashburton, by reason of his known opinions and connexions, to have been ill selected as a negotiator upon such a subject. The course taken by that noble person appeared to indicate either great incapacity in the Government, or great indifference in the negotiator. On the results of the Chinese war, Lord Palmerston expressed himself glad to concur in the congratulations of the speech. As he and his friends had been responsible for beginning that war, they could not but rejoice in its successful conclusion; and it was but fair to admit that the present Ministers had conducted it with as much earnestness and vigour as if they had themselves commenced it. As to India, he wished to know whether the thanks proposed were to include Lord Ellenborough; for he was satisfied that Lord Ellenborough had not been the author of the instructions by which the success had been directed; and as to his proclamations, they had really become a laughing-stock. Instead of thanking such a Governor, the Cabinet should have recalled him. After a few words about Syria, whose present affairs he treated as of minor importance, he adverted to the hardships of the income-tax upon persons of small means; he concluded by asking whether the number of cruisers on the coast of Africa was about to be reduced, and whether any change had been made in their instruction?

Sir R. Peel answered both questions substantially in the negative; and took that opportunity of expressing his regret that the attack on Lord Ellenborough had not been made earlier in the debate. He had waited before he rose to see whether any other member was about to speak; having then addressed the House, he was precluded from going into the question now; and it was that rule of the House which alone withheld him from entering into the vindication of his noble friend.

Sir R. Inglis would not condemn the general Policy of Lord Ellenborough, but he must express his deep disapprobation of that passage in one of the proclamations in which a Christian Governor, on a subject connected with religion, employed language such as no Mahometan ruler would have suffered himself to use. It was not, as Lord Stanley had put it, a matter of taste; the Government ought not to take that sort of ground, they ought to discontinue such an officer.

Mr. Villiers complained that the speech disregarded the sufferings of the people at home.

Lord Howick thought it the duty of the House, passing by all minor topics, to apply itself to the subject of the national distress. It had been said that the Opposition were acting unfairly in making charges against the Governor of India before the day fixed for the discussion of his conduct. On the contrary, the unfairness would have been in keeping back charges until that day. He thought much explanation would be requisite, both on the subject of the idolatrous ship, and on that of the military excesses, before the House could properly concur in any vote of thanks.

Mr. Hume was satisfied with the results accomplished in China and Affghanistan.

Mr. Ferrand said no good would come till machinery was taxed. The Opposition might cheer, and call upon the right hon. Baronet to carry out their principles; he had been seduced by their smiles last year: and how had his measures answered? Mr. Ferrand then challenged any of the members of the Anti-Corn Law League to meet him and argue their question openly in any town of Lancashire or Yorkshire.

Mr. Ewart censured the sweeping generality of Mr. Ferrand's imputations, and recommended the reduction of the duties on tea and on sugar, the opening of the trade with Ceylon, and above all the alteration of the Corn Laws.

Mr. Milner Gibson, Mr. Brotherton, Mr. G. Bankes, Mr. Serjeant Murphy, Dr. Bowring, Mr. M. Philips, and Capt. Pechell having spoken, the address was carried without a dissentient voice.

Feb. 3. Lord Courtenay having brought up the report of the Committee of the House of Commons on the Address, Mr. Walter rose; after expressing his approbation of those topics of the Address which refer to our foreign relations, and commending the Government for the manner in which the late disturbances had been suppressed, he adverted to the Corn Law, and declared his opinion to be still, as it always had been, in favour of a fixed duty as against a sliding scale.

Mr. Ward said the existing Corn Law could not stand; the agriculturists were becoming sensible to the necessity of changing it; and in the manufacturing districts the feeling against it was daily increasing.

Mr. Liddell rejoiced at the declaration made on the previous night by Sir R. Peel against further changes on this subject; and he was sure that any intimation from the right hon. Baronet of an intent to make more alterations would have produced vastly more alarm than was likely to arise from any now existing cause.

Mr. Villiers asked whether Sir R. Peel had meant, in his speech of the preceding night, to declare himself against all change in the Corn Laws?

Sir R. Peel said that he would resist any alteration in the existing law: he saw no other system which he thought likely to work so well; nor had he ever heard of any proposal which would give absolute security to the agriculturists against all change, except indeed a total abolition of duty, which to be sure would protect them against further reduction, because it would leave nothing to be reduced.

The following notices of motions have been given:—

Sir T. Fremantle, on behalf of the Secretary for the Colonies, said that he would, on the 14th of Feb., move a vote of thanks to the officers and men engaged in the Chinese war. Also, on behalf of the First Lord of the Treasury, that he would, on the 16th of Feb., move a vote of thanks to the Governor-General of India, and to the officers and men employed in the military operations to the west of the Indus. Mr. Roebuck that he should, on the 16th Feb., move for a committee to inquire into the policy which led to the war in Affghanistan.—London Mail.

Assassination of Sir R. Peel's Private Secretary.—From 23d to 28th Jan.—On the 20th, a most determined attack was made upon Mr. Drummond, the private secretary of Sir Robert Peel, at about half-past three o'clock, in the space between the Admiralty and the Horse-guards, where he was shot at by a man who approached him from behind. The assassin walked close up to Mr. Drummond, actually put the muzzle of the pistol into his back, and then fired. Immediately after the discharge, a policeman rushed up, and seized the criminal, who had returned the pistol with which he had shot Mr. Drummond to his breast, and had drawn out another from the same place, and was in the act of pointing it at Mr. Drummond, when the policemen seized him and pinioned his arms from behind. The pistol was discharged, but the aim of the assassin being thus diverted, the contents did not touch any person. Mr. Drummond was immediately conveyed to his brother's bank, and afterwards to his own residence, where Mr. Guthrie, Mr. B. Cooper, and Mr. Jackson examined the wound. It was ascertained that the ball had entered near the spine, and that it had made a circuit either over the hip-bone or under the lower rib, and then lodged near the pit of the stomach under the breast; thence the ball was extracted by Mr. Guthrie without any difficulty, as it lay near the surface. It was at first thought that the wound was not of a dangerous character, as it did not appear that any vital part was injured; but Mr. Drummond shortly after became worse, and expired on the morning of the 25th. Even when a pulse could be felt nowhere, and a slight fluttering of the heart was alone perceptible, he retained the power of moving his limbs, pressed Mr. Guthrie's hand, and with that sweet smile on his countenance which was so endearing, asked if all hope was past? On Mr. Guthrie's replying that all hope in this world was over, and that he must put his trust in God, he said, "Well, I have endeavoured to live honestly, doing as much good as I could, and I place my hope in God's mercy for my redemption." Turning to his sister, whose self-devotion had been unequalled, and who was crying by his side, he said, "We have lived long and happily together, and my only regret is in parting with you." He then asked if he should live much longer, and on being told perhaps an hour or two, he said, "The sooner the better—I don't feel pain," and added, with a smile, "That ugly French word mal-aise expresses most fully my burthen." Shortly after he said, "Will it be presumptuous in a man in my situation to ask for a little wine and water, with soda or potass water," and on its being given to him, he conveyed it to his mouth, drank, and shortly expired. A coroner's inquest has returned a verdict of wilful murder against the assassin. The following is the report of the post mortem examination:—

"The body of the late E. Drummond, Esq., was opened by Mr. C. Gardiner Guthrie on Thursday, the 26th of January, at 1 o'clock, in the presence of Dr. Chambers, Dr. Hume, Mr. Guthrie, Mr. Bransby Cooper, and Mr. Jackson. The ball entered behind, two inches from the spinal process or ridge of the backbone, between the 11th and 12th rib, and three inches distant from the inferior angle of the shoulder-blade. It was extracted in front, between the cartilages of the 7th and 8th ribs, about ten inches distant from that part which is commonly called the pit of the stomach. The ball after entering the cavity of the chest slightly abraded the left lung at its lower and inferior edge, which part was covered by recent lymph, the lung being internally sound. The left side of the chest contained nearly a pint of red-coloured serum. The ball perforated the diaphragm, or muscular partition dividing the chest from the abdomen; it grazed the fat of the left kidney, and passed through the great omentum below the stomach, to the part where it was extracted, injuring no very important organ in the abdomen in its transit, but giving rise to an effusion of blood, which was found coagulated and diffused, to the amount of perhaps 12 ounces. The absence of all that shock and alarm which almost invariably follows the opening into either of the great cavities of the body, together with the great difficulty of ascertaining the spot at which the ball had entered, from its small size, gave rise, during the first 12 hours, to the anxious hope that it had not passed so directly across. We consider such a wound to be inevitably fatal.

"W. F. Chambers. J. R. Hume. G. J. Guthrie.
Bransby B. Cooper. Richard Jackson."

Mr. Drummond has been buried at Charlton church, where lie the remains of the late Spencer Perceval.

The assassin, on being conveyed to Gardner's-lane police-station, gave his name as M'Naghten. He was then searched, and there were found on him two 5l. notes, 4l. in gold, and a deposit receipt of a Glasgow Bank for 750l., made out in the name of "Daniel M'Naghten." His demeanour was cool and collected, nor did there appear any evidence of insanity. The policeman who apprehended him heard him say, on his being arrested, "He" or "she" (the policeman is uncertain which) "shall not disturb my mind any longer." The prisoner had been seen loitering about the public offices for some days previously. The 21st the prisoner was brought before Mr. Hall, at Bow-street, but the examination failed to throw any light upon the motives which actuated him in his attempt to assassinate Mr. Drummond. It merely exhibited the usual characteristics which distinguish this class of criminals—sullenness, occasionally wrought up into violence, recklessness of his own condition, and indifference as to the fate of his intended victim. He made the following statement:—"The Tories in my native city have compelled me to do this; they follow and persecute me wherever I go, and have entirely destroyed my peace of mind. They followed me to France, into Scotland, and all over England; in fact they follow me wherever I go; I can get no rest for them night or day. I cannot sleep at nights, in consequence of the course they pursue towards me. I believe they have driven me into a consumption. I am sure I shall never be the man I formerly was. I used to have good health and strength, but I have not now. They have accused me of crimes of which I am not guilty; they have done every thing in their power to harass and persecute me, in fact they wish to murder me. It can be proved by evidence—that's all I wish to say at present." The Clerk.—"Is that all you wish to say?" Prisoner (hesitatingly),—"I can only say that they have completely disordered my mind, and I am not capable of doing anything compared to what I was. I am a very different man to what I was before they commenced this system of persecution." M'Naghten is known to be a native of Glasgow, where he has been considered a person of unsound mind. When at the Gardner's-lane police station an officer questioned him as to his knowledge of the party he had wounded, to whom the prisoner replied by stating, that he supposed it was Sir R. Peel. From this it is concluded that his intention was to murder the premier. A sergeant of the Glasgow police, who was sent for to see the prisoner, on arriving at Newgate recognized M'Naughten, with whom he has been acquainted from his earliest days down to 1839. During the whole of that period the officer speaks of him as a clever, shrewd person, but strongly imbued with Radical or Chartist principles; but, otherwise, he a was a most estimable character. One rather curious circumstance connected with the melancholy event occurred during the Queen's visit to Scotland, but whether it has anything to do with the lamented death of Mr. Drummond is at present unknown. Upon the visit of Her Majesty, Sir R. Peel invariably rode in one of the royal carriages, while his private carriage was occupied on every public occasion by the deceased gentleman, who, from that circumstance, was taken for the Premier by the greater part of the spectators. It is stated that M'Naughten was very anxious to see the Premier while in Scotland, and Mr. Drummond was pointed out as Sir R. Peel; and this impression was further confirmed by seeing the deceased gentleman more than once leave the Premier's residence in Privy-Gardens. True bills for murder have been found against the prisoner, and his trial has been postponed to the next sessions of the Central Criminal Court.

Lord Morpeth's opinion on American slavery may be collected from the following extract of a letter from his Lordship to Mrs. Chapman, which appeared in the Liberty Bell, an annual, published at the Anti-Slavery Fair held in Boston, Dec. 1842:—"Your note has followed me across the Atlantic, reminding me, that when you once asked me, "for the cause's sake," to write a page or two for your annual publication of the Liberty Bell, I promised that "I would think of it." I now write to tell you that I have thought of it, and the result of my ripe reflection is a convocation, that for the "cause's sake" it would be better for me to decline the honour of being one of your contributors. I say emphatically, "for the cause's sake." Since I had the pleasure of meeting you, all my personal observation of slavery has been made, and it has spread over a large surface. I have been present at debates on the subject in Congress. I have witnessed the working and effects of the institutions of the south and south-west of your republic, and in the island of Cuba. I have conversed with its friends, its enemies, and with neutrals, for such there are; I have met among planters and their families with persons not only of the most agreeable and refined intercourse, but of high honour, of real humanity, of deep and unaffected piety. Yet, so far from my views of the system having become modified, I should not feel myself precluded by any sentiments of delicacy, or even of gratitude, towards them, from giving the fullest and most public vent to my opinions or my feelings, if I could think that "the cause" would thence derive the slightest benefit. The same grounds would induce me to concur in any use to which it might please you to put what I now address to you, even with the purpose of proving that I should be out of place among the regular ringers of the Liberty Bell. * * * * *

If a foreign chime should be detected in the peal of the Liberty Bell, I know not what startling echoes it might not awaken in the deepest recesses of Accomac. There is a line which we happen to have often heard quoted among ourselves—

"——————Know ye not,
"Who would be free, themselves must strike the blow?"

Now, strong as my opinion would be upon the supposition of a possible permanence of the present system, I should think him a bold man who could contemplate without shuddering the issue of a negro insurrection. The true application of the line in your case is this:—Who would make free, themselves must strick the blow; and, moreover, if the peculiar difficulties of the struggle seem to point exclusively to American efforts for their solution, so for American brows ought to be reserved the undivided laurel of the triumph. Though I may have chanced to use the metaphor of war, yet it is plain, from the nature of the contest, from the relative number of the partisans, from the temper of the weapons employed, that if victory is to crown your exertions, it must be, as was the case in our own analogous, though less arduous achievement, a victory of argument, of reason, of patience, of conscience, of religion. Though I have forbid to myself the meanest place in your ranks, I shall remain no indifferent spectator of the continuing conflict. The more obivious marks of public attention on either side of the sea may be diverted to other fields of action; you will dispute about Presidents, and we shall wrangle over tariffs. I am not underrating the importance which attaches to such considerations; but after having trod the confines of slavery,—after having traced our dark-coloured brethren in every condition, from the boy with the crescent mark of native royality on his brow, just sold into eternal servitude upon the shore of Cuba, to the erect and disciplined recruit, who firmly treads the soil of Canada,—I feel that henceforth the main portion of my interest, hopes, and aspirations as to the course of public events in the world around me, must be directed to the onward march of human freedom. In that imposing cause the friends of the slave in the United States of North America appear to me to hold the most forward and critical position. May all your armoury be worthy of the service in which it must be wielded—the gentleness that subdues, the discretion that guides without keeping back, the zeal that never cools, but never inflames! To say all, may you do the work of Heaven, with the spirit of Heaven, accompanied by the sympathies, the hopes, and the prayers of the Christian people of all nations; but relying alone on the Everlasting Arms beneath you, and your own good use of the means entrusted to your disposal!"—London Mail.

CENTRAL AMERICA.—A new work is about to be published at Philadelphia, which will throw additional light on the wonderful antiquities of Central America. It is from the pen of Mr. Norman, who has just returned from that region, having gone farther and examined more closely than any previous traveller. He describes the ruined city of Chi Cheu, among the stupendous monuments of which—temples, pyramids, houses, and palaces—he wandered for five days. The Indians regarded him with astonishment; but they had among them no tradition, no suspiciou even, as to who were the people that inhabited that now silent city. There are the ruins of a temple 450 feet long—a pyramid 120 feet high—columns innumerable, strewn about or still standing, architecture vast and superb in its character and all in hewn stone, with ornaments and style resembling those of ancient Egypt, and now and then modern wild Indians. Norman says it must have been one of the largest cities in the world. Here, is indeed, a field for the Jonathan Oldbucks.—Correspondent of Chronicle.

CURE FOR HYDROPHOBIA.—At Udina, in Friule, a poor man lying under the frigthful tortures of hydrophobia was cured with some draughts of vinegar given him by mistake instead of another potion. A physician at Padua got intelligence of this event at Udina, and tried the same remedy upon a patient at the hospital, administering to him a pound of vinegar in the morning, another at noon, and the third at sunset, and the man was speedily and perfectly cured.—Pat.

GAMBLING.—In the Court of Exchequer, on Saturday week, a gambling transaction formed the foundation of an action between a person named Smith, and one Bond, the keeper of a gaming-house. The game usually played was "French hazard;" and persons of rank were in the habit of staking large sums against the "bank" held by Bond; to whom reverted all the profits of the game: in one evening they amounted to 2,000*l.* or 3,000*l.* Considerable losses were sustained, on various occasions, by Mr. Bredell, Captain Courtney, Mr. Fitzroy Stanhope, the Marquis of Conyngham, Lord Cantalupe, and General Churchill. The action was brought under the Act of the 9th Anne, c. 14, to recover from Bond the sums alleged to have been unlawfully won. A verdict for the plaintiff was returned on five out of ten counts, with damages, including the trible value of 3,506*l.* the sum lost. Half the damages go to the parish. The Times suggests that this Act might be more effectually used against gaming-houses generally than the usual criminal process.—Ibid.

BLASPHEMOUS PUBLICATIONS.—Our readers will probably have noticed a police report, in which the son of one of the Vice-Chancellors was charged with having given way to a very natural impulse, in breaking the windows of a shop in which two blasphemous placards were shamelessly exhibited. The Magistrates inflicted no fine; but the gentleman paid the amount of the damage, and was congratulated on having done an act which would, probably, lead to a prosecution of the individual whose windows he had broken. This is all very well; but is it right that a foul and disgusting nuisance should be left unpunished, until a private individual, giving way to a very creditable feeling of irritation, proceeds to a lawless act, of which a breach of the peace might have been the consequence, and by which he might have become involved in a very serious dilemma? We do not think that the respectable part of the public should have no other protection against annoyance from blasphemous publications than to go about breaking windows, in order to attract the attention of the persons whose duty it is to put an end to the nuisance.—Globe.

THE RAILROADS.—The silent growth of this gigantic system, is a marvel among the marvels of our age. The three great lines that connect the Metropolis with the second commercial, and the first manufacturing capital of our Island, the London and Birmingham, Grand Junction, and Liverpool and Manchester Railways, have cost upwards of 9,300,000*l.* sterling, or more than 42,000*l.* per mile. Their joint receipts, for one twelvemonth ending in June last, were about 1,529,790*l.*; from which, after deducting the working expenses, more than 950,000*l.* remained to pay the interest of the loan creditors and the dividends of the proprietors. A royal income to be noiselessly managed by a few British merchants!—Pat.

FOREIGN MISCELLANEOUS.—About the middle of last month there was a grand ceremony at Venice, called the solemn inauguration of the railroad between Venice and Padua. The Patriach, surrounded by all the first authorities, gave his benediction, and then delivered a very violent speech against such innovations as railroad travelling, which he thought would facilitate the introduction of books and liberal opinions!

From Constantinople we learn that Captain Williams, R. A., had been appointed by Sir S. Canning to proceed immediately to the Persian frontier to act as Commissioner, with those despatched by Persia and the Porte, and a Russian Colonel, named by M. de Boutenieff, for the final arrangement of all existing difficulties. Redschid Pasha had been directed to return by Vienna to consult with Prince Metternich on the Servian question, on which no decision would be taken by the Porte until his arrival at Constantinople. The Austrian Ambassador had presented an angry note to the Divan, complaining of obstacles opposed to a commercial company trading with Trebisond. A change of Ministry was expected at Constantinople.

Since the late troubles in Servia the Austrian government has been occupied in concentrating two armies on its frontiers, the one in Transylvania, the other in Sirmia. This fact sufficiently indicates the fears with which Prince Metternich observes the growing influence of Russia over the Servian people, who are, for the most part, attached to Russian institutions and strongly opposed to those of Turkey. The majority of the Servians are of the Sclavonic race.

Letters from Athens state, that the King, instead of adopting a radical change of system, and curtailing his reckless expenditure, which alone could save the country from a national bankruptcy, had determined to keep his present incapable Ministry in office. There was not a para in the Treasury, and the revenue for the year 1842 had fallen short of that of the preceding year by nearly one-third.—London Mail.

The Ashantee Princes, who were educated with so much care under a clergyman in this country, selected by Sir F. Buxton, and sent to the Gold Coast, and thence to the capital of Ashantee, accompanied by Mr. Freeman, the Wesleyan missionary, have not realised the expectations of their friends. Previous to leaving Cape Coast Castle, the princes evinced certain propensities, even while under the roof of the Governor, which had brought them under his Excellency's most severe reproof. His admonitions, however, were soon forgotten, for on their arrival at Coomasie, Prince William Quantamissa inveigled the wife of one of the Ashantee chiefs into a criminal liason, which, on being discovered, and the chief complaining to the king, the poor woman was taken to the door of the mission-house, where the prince was residing with Mr. Freeman, before whose eyes she was executed under circumstances of torture and barbarity too shocking to describe! Great apprehensions were entertained at Cape Coast Castle, when the last advices came away, that the affair would lead to an interruption of that good understanding between us and the King of Ashantee, which has so long subsisted.—Ibid.

FRANCE.—The King of the French opened the session of the French Chambers in person on the 9th January. The ceremony attracted a less crowd than usual out of doors; however, every precaution was taken to prevent "any accident" on the line of march from the Tuileries: it was lined by troops and National Guards; the seven Royal carriages which bore the Monarch and his suite were preceded by a strong detachment of dragoons, surrounded by a numerous and brilliant staff, and, followed by detachments of cavalry.

The King delivered his speech as follows:—"Gentlemen Peers and Deputies: The affection and the sympathy of the French nation have sustained my courage. My heart, ever suffering from grief, but full of confidence in your devotedness in calling you myself together to resume the course of your labours, I wished to conclude to-day what my grief had compelled me to leave incomplete at the opening of your session. You have already achieved much for the security and future prosperity of France; I thank you in her name. Whatever may be our trials, I and my family will devote to her service whatever strength and life the Almighty shall grant us. Thanks to the maintenance of public order and peace, the national prosperity, attested by the rapid increase in the public revenue, manifests itself beyond our most sanguine hopes. I feel confident that our prosperity will pursue its course without either interruption or obstacle. My relations with Foreign Powers continue to be pacific and amicable.

"The good harmony prevailing amongst the powers has strengthened the repose of the East, and procured in Syria for the Christian population the establishment of an administration conformable to their religious faith and their wishes. I deplore the disturbances which have recently agitated Spain. In my relations with the Spanish monarchy, my sole object has been to protect our legitimate interests, to preserve for Queen Isabella II. a faithful amity, and to testify for the rights of humanity that respect and protection which honour the name of France."

After referring to other subjects the King adds:—"Laws of Finance and various bills intended to introduce into our legislation and administration important improvements shall be immediately presented to you."

M. Lepelletier d'Aulnay, a Conservative, but not the Ministerial candidate, was elected one of the four Vice-Presidents of the Chamber of Deputies, in place of Gen. Jacqueminot, by 178 votes; M. Vivien, the Thiers candidate, having only 115. Ministers withdrew their own candidate to give M. Lepelletier d'Aulnay the better chance.

The Minister of Finance presented to the Chamber of Deputies on the 10th the budget for 1844, in which the expenditure was estimated at 1,281,000,000f. The Minister of Commerce next laid on the table the Sugar Bill, of which he read the principal clauses. He said that the system of equalization of the duties on colonial and domestic sugar had been discussed in the Council, and found impracticable, and that it had ultimately decided on suppressing altogether the manufacture of domestic sugar, and granting an indemnity, to the parties interested; which sacrifice, he trusted would be repaid in a few years, by the increase in the proceeds of the duties on the colonial article.

The Ministry obtained a triumph over, not merely the Opposition, but over the Mole party, in the formation of the bureaux, and the nomination of the commission of the Address. Only one member of opposition, M. Barrot, was appointed. All the others were of M. Guizot's opinions. The following were elected:—M. F. Real, Ministerial; M. Odillon Barrot; M. Dumon; M. Schauenberg; M. Bignon; M. Dupin; M. Debelleyme; M. Hebert; M. Paultet. The committee discussed seriatim every paragraph of the Speech. M. Dupin declared himself against the right of search, and was of opinion that a paragraph ought to be added to the address analagous to the arrangement on the subject concluded by Great Britain with the United States. Although eight out of nine of the members of the Committee on the address were Ministerial, five of those nine declared themselves against the maintenance of the treaties of 1831 and of 1833. It was agreed to introduce an amendment in the reply relative to the right of search.

The debate in the Chamber of Peers turned upon the right of search, and the abrogation or maintenance of the treaties of 1831 & 1833; and the discussion was conducted with much heat. M. Guizot and M. Duchartel stood forward in defence of the treaties of 1831 and of 1833, and declared that they would execute them so long as the slave-trade should continue to exist, and that in furtherance of that resolve, they would renew the licences whenever they should expire. M. Cunin, Gridaine, and Teste (Ministers of Commerce and of Public Works) were less explicit, evincing a tendency to 'trim;' but M. Lacave Laplagne stated, that on entering into the present Cabinet, he 'stipulated' that the treaty of 1841 should not be ratified, and added, that he should not be sorry to see a paragraph introduced into the address expressing a desire for the abrogation of the treaties of 1831 and 1833.

M. Guizot said the Treaty was there, and could not be broken by sophism. He admitted the general feeling against the Right of Search. He was bound to respect and take it into account, but he could not sacrifice to it, however strong, the true interests of the country. What were the facts? The French had not only signed the Treaties themselves, but had induced Spain, Portugal, Tuscany, the Hanse Towns, and a host of small states, to join it. One motive of doing so was to prevent England from having the exclusive Right of Search. How could France now withdraw herself, and leave these small naval states to the sole search of England? The treaties had been efficacious, for the slave trade which existed in French vessels in 1830 had ceased for them; at the same time the inconveniences of the Treaty had been exaggerated. In ten years there had been twelve complaints, seven of which were found groundless. Satisfaction had been given for two, and three remained in suspense. Then occurred the Treaty of July, 1840, from which had sprung exasperation; and exasperation fastened on the Right of Search as a grievance. The Right of Search was denounced. How get rid of it? By eluding the Treaties? No; this was mean and dishonest. As long as they existed they should be executed. Some proposed to open negotiations with England to get them modified; but, in the present state of irritation on the question on both sides of the Channel, how could a good result be attained? Were the question merely between Cabinets it might be arranged. But the public, and the press, and Parliament on both sides, had and would take up the question, which thus became impossible to solve. He had tried last year to get the Treaty of 1841 modified, but the English Minister refused, saying that, after the menacing and angry arguments made use of in the French Chambers, the dignity of England would be compromised if she yielded to such turbulence. As for me, exclaimed M. Guizot, I will not negotiate. Negotiation could only lead to a refusal on the part of England, which should either submit to or resent. The one would be weakness, the other folly. I will lend myself to neither.

Duc de Broglie showed what was the state of things previous to the revolution of July. Under the government of Louis XVIII. and Charles X. hosts of French vessels were engaged in the slave trade. The English in vain demanded the right of reciprocal search. The French denied it. But the English searched all the same, stopped, and seized, and condemned slave-traders under the French flag down to the very month after the revolution of 1830. We did but regulate a right and a custom existing de facto, said the Duc de Broglie; and we must either have done this or broken with the only power that showed itself friendly to our revolution.

After the Duc de Broglie had returned to his seat, no one asking to speak on the amendment, it was put to the vote, and the numbers were declared to be— For the Address, 118; for the Amendment, 67. Majority in favour of Ministers, 51.

SPAIN.—The following decree for the dissolution of the Cortes appeared on the 4th Jan.—"As Regent of the kingdom during the minority of Queen Isabel II., and in her royal name, &c., I decree,— First, the Chamber of Deputies is dissolved. Secondly, the third of the Senate will be renewed according to article 19 of the constitution. Thirdly, the new Cortes are convoked at Madrid for the 3rd of April. —Duque de la Vittoria." On the 1st Jan. the Regent entered the capital on horseback, accompanied by the civil and military authorities, who had gone out to meet him. The cortège was numerous, and the état major extremely brilliant. The reception of Espartero by the people was cold, and little or no enthusiasm was manifested by the troops or national guards.

The Phares des Pyrenées states that the Council of War sitting at Pampeluna had condemned to death under the presidency of General Goni, an ancient Carlist chief, 180 persons, alleged to have taken part in the events of October, 1841. The name of Gent O'Donnell figures at the head of the list.

The speech delivered by the King of the French, on opening the Chambers, did not produce a satisfactory impression in Madrid. Reports of a change in the Spanish Ministry have been afloat. The Corresponsal states that M. Capaz was the only member of the present Administration likely to retain office. According to El Sol, the new Ministry would be composed as follows:—Messrs. Francisco Lujan, Minister of the Interior; Landero, of Justice; Pedro Chacon, of War; Capaz, of the Navy; Rodrigues Real, of the Finances; and Jose Maria Calatrava, of Foreign Affairs and President of the Council:

Accounts from Barcelona state that the Captain-General had relaxed several of the severe orders issued by Van Halen. The payments on the forced contribution go on very slowly; the Captain-General had extended the period for the payment.—London Mail.

Head Quarters, Camp Khussroo Chokee, 20th Feb. 1843.

Under instructions from the Right Honourable the Governor General of India, and in anticipation of the orders of the Honourable the president in council, His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to direct the following arrangements to be adopted for breaking up, from the 1st proximo, the volunteer Regiment, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel G. W. A. Lloyd, raised for service in China.

Transfer rolls of the Native Officers and men, according to a form to be supplied from the Adjutant General's office, to be prepared and forwarded to the Adjutant General of the army, on receipt of which an abstract will be published in General Orders, showing the number and description of persons transferred to the several corps of Native Infantry.

The Men of the volunteer Regiment, who are now absent at their homes, on medical certificate, and to whom reference on the subject cannot be made, are to be entered in the transfer rolls as having chosen to return to the corps from which they originally volunteered.

Correct descriptive rolls of the Native Officers and men, including the date of enlistment and of promotion to the several ranks, with a General Certificate of the date to which they have received their pay and clothing, the period of leave granted to them, and all other necessary information, to be transmitted by the officer commanding the volunteer battalion, to the commanding officers of the Regiments to which the volunteers shall be transferred.

Each individual is also to be furnished with the prescribed pay and clothing certificates; and the men are to be informed, that if they do not join the corps to which they are transferred, at the expiration of their leave, they will be struck off the strength of it unless they shall be able to assign a satisfactory reason for their protracted absence.

The Native officers and men transferred, are to take rank in the corps to which they are allotted agreeably to their standing in the service; and the juniors of each rank in excess to the establishment of regiments, are to be returned as "supernumeraries," until vacancies shall occur for bringing them on the strength.

After the number of volunteers distributed, according to their own choice to each regiment, has been announced in general orders, they are to be borne on the returns of corps as "appointed, not joined" and in any case, where the number of men transferred is known before the rolls are received they are to be enrolled by numerals, as subadar No. 1, appointed by general orders of                 from the Bengal volunteers, and so on. In stating the number wanting to complete in the returns of regiments, the volunteers "appointed, not joined" must be adverted to as forming part of the actual strength; and in stating the "supernumeraries," only such are to be included under this head as are in excess to the total establishment of each rank in the corps.

The records of the battalion, with descriptive lists of the books and papers, are to be forwarded to the office of the adjutant general of the army in Calcutta; the arms, accoutrements, colours, camp equipage, and all other public stores and property, now with the corps, are to be sent to the arsenal of Fort William, after being minutely surveyed by a committee, appointed by the commanding officer at Barrackpore, the proceedings of which are to be transmitted to the Military Board.

The Major General commanding the Presidency Division will direct the staff sergeants to do duty, in their present grade, with regiments at Barrackpore.

The following orders are confirmed:

The Benares Division Order of the 1st instant, appointing Assistant Surgeon O. Manger, M. D., to the medical charge of, and hospital apprentice J. A. Fleming to join and do duty with the detachment of her majesty's 21st fusiliers proceeding to Nagpore under the command of Major R. T. R. Pattoun, of that corps; and directing apprentice J. Bryer to do duty in the hospital of the detachment of her majesty's troops, proceeding to the upper provinces under the command of Captain C. T. Van Straubenzee, of her majesty's 39th foot.

The Benares division orders of the 3d and 4th instant, the former appointing Surgeon C. B. Francis, of the 47th regiment of native infantry, to afford medical aid to the artillery division, on its return from the annual practice at Sultanpore; and the latter directing unposted Ensign G. H. M. Mason to do duty with the 47th, instead of with the 53d regiment of native infantry, as announced in general orders of the 5th of December last.

Head Quarters, Camp Lucheewal'a, 21st February, 1843.

The Cawnpore division order of the 8th instant, appointing Assistant Surgeon J. Harrison, M. D., to the medical charge of the 1st infantry levy at Futtehgurh: and directing Assistant Apothecaries E. Ensor and J. Gorman, (1st) attached to Her Majesty's 9th Lancers, to act, the former as Apothecary with Her Majesty's 50th Foot, and the latter as steward in the hospital of the corps to which he at present belongs, is confirmed.

The following removals and postings will take place in the Regiment of artillery:

Captain C. G. Dixon, (on staff employ) from the 3d Company 7th Battalion to the 9th Company 7th Battalion.

Captain the Honourable H. B. Dalzell, (on staff employ) from the 5th Company 2d Battalion to the 8th Company 6th Battalion.

Head Quarters, Camp Deyrah, 23d February, 1843.

At a General Court Martial assembled at Benares, on Monday the 16th day of January 1843, Captain Kenneth Campbell, of the 45th Regiment Native Infantry, placed in arrest by order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, was arraigned on the following charge:—

Charge.—"For conduct highly unbecoming the character of an officer, in having addressed a public letter to Lieutenant Alexander Fraser, Acting Adjutant of the Regiment, dated Juanpore, 11th November 1842, containing most disrespectful and contumacious observations on the opinions and orders of his superior officer, Colonel Charles Ramsay Skardon, commanding the 45th Regiment Native Infantry.

Finding.—"The Court find the prisoner Captain Kenneth Campbell, of the 45th Regiment Native Infantry, guilty of the charge preferred against him, with exception of the words "and contumacious," of which they acquit him.

Sentence.—"The Court, having found the prisoner guilty, to the extent above recorded, do sentence him, Captain Kenneth Campbell, of the 45th Regiment Native Infantry, to be severely reprimanded, in such manner as His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief may be pleased to direct."

Revised finding and sentence.—"The Court, having reconsidered their finding and sentence, beg, with every deference to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, to adhere to the same."

Confirmed.

(Signed) J. NICOLLS, Genl.

REMARKS BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

The Commander-in-Chief's opinion on this case being much at variance with the finding of the Court, which acquitted the prisoner of using contumacious observations, His Excellency must again express his disapprobation of that part of their verdict.

Captain Campbell officially, in writing, calls his commanding officer's remarks "extraordinary opinions," he says also, to the Adjutant, "I will not take the trouble of showing how untenable this opinion is;" again, "the last paragraph of your letter was not required."

No officer who has served 21 months (not 21 years) in this or any army, should be ignorant of the extreme disrespect with which Captain Campbell dared, in those expressions, to treat his commanding officer.

The excuses offered in his defence are, that he wrote in a moment of irritation, and that he would have withdrawn the offensive letter had opportunity been given to him. The Commander-in-Chief cannot accept either. Irritation with senior officers, on duty, is indefensible, and to write impertinent letters in the chance of being allowed to retract, equally so.

Upon the second excuse too, His Excellency must further remark, that when an opportunity of retracting was permitted (in his defence) Captain Campbell, so far from withdrawing, or explaining away what was offensive, has, in several places, supported his error; "his opinions," he says, "were consistent with honest retort in self defence.

No army can stand if all are allowed to feel and act in this way, and this unmilitary expression is most highly condemned.

The reprimand, which His Excellency desires to convey in the above remarks, having been read to Captain Campbell by the officer commanding at Benares, at his quarters, Captain Campbell is to be released, and to return to his duty.

Head Quarters, Camp Deyrah Dhoon, 2d March, 1843.

The Commander-in-Chief in India is pleased to grant to Captain T. J. Taylor, of the 78th Highlanders, the rank of Captain, by Brevet, in the East Indies only, from the 12th of March, 1837.

2. The Commander-in-Chief in India is pleased to approve of the resignation from the service, by the sale of his commission, of Ensign Robert Cecil Lemon of the 2d or Queen's Royal regiment of Foot, subject to the confirmation of Her Majesty.

3. Lieutenant Colvill, 39th Foot, upon the expiration of the leave of absence granted him in the General Order of the 8th January 1843, will join the depot of his corps, at Agra.

4. The leave of absence granted to Lieutenant Forbes, 3d Light Dragoons, in the General Order of the 15th January 1843, is prolonged to the 5th May next; and he is permitted to proceed to England, via Calcutta, instead of Bombay.

5. The following orders are confirmed:

By the General officer commanding the Cawnpore division, dated the 23d January 1843, appointing Assistant Surgeon Scot, M. D., of the 13th light infantry, arrived with the sick of the 1st division 9th Lancers, to the medical charge of the detachment of Her Majesty's and the Honourable East India Company's troops, proceeding towards Meerut, under the command of Captain Mackenzie.

By Major General Fast, commanding the Sirhind division, dated the 5th ultimo, directing the officer commanding the 13th light infantry to detach a party of non-commissioned officers and privates, under the command of Lieutenant Mein, to Kurnaul, for the purpose of bringing up the women, children and heavy baggage to the head quarters of the corps.

By Lieutenant-Colonel Wallace, commanding troops on the march to Ferozepore, dated the 11th ultimo, appointing Assistant Surgeon Mapleton, 40th Foot, to the medical charge of the detachment of that corps, from the 1st January 1843.

By Lieutenant-Colonel Campbell, K. H., commanding the 9th Lancers, dated the 26th January, 1843, appointing Captain Macartney, to act as riding master to the corps, upon the arrival of the head quarters at Cawnpore, for a period of six months from the date thereof.

By Major Pasley, commanding the 49th Foot, dated the 13th ultimo, appointing Lieutenant Bartley, to act as interpreter to the corps.

6. Leave of absence is granted:

3d Light Dragoons.—Captain Yerbury, to the hills north of Dehra, from the 1st April to the 1st October 1843.

9th Lancers.—Lieutenant Macartney and Cornet Hawtrey, from the 11th October to the 9th November 1842.

3d Foot.—Ensign Leeson, to proceed to England, pending the acceptance by Her Majesty of his resignation from the service, by the sale of his commission.

17th Foot.—Lieutenant Bourke, to England, for 2 years from the date of embarkation.

28th Foot.—Lieutenant Travers, to remain at Ceylon, from the 8th April 1842, to the 26th April 1843, on medical certificate.

29th Foot.—Ensign Breedon, to Calcutta, for 4 months from the 15th ultimo, on medical certificate.

39th Foot.—Lieutenant Fraser, from the 19th ultimo, to precede the regiment to Agra, on medical certificate.

49th Foot.—Captains Dennis and Rainey, to precede the regiment to England, by the overland route.

62d Foot.—Pay-master Lane, for two months from the 27th April 1842.

62d Foot.—Lieutenants Owen and Lindesay, to England, for 2 years from the date of embarkation.

By Order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,
H. G. SMITH, Major Genl.
Adjt. Genl. H. M. Forces in India.

---

Head Quarters, Camp near Pulwul, 28th February, 1843.

The following orders are confirmed:

The regimental order issued on the 6th ultimo, by Lieutenant-Colonel J. Eckford, appointing Lieutenant J. Plunket to act as Adjutant to the 6th native infantry, during the absence, on leave, of Lieutenant and Brevet Captain J. G. A. Rice.

The district order issued on the 2d instant, by Lieutenant-Colonel R. Dalamain, commanding in Arracan, appointing Lieutenant H. Hollings, interpreter and quarter master of the 66th regiment of native infantry, to act as district and station staff.

The regimental order of the 16th instant, by Lieutenant-Colonel C. R. W. Lane, appointing Lieutenant W. A. Cooke to act as Adjutant to the 2d regiment of native infantry, (grenadiers) vice Young promoted.

The undermentioned officers have leave of absence:

73d Regiment Native Infantry.—Colonel S. Swinhoe, from 25th March to 25th November, to visit Simlah, on private affairs.

Head Quarters, Camp Synapore, 1st March, 1843.

Under instructions from the Right Honourable the Governor General of India, the officer commanding at Agra will direct the guns and waggons of No. 16 light field battery to be sent to join Brigadier F. Young's force in Bundlecund, under escort of a detail from the 61st regiment of native infantry, and the Major General commanding the Cawnpore division will detach a Company of native artillery-men to the same destination, for the service of the battery.

The 3d Company 4th battalion of artillery, now in Bundlecund on being relieved by the native company of artillery from Cawnpore, will rejoin the head quarters of the battalion at that station.

Major General J. H. Littler is, with the sanction of Government, permitted to reside at Mussoorie, and draw his pay and allowances from the Meerut pay office.

2d Lieutenant H. Tombs, of the 5th Company 5th Battalion, is appointed to do duty with the 3d Company of that battalion at Saugor.

The undermentioned officers have leave of absence:

11th Regiment Light Cavalry.—Cornet F. B. Greville, from 8th February to 8th March, to remain at Meerut, on medical certificate.

2d European Regiment.—Captain J. L. Revell, from 20th February to 20th March, to visit Simlah, on private affairs.

60th Regiment Native Infantry.—Captain J. T. Gells, from 15th March to 15th September, to visit Simlah on private affairs.

60th Regiment Native Infantry.—Lieutenant C. Alexander, from 15th April to 15th October, to visit Simlah, on private affairs.

63d Regiment Native Infantry.—Captain R. Houghton, from 1st February to 6th April, to visit Simlah, on private affairs, and await the arrival of his regiment at Delhi.

65th Regiment Native Infantry.—Lieutenant T. Gordon, from 15th February to 15th June, to visit the Presidency, preparatory to applying for furlough to Europe on medical certificate.

Invalid Establishment.—Captain V. Forbes, from 14th January to 14th July, to remain at the Presidency, on private affairs.

Head Quarters, Camp Badshahbagh, 2d March, 1843.

Under instructions from the Right Honourable the Governor General, His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to publish the following extract from a General Order, issued by his Lordship, in the Judicial and Revenue Department, at Delhi, on the 18th ultimo:

6. Major Sleeman, will form two battalions of Military Police for the Saugor and Nerbudda territories, and will draft into these battalions such men of the Nerbudda Sebundy corps as may be thoroughly fit for active service, and of good character.

8. The Military Police will perform all the duties heretofore performed by the Nerbudda Sebundy corps, and by the peons, chuprassies, burkundauzes and others, attached to the Revenue and Judicial Department; and all existing establishments of those departments will be gradually discharged, as Major Sleeman may consider the battalion of police sufficiently formed to be able to undertake their several duties.

9. Each battalion will consist of twelve companies or tomans, and each of them will consist of 1 tomandar, at 50 Rs. per mensem; 1 Jemadar, at 30 ditto; 10 Havildars at 12 ditto; 20 naicks, at 8 ditto, and 30 Sepoys, at 5 ditto. Two of the tomans will be considered a depot toman, and will always remain at the Head Quarters of the battalion.

10. Sergeant Major William Kelly, and Quarter Master Sergeant John Michael Bruen, of the sappers and miners, (late serving with Broadfoot's sappers in Affghanistan) are appointed Adjutants of the 1st and 2d battalions of police in the Saugor territory.

11. Adjutant William Kelly, and Adjutant J. M. Bruen, are promoted, respectively, to the rank of conductor and sub-conductor of ordnance, and will be borne as supernumeraries in the ordnance Department, while they serve with the police battalions, without prejudice to any claims they may acquire to future advancement, and with the right to the pension attached to the rank to which they are, or may be hereafter respectively promoted.

12. The officer in command of the sappers and miners will select from amongst the volunteers, who may offer themselves out of the native commissioned, non-commissioned, officers and sepoys, who served in Broadfoot's sappers and miners, 2 Jemadars for tomandars, 2 Havildars, for Jemadar, and 20 Sepoys for naicks.

13. The officers in command of the 3d regiment Bengal native infantry, 11th ditto ditto, 13th ditto ditto, 24th ditto ditto, 50th ditto ditto, and 67th ditto ditto, 42d regiment Madras native infantry, 43d ditto ditto, now serving in Bundlecund, or in the Saugor and Nerbudda territories, will select from amongst the volunteers, who may offer themselves from their respective regiments, 1 Jemadar for tomandar, 1 Havildar for Jemadars, and 20 Sepoys for naicks.

14. The officers commanding the 40th regiment Bengal native infantry, 26th ditto Bombay ditto, will select, in the same manner, 5 Sepoys for naicks, from the detachments of their regiments now employed in the Bundlecund and Nerbudda territories, respectively.

16. The officers commanding the 2d regiment native infantry, 16th ditto ditto, 42d ditto ditto, 35th ditto ditto, 33d ditto ditto, regiment of Kelat-i-Ghilzie, 15th regiment native infantry, 73d ditto ditto, will in like manner, select 1 Jemadar for tomandar, 1 Havildar for Jemadar, and 10 Sepoys for naicks.

17. The several native commissioned officers and sepoys, who may so take service in the police battalions, will be borne on the rolls of their respective corps, as supernumeraries and will retain whatever claims to pension they would have had, had they remained with their present corps.

The volunteers from the several corps are to be sent to Saugor, with instructions to report themselves to Major Sleeman.

Sergeant Major P. McDermott, and Quarter Master Sergeant Thomas Cossey, of the 1st depot battalion, and Sergeant Major Cornelius Lyons and Quarter Master Sergeant William McVeigh, of the 2d depot battalion, are appointed to the 1st and 2d battalions of Military Police.

Commanding officers will be careful that leave is granted with strict regard to priority of claims, and will limit the time granted to individuals, with reference to the distance of their homes, and the nature of their business, so as to allow as full a participation as possible in the indulgence.

Officers and men going on furlough, are to be reminded of the penalties attached to the overstaying of their leave, as well as the necessity of giving notice to their regiments, if sickness should detain them at their homes.

The General Orders of the 26th April, 1840, and 21st September, 1841, containing precautionary directions to native troops, when travelling to or from their regiments, are to be particularly explained to the officers and men of every regiment, previous to their departure on leave.

The attention of commanding officers is directed to General Orders of the 19th February 1834, regulating the mode of granting the leave now authorized, as regards non-commissioned officers.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is also pleased to direct, with the concurrence of the Right Honourable the Governor General, that leave be granted to the Kelat-i-Ghilzie regiment, from the date this order may reach regimental Head Quarters, to the extent of one half of the native commissioned, non-commissioned officers and sepoys, the leave to terminate on the 15th of October next.

The order issued on the 19th of December last, by His Excellency Lieutenant General Sir H. Gough, G. C. B. commanding the troops in China, directing Ensign H. T. Bartlett, of the 21st regiment of native infantry, to join and do duty with the Bengal Volunteer Regiment, is confirmed, under the authority of the Right Honourable the Governor General of India.

By Order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,
J. R. LUMLEY, Major General,
Adjutant General of the Army.

MEMORIALS OF AFFGHANISTAN.

BY J. H. STOCQUELER.

ON the 15th of April, 1843, will be published, in one volume, the whole of the dispatches, narratives, state papers, &c. connected with the expedition to, and occupation of, Affghanistan, between the 1st of October, 1838, and the 1st October, 1842. These documents, arranged in chronological order, will be connected by a brief and succinct narrative of the operations in Affghanistan and Scinde, commencing with the assembly of the Army of the Indus at Ferozepore, and terminating with the evacuation of the former state after the restoration of the prisoners.

The object of this work is to present, at one view, the whole of the occurrences which have distinguished a most eventful period of British Indian History, and thus to facilitate the references of the student, the politician, and the soldier.

The work will be illustrated with sketches of remarkable places, striking incidents, portraits, costumes, &c. &c.

PRICE 20 RUPEES.

☞ Amongst the documents contained in this work will be found Lord Auckland's Proclamation, the despatches of Sir John Keane, General Wiltshire, General Sale, Sir Willoughby Cotton, General Pollock, General Nott, &c.; the narratives of Captain Outram's pursuit of Dost Mahomed; of Captain Gray's escape; of the destruction of the Goorkha Battalion; of Captain Ferris's escape from Pesh Bolak; of the disaster which befell Skinner's horse in the Bolan Pass; of Major Brown's defence of Kahun; of the defence of Kyeint-i-Ghilzie; of the rise and progress of the insurrection at Cabul; of the retreat from Cabul to Jellalabad, &c.; Lord Ellenborough's Proclamation, &c. &c.

Applications for the work are to be addressed to the Editor of the Englishman.

The order issued on the 26th ultimo, by Colonel T. Monteath, C. B., commanding the escort of the Right Honourable the Governor General, directing Surgeon W. Darby, of the 1st Regiment of Light Cavalry, to afford medical aid to the detachment of artillery and to the 35th Light Infantry, attached to the escort.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to direct the following removals of field officers:

Lieutenant Colonel G. Moore, from the 59th to the 7th Regiment of Native Infantry, vice Lieutenant Colonel S. Moody, from the latter to the former corps.

Lieutenant Colonel T. Oliver, from the 12th to the 30th Regiment of Native Infantry, vice Lieutenant Colonel C. F. Wild, (on leave) from the latter to the former corps.

These transfers to have effect from the date of arrival at Neemuch and at Lucknow, severally, of the 59th and 30th Regiments of Native Infantry.

Ensign Henry Joseph Hughes is, at his own request, removed from the 71st, and posted to the 62d Regiment of Native Infantry.

Bombardier James R. Smith, of the 5th Company 3d Battalion of artillery, is promoted to the rank of Serjeant, transferred to the Town Major's list, and under instructions from Government, appointed drill sergeant to the lower orphan school, vice serjeant William Wharton, who is remanded to the 1st troop 3d brigade of horse artillery.

The undermentioned officers have leave of absence:

1st Regiment Light Cavalry.—Lieutenant and Brevet Captain G. P. Ricketts, from 25th January to 25th April, to visit Meerut, on private affairs, and to precede the Regiment to Cawnpore.

71st Regiment Native Infantry.—Captain G. D. Roebuck, from 7th January to ———, to await the arrival of his Regiment at Barrackpore.

The Regimental order issued by Lieutenant Colonel F. Grant, on the 9th ultimo, appointing Lieutenant R. H. D. Tulloh to act as interpreter and quarter master to the 39th Regiment of Native Infantry, is confirmed.

Captain J. V. Forbes, of the invalid establishment, is directed to join and do duty under the orders of the officer commanding the European invalids at Chunar.

Veterinary Surgeon W. P. Barrett, at present attached to the 3d troop 2d brigade of horse artillery, is posted to that brigade, vice Green removed from the 2d to the 1st brigade, with which he is now serving.

By Order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,

J. R. LUMLEY, Major General,

Head Quarters, Camp Umballah, 3d February, 1843.

The following orders are confirmed:

The presidency division order of the 18th ultimo, directing Ensigns J. A. Law and C. S. Fowle, recently admitted into the service, to join and do duty, the former with the 31st Regiment of Native Infantry at Cawnpore, and the latter with the 47th Regiment of Native Infantry at Benares.

The leave of absence, for five months, granted in General orders of the 13th June last, to Lieutenant and Brevet Captain Lord Henry Gordon, of the 2d European Regiment, and now a Captain in the 5th Regiment of Native Infantry, to visit the presidency, preparatory to applying for permission to resign the service, is commuted to leave, for the same period, to visit the presidency, preparatory to applying for furlough to Europe, on Medical Certificate.

Lieutenant W. H. Jeremie is re-appointed to act as Interpreter and Quarter Master to the 36th Light Infantry, and Lieutenant R. C. Tytler, of the same corps, is re-appointed to act in the same situation with the 2d Regiment, grenadiers.

Surgeon R. Foley, M. D., is removed from the 1st to the 56th Regiment of Native Infantry, and Surgeon J. Innes, M. D., from the latter to the former corps.

Assistant Surgeon W. Martin, of the 32d Native Infantry, is posted to the 57th Regiment.

The undermentioned officers have leave of absence:

7th Battalion Artillery, Major J. Rawlins from 1st November 1842 to 1st December 1842, on private affairs.

Medical Department.—Superintending Surgeon A. Halliday, M. D., Benares division, from 1st February to 1st February 1844, in extension, to remain at Darjeeling, on medical certificate.

Head Quarters, Camp Khroodah, 4th February, 1843.

The Regimental Order issued on the 3d of November last, by Lieutenant Colonel T. Wright, commanding Her Majesty's 39th Regiment of Foot, directing the acting Quarter Master of the corps to provide coolies, to supply deficiencies arising from desertions amongst the puckallies and bheesties of the Regiment, on its march to Ferozepore, is confirmed, with the sanction of government.

The undermentioned officers have leave of absence:

Engineers.—2d Lieutenant R. J. Walker, from 17th January to 15th November, to reside at Simla, on medical certificate.

Head Quarters, Camp Boorrah, 8th January, 1843.

The district order issued on the 19th ultimo, by Major General E. F. Waters, C. B. commanding in Rohilcund and Kumaon, directing all reports of the district to be made to intercourse of the Chinese and the English. The latter roamed about the country in search of game up to the very walls of Ningpo in perfect security. The feelings of the people, patrician as well as plebeian, in the neighbourhood of Canton, are however characterized by a deadly hostility. At the head of the anti-British party are the gentry and the men of Letters. They have formed themselves into a "Society of spirit and loyalty," the object of which is to exterminate the English. They have placed their services at the disposal of the Commissioner, and entreated his permission to exhibit their loyalty by our destruction. The Commissioner thus alludes to this circumstance in his Proclamation of the 25th January:

"The High Commissioner, has further heard a rumor, that the Gentry and Scholars of the country around Canton, acting still under the name of raising a patriot band of soldiers, to avenge this quarrel, have formed a "Society of Spirit and Loyalty." And sundry of these gentry and scholars, have recently presented themselves before the High Commissioner, to make a surrender of their services for purposes of war. These things are done, indeed, under the momentary impulse of a burst of loyalty and patriotism. But they are in direct opposition to the sacred purpose of our August Sovereign, tenderly to cherish men from afar, and well-entreat those who yield him obedience,—and not less opposed to His gracious pleasure, that hostilities should cease and commerce be renewed."

It is difficult to account for the growth of such a feeling among those who have had the longest experience of our character, and have reaped the largest profits from our commerce, while those in the north who know us only as the conquerors who have humbled the Celestial dynasty, welcome our residence among them with joy. The natural effect of this feeling at Canton will be to build up the prosperity of Hong Kong on the ruins of the old imperial port.

The opium trade in the North appears to have received the strongest impulse from the success of our arms, and the establishment of our authority in Chusan and Amoy. It was selling at very high prices; eight vessels laden with it were lying near Chusan, and the inhabitants of the Coast seem to have had a spell of Opium, such as they have never enjoyed before. We hear nothing of any attempt of the Chinese preventive service to seize the forbidden drug. The fear of breaking with us, has apparently paralyzed the officers of the Empire. The subject will be brought forward doubtless at the ensuing conference between Elepoo and Sir Henry Pottinger; and the latter will urge the propriety of legalizing the trade, and making it contribute to the Imperial treasury. This would doubtless be the wisest course the Emperor could pursue,—only it is hard for an eastern potentate, and harder still for one of the Tartar Dynasty, to be obliged to eat his own words. The Chinese Government cannot physically prevent the introduction of a drug, through so long a line of coast, for which the people have so irresistible a longing. If the trade continues to be regarded as contraband, it must sooner or later lead to another rupture with us. The Emperor on this occasion would find it his wisest policy to bend to circumstances, and to fix a duty on an article which no power, Chinese or foreign, can keep out of the Empire.

PROGRESS AND PROSPECTS OF PUSEYISM.—To gratify the wishes expressed by many of our readers, we have searched the papers brought by the last Mail, for facts relative to the progress of Puseyism during the last month or two, and now present them with the result of our researches.

The Roman Catholics have to boast of one more convert to their creed, from among those who have advanced half way towards them. The Rev. Bernard Smith, Rector of Leadenham in Lincolnshire, has given up a living worth 700*l*. a year; and as the Roman Catholic papers state, "has been received into the bosom of the Catholic Church. He has generously sacrificed the emoluments of his rectory, in the hope of exchanging them for an eternal inheritance." This completes the number of converts to Ten, viz.

1. Rev. R. W. Sibthorp, Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford.
2. Rev. Bernard Smith, late Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford.
3. Edward Douglas, Esq., B. A. Gentleman Commoner of Christ Church.
4. Peter le Page Renouf, Esq., Scholar of Pembroke College, Oxford.
5. Johnson Grant, Esq., Commoner of St. John's College, Oxford.
6. Rev. Mr. Wackerbath.
7. A Tradesman of Oxford.
8. A boy at Shrewsbury School.
9. Miss Gladstone.
10. Miss Young.

This list of actual seceders, however, gives but an inadequate idea of the progress of these opinions in the bosom of the Protestant Church. The inevitable tendency of these doctrines is to a union with Rome. Those who have relinquished the fundamental doctrines of Protestantism, and have begun to regard with complacency the doctrines of the Romish creed, will soon find that there is no halting between two opinions. The great organ of the Tractarian party, the British Critic, in an article recently published in the fifty-ninth number of that work has the following ominous expression: "We cannot stand where we are; we must go backwards or forwards; and it will surely be the latter;" and the increasing anxiety of the Oxford school to repudiate whatever distinguishes Protestantism from Romanism, shews but too plainly that they cannot stand still, and are advancing at a rail way pace to Rome. It was said to have been the chief object of Number 90 to prevent a large defection from the Protestant Church of England, by shewing how much of Roman Catholic doctrine might be professed by those who still continued to receive Protestant pay; but it is much to be doubted whether the Church of England does not gain much more by the open departure of such men as Sibthorpe and Smith, than by the continuance in its ranks of those who are spreading the poison of their doctrines unchecked through the land, and endeavouring more especially to distill it into the minds of youth. It is said that an Italian priest, who recently visited Oxford, expressed his strong satisfaction at the progress which Romanism was making at that seat of learning. Indeed the Catholics who have for some time past established an additional weekly service for the conversion of England to Popery, consider the present movement in the light of "an answer to prayer." We believe nothing could be more foreign to their wishes than that Dr. Pusey and Mr. Newman should quit the advantageous position they now occupy, in which they so admirably subserve the cause of Romanism, to officiate with Mr. Sibthorpe at St. Chad's Cathedral in Birmingham.

This movement towards Rome does not appear to have met with any efficient check from the Bishops; and it will soon become too strong for the Bishops to check. It is true, that some of them have denounced Tractarian doctrines in their charges with great zeal and sincerity, but the effect of these censures has been neutralized by the mild and faint admonitions of other Bishops. There is not a single member of the Bench who has had the courage, as far as we have heard, to act in favour of the reformed doctrines; to take up his stand upon Protestant ground, and boldly suspend the Minister who is endeavouring to lead his flock towards Rome. On the contrary, where the Bishops have acted, it appears to have been on the wrong side of the question. At some private meeting of the Clergy in the diocese of Exeter, the Rev. Mr. Babb said, that such was his opinion of the Puseyite doctrines preached by a certain clergyman, who appears to have been the Rev. Mr. Lenney, that he should feel it his duty if he knew any of his flock attend the ministry of that gentleman, to warn them of its dangerous tendency. This led to a correspondence, which was handed up to the Right Reverend Dr. Phillpots; and Mr. Lenney was appointed a canon of Exeter Cathedral, and Mr. Babb deprived of his license to preach. On the other hand, the assertion of a Protestant clergyman on Christmas-day to his flock that "the body of Christ had been as absolutely upon the altar table of the communion as it appeared to the shepherds," passes without the slightest rebuke from the Diocesan.

It would be impossible in the small space we can allot to the subject to give any thing like an adequate report of the various circumstances which indicate the strength and tendency of the present movement. All other differences in the Church of England seem to be lost in the absorbing strife of the two parties into which it is divided, viz. of those who are anxious to efface every emblem of Protestantism, and to assimilate the Church in its doctrine and ritual to Rome, and those who contend for the Reformation. The question of preaching in a surplice or in an academical gown, in itself a matter of indifference, has been brought into the arena, because the gown is supposed to be the badge of the Reformation. The Bishop of London tried to steer a middle course between the Scylla and Charybdis of black and white vestments, and gave permission to wear the surplice one part of the day, and the gown the other. The surplice has carried the day, and the Tractarians have triumphed. The Sermons delivered by the London Clergy have now all the advantage of that superior unction which a white garment can impart to them, and the garb of Protestantism is seen chiefly on the back of the unfortunate curate who has no "pastoral relation," with the people. The Rector or Vicar preaches in the surplice, the poor curate in his gown. Again, the crusade against pews has grown chiefly out of the fact that pews date from the Reformation. Away then with them from the Churches. The good Bishop of Norwich has given his sanction to the anti-Pew-yite movement, as it has been facetiously termed, from the best of motives, because he thinks they serve to diminish the number of sittings in the Church. But the attack on pews is a Tractarian movement. The same objection is started against galleries. A gallery is intended solely for the accommodation of those who come to listen to a sermon. It is therefore a nuisance in a Church, and an abomination in a Choir. The wishes of the party are well summed up by its organ, the British Critic, in the following words. It is probable that some of the Puseyites may not as yet be prepared to go the whole length of the Critic, but judging from the ratio of their past progress, there is little reason to doubt that a very short period will be sufficient to carry them, perhaps ahead of this journalist.

"We repeat, then, that we would rather see, on entering a church, nothing but the altar and its ornaments; the ministering priests and deacons; the pulpit, and whatever else is necessary; the naked floor and the worshippers or hearers thereupon. There is a power and a teaching in that sacred floor, which is lost if it be hidden. It teaches deep humility, unyielding constancy, unwearied patience, changeless perpetuity. The worshipper should throw himself upon it, Πατρὸς ἐπ' οὔδει as if it were the floor beneath the footstool of his heavenly Father, by contact with which he every time derived new strength and succour. There is a virtue, by the same rule that there is a naturalness, in falling down on the very ground—the very lowest place that can be got at—when in the act of confession and supplication. Hence it is that galleries are absurd and impossible as places of devotion."

Numerous are the incidents continually presented to view, which, however trifling in themselves, serve to indicate the course of the current. Thus, we find it stated that the Roman Catholic lawyers have delivered it as their opinion, that a man may by law hold a Protestant living, while he professes the doctrines of Romanism.—At a parish in Essex, where the incumbent is said to be "a silly specimen of the Newman School," some of his parishioners resorted to a neighbouring parish for the Sacrament. The clergyman was forbidden by his Bishop to administer it.—The "Churchman's Almanac" has been enlarged with a view to accustom the mind to the Romish ritual.—At a meeting of the clergy in the Archdeaconry of Ely to petition her Majesty against the annexation of the see of Asaph to that of Bangor, six of the Clergymen moved that the term Protestant and Reformed, as applied to the Church of England, should be omitted. Even the Tracts for the Times allow that the Church of England is Reformed, and only deny her the claim of being Protestant.

We have already trespassed more perhaps than we ought to have done on the patience of our readers; and we would only ask their attention for one moment more to the following extract from the Edinburgh Review received by the Hindoostan, which describes the effect of the movement on the University of Oxford.

"The influence of the prejudices thus excited on the moral character is bad enough; but on intellectual progress it is destruction. The fruits of the recent fashion of decrying mere scientific pursuits, or mere literary studies as unworthy, frivolous, or dangerous, are terribly apparent in the present condition of Oxford. Here, at least, we shall scarcely meet with a contradiction. The gradual desertion of the lecture-rooms, in which knowledge not absolutely connected with University discipline, is imparted, is notorious. The utter absence of all spirit for investigation of every sort, except in polemic theology and one or two inferior pursuits of taste, is the subject, even there, of general lamentation. Natural philosophy, indeed, while disregarded by all, is absolutely discountenanced by many, from similar reasons to that which the late King of Naples was wont to give for refusing grants of money to unrol the Herculanean manuscripts: namely, that something might be discovered therein which would overturn the Christian religion, and then His Majesty would never get absolution. Historical study seems altogether at an end, except in the single province of ecclesiastical antiquities; indeed, as we have seen it ingeniously remarked by a writer of the Oxford school, all history is dangerous, and ought to be rewritten on Church principles. Nay, the very special studies of undergraduates are no longer pursued with the spirit and zeal of former times; classical scholarship is declining. We saw it stated the other day, in a journal favourable to the present 'movement,' that the art of prose Latin compositions is absolutely lost at Oxford. To borrow again the forcible language of Dr. Arnold, 'The two great parties of the Christian world have each their own standard of truth, by which they try all things—Scripture on the one hand; the voice of the Church on the other. To both, therefore, the pure intellectual movement is not only unwelcome, but they dislike it. It will question what they will not allow to be questioned; it may arrive at conclusions which they would regard as impious. And, therefore, in an age' (or seat,) 'of religious movement, particularly, the spirit of intellectual movement soon finds itself proscribed rather than countenanced.'

"Thus much, at least, is matter of general observation, that while the loss is certain, the gain in higher respects is worse than questionable; that much has been lost, along, with knowledge itself, of the habits of mind which attend an ardent pursuit of knowledge—of manly candour, of extended sympathies, of that generous frank enthusiasm, so graceful in the young; that a captious, close, exclusive spirit, is apt to grow on the mind, under the discipline and associations now prevailing—producing in vigorous natures a concentrated heat, instead of an expansive warmth: this is complained of, we know not how justly, but seems to follow as a not unnatural consequence. For this, and much more, Oxford has to thank the peculiar exertions of the ablest and most active among the present teachers, and the success which has attended them."

THE NINGPO BELL AND THE NEW CATHEDRAL.—The following correspondence is published in the Intelligencer.

To the Lord Bishop of Calcutta, &c. &c. &c.

MY LORD,—I have brought from Ningpo in China, a very large handsome Iron Bell for our New Cathedral of Calcutta, of which I beg your acceptance.

It has a very fine tone and is valuable from its antiquity, and as a specimen of large casting in Iron, as well as for its beauty.

The Archdeacon, Mr. Dealtry, has kindly taken charge of it until your arrival, and admires it much.

I have the honor to be,
My Lord,
Your very faithful servant,
Comdg. E. I. C. Steam Frigate Queen.

Calcutta, Jan. 30, 1843.
No. 4½, Park Street, Chowringhee.

---

REPLY TO THE ABOVE.

Cochin, Feby. 15, 1843.

DEAR SIR,—I have received with the gratitude which it demands the account of the Bell which you have brought away from Ningpo, and which you are good enough to present to me for the New Cathedral. I trust it is a token that the Mission, Doctrine, and Labors, of that fine Foundation will ultimately sound forth the voice of the Gospel, assisted by the fine toned Bell you have given me, from Calcutta to Ningpo itself, and thus return in spiritual benefits, the temporal one it has bestowed upon the Christian Cathedral of the East.

I am,
Dear Sir, with much gratitude,
Your most obedient,
(Sd.) D. CALCUTTA.

We venture to offer one or two considerations against the employment of this Bell in the service of the Cathedral Church of Calcutta. In the first place, Capt. Warden's right to make such an offering is very questionable. He was engaged in a warlike expedition, under the authority of the crown of England, and the right to all prize property captured in such an expedition is vested exclusively in the Crown. Whatever may fall into the hands of the victors, ought by right to be made over to the Prize Agent and disposed of according as her Majesty may direct in her Royal Warrant. To this bell Captain Warden has no more substantive title than Sir John Kean had to Hyder Khan's sword, which he was obliged to resign, and which the officers of the Bombay Service subsequently purchased and presented to him. The act of presenting this article of plunder establishes the fact, that Capt. Warden was at the time forgetful of his obligations, and the acceptance of it would look like a recognition by the highest authority of an irregular act in a public servant.

In the next place, supposing this objection removed, still the circumstances under which the Bell was acquired render its employment in a Christian Church a matter of questionable propriety. It was obtained in a war which has more of an aggressive than of a defensive character. It was acquired amidst the havoc we made among the peaceable inhabitants of Ningpo, who had never done us any injury. The venerable Bishop, always enthusiastic upon every thing connected with his beloved Cathdral,—as he styles the edifice in a letter we have quoted elsewhere—expresses a hope that the Bell when placed in St. Paul's will sound to Ningpo and announce the blessed tidings of the gospel. If the sound should ever reach that city, it can only serve to awaken in the minds of its heathen inhabitants the remembrance of an invasion, which brought desolation among them; and for any advantage it may do the cause of Christianity, its tongue had far better remain for ever silent. It will convey no sweet accents of Christian charity to the ears of those whose male relatives were swept away by our grape shot, and whose female connections were strangled to avoid, as they erroneously supposed, the violence of our soldiery. If the Bell had been presented by those who had abjured Heathenism and embraced the Christian faith, there would have been much propriety in attaching it to a Christian edifice. As a trophy of Christianity it would form an appropriate appendage for the belfrey; as a trophy of war, its more appropriate place, in our humble apprehension, is the Museum.

EDUCATION AT THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY.—We have been favoured with an analysis of the last Report of the Board of Education at Bombay, by a Correspondent who takes a deep interest in the progress of instruction among the Natives of this country, and placed it among our correspondence. Bombay is the only Presidency at which Schools which may be strictly denominated Vernacular have been established at the public expense. The experiment has succeeded in a considerable degree; but there is large room for improvement in every department of labour. The number of books provided for the use of the Schools, considering both the period they have been established—sixteen years—and the facilities which exist for making translations, by the well educated natives of Bombay, appears to be very scanty. The superintendence bestowed upon the Schools, though much improved of late, by no means corresponds with their importance. Hence except in two or three instances, they appear to be in a languid state, and, generally speaking, have not produced those large results which might have been expected, and which, with more attention, might reasonably be calculated on. The comparatively small interest manifested in these Schools by the public Officers, has also a natural tendency to discourage the people themselves, and to render them indifferent to the improvement of their children. The want of a direct and visible connection between proficiency in the School room and success in the public service, is also an obstacle to the progress of these schools, and this the Report pointedly alludes to. The tender plant of education needs this fostering care while yet young; when it has attained greater maturity, as in our own land, no such direct patronage from the state will be necessary; the tree will need no watering. It is very much to be desired that the Vernacular system of education which has been adopted under the Bombay Presidency should be carried to greater perfection. The organization and machinery are already in existence, they only need improvement. In this respect Bombay is far in advance of Bengal where Government has not a single school which can strictly be called Vernacular. To Bombay therefore we must look to furnish a model for indigenous instruction throughout the country.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, MARCH 30.

— The Star has obtained a copy of the Boulogne Gazette of the 30th January, which indignantly repells the charges made by the English papers of the barbarities committed on the bodies of those who were wrecked from the Conqueror. The Editor acknowledges that the conduct of the wreckers was very objectionable; but affirms that there is not the slightest foundation for the charge that any of the bodies with a spark of life in them was stripped and cast back into the sea. A very circumstantial detail is given of the clothing in which the bodies were found. These statements, which appear worthy of all confidence, must tend to relieve the agonized feelings of those who in this heavy bereavement have been led to think that the hand of man has been more fatal to their friends than even the tempest?

— The Landholder's Society is determined to prove that it is awake. It seems to have derived some strength from the refreshing sleep of two years which it has enjoyed. A numerous meeting was held on the 28th of March. During its state of somnolency, the Sale law has come into operation and has proved, on undivided testimony, a signal blessing to the country. The Landholder's Society are anxious to destroy what Lord Castlereagh would have called one of the 'fundamental features' of the Act. They wish special notice to be given to the parties of the sale of estates for arrears. Why? for information or delay? For information it cannot be. All claims for interest and penalty have been abolished. Every man knows to a pice what he is to pay, and to a minute when he is to pay it; why then should he incur the penalty?

— The Court of Directors, as we learn from the Englishman, have sanctioned the erection of an Insane Hospital for natives on the plan contemplated by Lord Auckland.

— The last Mail has brought many assurances, conveyed in different letters, that the Marquis of Tweeddale is not to succeed Lord Ellenborough as Governor General. It is said that the Duke has been struggling hard for his friend; but that he is not likely to succeed. Sir Charles Metcalfe is confidently spoken of as Lord Ellenborough's successor; but unless his Lordship should receive intimation of his having lost the confidence of his friends in the Ministry, he may remain till the year 1847, after which Sir Charles would be too old for the office.

— Among other notions of brother Jonathan is that of adorning the City of Palaces with American furniture. A large investment has been just sent out; and is said by those who have seen it to be elegant, if not magnificent, especially the rocking chairs.

FRIDAY, MARCH 31.

— The papers of this day are to a remarkable degree barren of all local intelligence. The Agra Ukhbar gives us a long account of the investiture of the two Generals with the order of the Bath; but this we had before. The only additional circumstance in the narrative is the fact that a flag of Akbhar Khan's, which a trooper of the 1st Cavalry had taken, was presented to Lord Ellenborough, who called for his Commanding officer, Major Crommelin, and sending for the trooper delivered the flag to him after a short speech.

— The Star takes occasion, from a reference to the Cabul relief fund, to allude to the donation of 6000 Rs. which Lord Auckland sent to it from England, in a manner so unostentatious, that it was discovered in this country only by accident. Our contemporary then refers to the remarkable circumstance that our present Governor General has invariably refused his assistance, publicly at least, to all our public charities. The monthly donation of 500 Rs. to the District Charitable Society, which originated with Lord William Bentinck and was kept up by Sir Charles Metcalfe and Lord Auckland, has been discontinued since Lord Ellenborough assumed the Governor Generalship. We have no doubt that his Lordship's charities are as great as they are unostentatious, and that they are distributed on the Christian principle of not allowing the left hand to know what the right hand does; but a Governor General is placed in a peculiar position; his charities serve as a stimulus to others; and ought not therefore to be concealed under a bushel.

SATURDAY, APRIL 1.

— The Delhi Gazette last received, gives information from Hydrabad to the 11th of March, when no attack had been made on Sir Charles Napier's position. Coal had been sent on from Bombay for the Steamers which had been unable to move for want of fuel, the insurgents having carried off all the wood which had been collected on the banks of the river. It is said to be the General's intention to move against Meerpoor in the direction of Umercote, where the Belochees had assembled an army—as soon as he received re-inforcements. The ruffian who so barbarously murdered Capt. Ennis had been hung without ceremony. Every act of similar atrocity will meet with condign and instant punishment under Sir Charles' administration and the lives of British officers and soldiers will thus be preserved.

— The arrival of the hot, dry, parching season has as usual, been marked in Calcutta by almost daily fires. The act passed some two or three years ago against the construction of houses with combustible materials, has been constantly evaded with perfect impunity; and the town will therefore, we may expect, be burnt down once every five years. The establishment of fire engines is evidently insufficient, and those belonging to the town will not assist to extinguish fires beyond the boundary; this is said to have been ordained by way of retaliation!

— The Bombay Times has a long article on the subject of Scinde, which were it shorter we should be able to publish. Our contemporary tells us, that the devotion of the people to the cause of the country is so great, that six hundred men belonging to a single tribe were brought to the battle of Meeanee on the 17th of February, of whom only twelve, all more or less wounded, survived the action. He also informs us that we cannot now recede; that repentance must stop short of restitution, and that we must retain the territory to prevent worse befalling us; but that we must be prepared to pay the sum of three millions Sterling, during the next ten years for the retention of Scinde; that the expense will be seventy lakhs of Rupees a year, while the revenue is only forty lakhs; so that the annual deficit will be thirty lakhs. But does he entirely forget how much the Presidency of Bombay will gain, by the augmentation of its Civil Service, the increase of its army and that monopoly of the trade which its merchants will enjoy? He seems to hover between the injustice and cost of the acquisition, and the benefit it will confer on his own Presidency. On the whole, his complacency appears to predominate, by a trifle, over his hatred of territorial aggrandizement. The soil, says he, is rich alluvium, and if the advantages of nature were seconded by human skill, the resources of the country would be inexhaustible. This may be expected to be the case when it is united to a Presidency, which contains so much spirit and enterprise, and then the account will probably stand thus. Expenses, seventy lakhs; income, one crore; clear annual surplus, thirty lakhs; clear surplus in ten years, three millions sterling. Bombay alone will gain by our new occupation.—We must retain it; we cannot recede; we must give up the idea not only of restitution, but of repentance.

— The number of letters and covers received from England by the last overland mail, appears to exceed that of all former mails; the letters amounted to 29,420; the papers to 27,087; in all 56,507. More than three hundred thousand English newspapers subscribed for in India in the course of a twelvemonth!

— The Bombay community has done itself honour, by taking steps for raising a subscription to present a sword to Major Outram, le chevalier sans peur et sans reproche.

MONDAY, APRIL 3.

— The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette is almost certain that the whole of the prize money obtained at Hydrabad will be given to the army. Now of this nothing certain can by any manner of means be known in this country. Every thing depends upon her Majesty's pleasure, or rather upon the pleasure of her Majesty's advisers. If the prize money be not of too great an amount, doubtless there will be no objection to its being distributed among the officers of the army.

— Lord Ellenborough has paid a visit to the Principal Sudder Ameen's Court and it is rumoured intends to visit other public officers. Lord William Bentinck never allowed his intentions to visit the public offices to transpire; and he afforded the officers no opportunity of putting the 'house in order.'

— The Hurkaru has given us a statement of the papers received daily from Bombay after the arrival of the last Steamer.

Now, if these papers and letters had been sent by the Hindoostan they would all have been delivered on the 24th of March. We should then have had to pay in all about 1000 Rs. for our letters and 300 Rs. for our newspapers. For the privilege of receiving them through Bombay, during seven successive days, we paid 8000 Rs. for our letters and 900 Rs. for our newspapers.

TUESDAY, APRIL 4.

— The following mysterious announcement appears in the Calcutta Star of this morning. "We hear that an affair which has lately excited some attention, has been noticed by Government, and that an official concerned has been called on to explain."—

— Intelligence has been received from China to the 25th, for which we refer to our editorial remarks and extracts. The same mail brings an account of the execution of eighty of the mutineers of the 3d Regiment at Manilla. The example may have been necessary, but the arrangements were more worthy of savages than of a people calling themselves Christians. For the mode in which the Sergeant was executed, the term infamous is infinitely too mild.

— The Gentlemen's Gazette, the new Bombay daily paper, has volunteered his services at Lord Ellenborough's champion.

— The Bombay Times gives intelligence from Hydrabad to the 17th March. Up to that date every thing was quiet in the English camp. The reinforcements which had been sent to his assistance were expected to reach him on the 22d, when it is said to be his intention to march to Meerpoor, half way to Umercote, where an army of 25,000 of the enemy is said to be assembled. They are reported to have fifteen pieces of artillery with them.

— The Englishman states, that the huts of four companies of Sepoys in the Alipore lines were destroyed by fire on Sunday. On Saturday nearly the whole of Short's bazar fell a prey to the flames. Yesterday there was another large fire; indeed, during this and the ensuing month, a fifth of the town will be burnt down as a matter of necessity, partly through the carelessness of the natives, and partly owing to an anxious desire to raise the value of labour and straw. The law made a year or two ago, would have put a stop to this state of things; but it has been a dead letter. The insecurity of property from burglaries makes a great noise; but fires annually destroy more property than the thieves purloin, and occasion more distress than all the rogues in town; yet no Magistrate seems to think it a matter of duty to stop this destruction of life and property by putting the law in execution.

— We are happy to hear that a Professorship of the laws of the land is to be established in the Hindoo College, and that the post is to be given to a gentleman who has had long legal experience.

— Mr. H. T. Prinsep, previously to his departure, gave 300 Rupees towards the erection of a School room for the reception of Mr. Hare's School. Where is Mr. Hare's monument?

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5.

— The number of fires is on the increase in Calcutta. From the Police Report given in the Hurkaru, we learn that within the last three days, not fewer than seven hundred native huts have been burnt. Of these three-fourths were thatched with straw, in utter defiance of the law passed three or four years ago. We have weekly meetings of Magistrates, and the public is led to believe by the fuss which is made, that Magisterial duty is more conscientiously performed than formerly. Yet here is a law the enforcement of which would save lakhs of Rupees a year to the poor of Calcutta, which yet is never enforced.

— The first monthly meeting of the Landholder's Society since its revival, as the Hurkaru calls it, was held on Monday evening, when several petitions were advanced a stage. The Society seems resolved to make up for lost time by working double tides. Among its other acts we find, that the Secretary was directed to take the necessary measures for obtaining information respecting the settlements made in the North West, of the nature or value of which the Society seems to be ignorant; and yet previously to obtaining this information, it has resolved to memorialize Government in favour of a permanent settlement. In our humble judgment it would be better, to get some knowledge of the country and of its fiscal institutions before deciding on the measures which ought to be taken to promote its welfare. The Landholder's Society had better, we think, confine their attention to the Lower provinces, and leave the affairs of the North West Provinces, like those of Madras and Bombay to their own inhabitants.

— The Delhi Gazette just received announces a little outbreak in Jeypore, got up by the Queen Regent who does not wish that her son who is just come of age should reign in her stead. The paper says that many of her deluded partisans fell and perished under the fire of the Regiments and guns.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

THE BISHOP'S LETTER REGARDING THE NEW CATHEDRAL IN CALCUTTA.

"It strikes every one who is well-affected towards our Holy religion and our Church, its main stay in this country, that the erection of a Protestant Metropolitan Cathedral was the very thing most required, at this stage of our Christianity, and of our Missions and of our episcopal sees in the East, and with the brightening prospects opening up before us."—"The whole is a prodigious body of Christian Masonry rising amongst the Heathen population, with its broad firm walls, two feet nine inches in thickness, to bless and sanctify a dark and prostrate race, Deo annuente.—The walls are now about thirty feet high (they are to be run to fifty-nine feet)—and I imagine to myself a crowded native audience, with a native choir, assisted by the pealing organ, in some future age, chaunting, 'Thou art the King of glory, O Christ!'—Indeed my mind was overwhelmed, as I paced up and down this morning, with, I hope, a prayer rising in my heart for my generous benefactors and supporters in India and England; and amongst the first, for the most Rev. the President, and all the members of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge."—"Whether I live to see my BELOVED CATHEDRAL again, I know not. But it is with God."—"The bells are casting by Mears—The clock is in progress at Mr. Vulliamy's—the organ, with two faces by Mr. Gray—the deeply-painted East window, and eight lantern ones, by Mr. Collins. No. 227, Strand: I am afraid they will exceed half a lakh somewhat. The finishings, pewing, marble floor, chunam for the walls, stone steps, enclosure, stand for carriages, vestry, furniture and numberless etcetera, will remain, for which a Lakh is little enough to set aside."—"Of these four Lakhs (£40,000) undoubtedly required, we fall short at present about 30,000 Co.'s Rupees;—and if your venerable Society will engage in our cause any of the wealthy East Indian gentry, of whom there are multitudes at home who would (if any) rejoice to contribute to the splendour of Calcutta, could the case be brought before them, you would be rendering us a great benefit, and perhaps be the occasion of a spiritual blessing to the donors themselves:—for, CHURCH CHARITY is doubly blessed indeed!"—Cal. Christian Observer.

THE HURKARU'S EXPLANATION.

Having been compelled, during the last few days, to devote our almost entire attention to the contents of the European Mail, we have hitherto left un-noticed a remark, in the last number of the Friend of India, which seems to demand a few words from us. Our contemporary, referring to a letter which appeared some time ago in our columns, says in an article, which we quoted on Friday, "We have seldom been struck with greater surprise, than to find the Hurkaru admitting into its columns, without rebuke, a letter in which the Civil Service, than which a more honorable body of men does not exist, is charged with having habitually fostered native corruption from the most nefarious personal motives." Now, in reply to this, we have it in our power to plead that the letter of An Old Hindoo was inserted in our columns, at a time, when owing to indisposition, we were not very well able to examine its contents. Such is the simple truth; but we have no desire to offer any such plea. We are not responsible for the opinions of our correspondents. The letter of An Old Hindoo was published, as the letter of an old Hindoo. We look upon the correspondents of a public journal, as so many actors in a drama, or speakers in a debate, who come forward and deliver their own opinions, or reply to others who have spoken before. The editor, by publishing these opinions, no more exhibits an inclination to subscribe to them, than the editor who publishes reports of public meetings or debates in Parliament, subscribes to all that is said on provincial platforms, or on the floor of the House of Commons. He no more shows an inclination to subscribe to them, than does the manager of a theatre to subscribe to all the sophistry and wickedness, that issues from the mouths of the ideal personages represented on the stage. The letters, which appear in a public journal, especially in India, which boasts of no Senate-House, wherein the opinions of the public can find an echo, assume a dramatic character; and the editor, acting as manager, has little more to do than provide a stage, in his columns, and afford his writers the costumery of type. Of course, there are certain limitations, to the license, which both manager and editor give to the actor and writer—neither will admit decency to be outraged, or personal character to be assailed; but, as the manager does not think it necessary to caution the audience in his play-bill, that when Iago reasons like a finished scoundrel, or Falstaff chatters like a hoary debauchee, he (the manager) must be distinctly understood not to approve of such wicked doings, so the editor does not think it necessary to caution his readers against falling into the error of supposing, that he subscribes to all the false reasoning, in which his correpondents choose to indulge. Thus An Old Hindoo, writing in our columns, says that the Civil Servants systematically cherish the growth of corruption among their native subordinates. When we publish this, we do no more than show that an old Hindoo believes, or says he believes, that the Civil Servants are guilty of these malpractices. We do not, in any way, bear our testimony to the truth of the alleged fact. The assertion, indeed, is so monstrous, that we should almost insult our readers, by cautioning them not to believe so heinous a charge. If it be asked why we should publish letters, containing such preposterous assertions, we answer that we consider it as well, now that there is a great cry about the "Grievances of India," that the natives should be afforded the opportunity of showing what they consider these grievances to be, and that the British community should be acquainted with the nature of the native complaints. If these complaints are absurd and preposterous, so much the worse for the natives, and so much the better for the character of the British Government. Instead of injuring that Government by publishing such absurd charges, as those of AN OLD HINDOO, we serve it in no ordinary degree; for it is obvious that they who are necessitated, in order to make out a case against the existing system, to resort to all manner of absurd exaggerations, have very little legitimate ground to stand upon. Nothing exhibits the weakness of a cause, more lamentably, than intemperance and exaggeration. Such productions, as those of AN OLD HINDOO, are the most harmless in the world—harmless, at least, at far as regards those, whom they are intended to injure, for they recoil against the authors themselves, and spread destruction in their own camp.—Bengal Hurkaru, March 30.

CORRECT NOTIONS OF INDIA.

We particularly recommend to the perusal of the Anti-Churckerbutty party, whose hair has lately been standing on end, with consternation at the audacious flights of the rising patriots—the "youthful Hampdens" of the age, and whose sleep has been haunted with grim visions of treasons, stratagems, and spoils, in which the Mookerjee

Baboos, and the old Hindoos are doing raw-head-and-bloody-bones to the British Government—we particularly recommend, we say, to these an attentive perusal of the British Friend of India Magazine. It is published, once a month, in Cornhill—the Leadenhall Street end of Cornhill too—almost under the very shadow of the India House, and yet it does not treat the denizens of the dingy mansion, with half as much respect as the most truculent of the Chuckerbutties. We suspect that our worthy friend, the Principal of the Hindoo College, who is about to return to Europe we hear, will, on reaching London, be found dashing his indignant fist into the shop-windows of Messrs. Smith and Elder, as Mr. Bruce did, the other day through the panes of the blasphemous bookseller—What will he and the Friend of India say to such passages as the following,—contained in article on the Palsied Company, in the January number of this periodical :—

"England has no right to the patronage of India,—her Universities, her Corporations, her Ministers, have no right to it. The Dutch Company rose to power by encouraging her common sailors and her private soldiers to rise by their merit; so that, in three instances, at least, individuals of the lowest grade attained to the office of Governor-General. But every Lordling sent to govern British India, has to complain of the restraints imposed upon him in availing himself of the services of persons of ability, in India. India cannot be well governed until the local government is enabled to avail itself of all the intellectual and moral resources within its reach. The Governor-General cannot possibly work up the Company's own sons into such officers as he needs; especially when they and the Company care only that they draw as much pay as Parliament will permit, and quit India as soon as ever they become entitled to a pension for their sojourn there."

This is very mild—but what follows is rather strong :—

"The dying groans of the famished millions of India demand, in the ears of every rational being, that the ignorant, reckless, and rapacious tyranny of the East India Company shall be mitigated, in some degree, by reforming and re-constructing the Courts of the Company,—by correcting the manifest absurdities in their formation, with reference to their actual duties.

"The old machine is utterly worthless—but Britain has doomed India to be mangled by the monopoly for some years longer; therefore, India merely implores not to be mangled unnecessarily—not to be wantonly tortured—not to be ignominiously massacred, wholesale, without benefit to the tyrant.

"The Company must be purified from its present demoralized condition by tranferring its patronage to India, where it is absolutely needed; not so much for the purpose of making the local government the fountain of honour, as for restoring to the public officers and servants of India, the legitimate reward of merit, and to the bulk of the people, the blessings of good government, which cannot possibly be purchased by squandering high salaries on the sons of the Proprietors of Stock."

The article is wound up with the following :—

"The close corrupt system of the monopoly has come to its climax. It cannot any longer outrage common sense. India must be well governed—and, if the Company will not do its duty, then the Crown must take up the ribands."

Hide your diminished heads, ye Mookerjees, and old Hindoos!—ye have much to learn yet from the genuine radicals of Old England.—Hurkaru.

NOTIFICATION.

The Governor General having been commanded by the Queen to invest Major Generals Sir George Pollock and Sir William Nott with the decorations of the highest class of the Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, that ceremony was performed, on the 29th of March, in the Palace of Agra, before all the troops composing the garrison; many native gentlemen were also present. The Generals were received, on alighting from the Governor General's state-carriage, by a deputation of the principal Officers of Government, and conducted by the Governor General, who, standing before the Dewan Khass on the throne of Ackbar Shah, addressed them nearly in these words :—

Major General Sir Geo. POLLOCK!
Major General Sir William NOTT!

The Queen, our Most Gracious Sovereign, has delegated to me an office of all others the most grateful to me, in thus commanding me to invest you, in Her Majesty's name, and on Her Majesty's behalf, with the ensigns of the highest class of the Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath.

Nobly have you won the honour which Her Majesty has thus graciously conferred upon you, with a promptitude which marks the warmth of Her Majesty's heart, and the ardent interest with which Her Majesty regards the great deeds of her Generals and of the Armies.

I know all the difficulties with which you both had to contend. No one can appreciate as I can, the extent of the services you have rendered to your country. Others may regard you only as the conquerors of Cabool and of Ghuznee, and may see no merit but in the bold and successful marches by which your successes were ultimately achieved.

I look back to your position at the time of my arrival in India, to the difficulties by which you were encompassed at Pashawar and at Candahar. I regard the equal mind, the indomitable firmness, with which you met those difficulties—with which you stood in the midst of humiliation and discouragement and defeat, resolved to maintain at all hazards the Military honour of your country.

I honour you even more in the midst of those difficulties so encountered, than at the moment when your victorious armies effected their junction at Cabool.

I know we are but too prone to attach an importance which does not belong to them, to Political and Military transactions occurring in our own time, and especially to those wherein we have borne a part; but with respect to the importance of the events which proceded my arrival in India, and of those in which you have since borne so distinguished a part, there is surely no delusion.

The signature of an ignominious Treaty, the treacherous murder of a British Minister, the total destruction of a British Army, these are not the ordinary events of history; and to ours at least they had been unknown.

To have received and avenged these unparalleled disasters; to have re-established and exalted the character of the British arms and nation, upon every scene whereon had been impaired; to have torn from the people by which we had so suffered the illustrious trophy which every man of that people would have given his life to retain—that trophy which eight hundred years before their most warlike Sovereign had borne away from India—thus making what he deemed the most grateful evidence of his victory, the most decisive proof of yours; these, too, are not ordinary events, appearing for a short season upon the stream of time, and then passing away and forgotten. They are events, which strike their roots deep into the memory of posterity, which live for ever in the imagination of a sensitive people, which remain impressed upon the minds of successive generations of men; and with these events your names must be for ever associated.

But the glory is not for you alone; nor would you desire to appropriate to yourselves any portion of that glory which peculiarly belongs to the brave Officers, to the devoted soldiers in whom you justly placed your confidence; and who, proving themselves worthy, as they ever have done and ever will, of the confidence so reposed in them, achieved for you that victory.

For ever honoured be that united Army of England and of India, patient under privation, persevering under fatigue, delighting in battle, forbearing in victory, bound together by the ties of mutual esteem and confidence, and above all by the absorbing passon for military glory! Honour to that illustrious Army, which, bursting through the clouds which had for a short season under deplorable and unexampled circumstances obscured its lustre, again under your guidance appeared in splendour never surpassed, justified all the confidence of those by whom it was commanded, and in one short campaign planted its victorious standard upon the citadels of Cabool and of Ghuznee; while others rivalling its fame dictated peace to China under the walls of Nankin, and have now carried the sword of the deliverer to the delta of the Indus and the towers of Hyderabad.

To you, Generals, as the leaders and representatives of that portion of the Army which conquered in Affghanistan, I now, in Her Majesty's name, and on Her Majesty's behalf, as the highest proof of Her Majesty's gracious approval of your conduct and of theirs, present the ensigns of highest class of the Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath. Your names are now enrolled amongst the names of those, who at the head of armies have rendered great services to their country. May you long wear the honours now conferred upon you; may you prove how well you deserve them by other services, should your country again require them. You will achieve these services by the same means by which you have already obtained success; by evincing, as you have on all occasions, and in every communication I have had with you, a sincere affection for your troops, and entire confidence in the Native Army—affection and confidence which they will again repay by new exertions, crowned by new victories, and yet increasing renown.

The Generals then withdrew under a military salute.

In the evening the Generals and all the Officers of the Garrison and Station dined with the Governor General in the Dewan Am; and the entertainment concluded with a ball in the Dewan Khas.

The Ungoorie Bag, the Jasmin Boorj, the Sheesh Mehal and the fountains were illuminated on the occasion.—Agra Ukhbar, 25th March.

PRESENTATION OF COLOURS TO THE 39TH (DORSETSHIRE) REGT. OF FOOT.

On Thursday morning this most imposing ceremony came off in the presence of a large assemblage of Ladies, Gentlemen, and Officers of the different Corps at present in Agra. At sunrise the Governor General came on the ground, under a salute, when the regiment was drawn up in line to receive him. The regiment then formed three sides of a square when the new colours, under an escort from the Light Company, were brought forward to the centre of the open square, and presenting arms the old colours were lodged in the hands of two Ensigns, who had already handed the new ones, to two Field Officers. These were consecrated on the drum head by the Rev. Mr. Price, the Chaplain of the station, whose recitation of the service must have been heard at the furthest corners of the square. On the conclusion of this ceremony, the Governor General having received the regimental standard, embraced it and spoke nearly as follows :—

"Lieut.-Colonel Wright, Officers, Non-commissioned Officers and Privates of H. M.'s 39th Regiment of Foot—It affords me the highest gratification that it has fallen to my lot to present you with new colours, which you have just heard consecrated with the forms of religion. These colours, I am satisfied, you will carry into the field with the same gallantry and good fortune which has hitherto attended your arms. The fame of the 39th is no ordinary one. Yours was the first regiment in India; by the bravery and good conduct of your predecessors, was gained the important battle of Plassy—that victory which decided the fortunes of this great empire; which can only be retained by a continuation of the same qualities which gained it. You have also acquired undying fame in other quarters of the globe. Gibraltar Rock, in the celebrated siege of which the 39th played so conspicuous a part, will ever remain an evidence of the gallantry and steady perseverance of your regiment.* Your regiment had the honour to serve in the Peninsular war, under the greatest General of the age, and distinguished itself in that glorious struggle. There is yet room on your colours for the commemoration of great deeds, and it shall be my care that you are the first to be afforded the opportunity of acquiring distinction, which I know you will not be slow to avail yourselves of. You will be delighted to know that the great Captain, who has so often led you and your comrades to victory, is now at the helm of affairs at the Horse Guards, to watch over the interests of that army, of which he may truly be called the Father.

Of all professions, that of a Soldier is the greatest and most honourable—My lot in life has been different from yours, and I deeply regret it. I have been attached to the Civil Service of my country, and have laboured to do my duty to my Sovereign. But I feel that I could appreciate the honour and glory of a Soldier, far more than the less conspicuous, though necessary fame of a Civilian. Ever remember that the Colours, which I now present to you, are to be carried in the very front of the battle, and in confiding them to your care, I feel that they could not be entrusted to better hands."—Agra Ukhbar, 25th March.

MAJOR H. HAVELOCK, C. B.

Of the profusion of honours which have been recently showered upon the Armies of Affghanistan and China, none will wear better—because they have been well and hardly earned—than those conferred on that gallant, zealous, and intelligent Officer, Brevet-Major Havelock, 13th Foot. Twenty-three years a Subaltern, the greater portion of that too in India, this truly excellent soldier laboured by study and good service to counterbalance, in some degree, the disadvantages under which he lay in comparison to his more wealthy comrades, whom it was his misfortune to see slip over him, one by one, as opportunities of purchase occurred. His extensive acquirements, especially in the Eastern languages, have, therefore, from time to time obtained him such appointments as came within the range of Officers of the Royal Service. He was accordingly employed on the Staff during the Burmese war, through the whole of which he creditably served, but being only a Subaltern, received no reward. At the termination of the war he was appointed Adjutant of the King's Depot at Chinsurah; and on the abolition of that short lived establishment, rejoined the Old 13th, from which he was from time to time detached to act as Interpreter to various corps, until the Adjutancy of the regiment becoming vacant in 1834, he was nominated to fill that office, which he held to the period of his promotion in 1838. During the first Affghan campaign he served on the Staff of Sir W. Cotton, and returned with that Officer to the British provinces when all was considered over. His Military ardour, however, quickened by a prognostication of "more stirring times yet," which his knowledge of Affghan affairs even then led him to anticipate, soon turned him back again towards Cabul. Accordingly he accompanied Brigadier Shelton's brigade, in command of a detachment of recruits, and was soon after appointed to the Staff of General Elphinstone, Sir W. Cotton's successor at Cabul. On Sir Robert Sale being sent out "to clear the road between Cabul and Jellalabad," in October, 1841, Capt. Havelock requested permission to accompany his regiment. The services he rendered, during the many days of almost uninterrupted fighting which marked the progress of the little band to Jellalabad, have been acknowledged in Sir Robert Sale's despatches describing those operations; whilst similar acknowledgments were subsequently put forth relative to his services during the siege. On the 7th April, 1842, Capt. Havelock commanded one of the columns of attack in the memorable engagement with Akhbar Khan before Jellalabad. With reference to his conduct on that occasion, Sir Robert Sale's despatch speaks thus:—"The able and judicious manner in which Capt. Havelock moved the force under his command, which acted on a line so distant as to render the manœuvres independent of my immediate control, demands my particular and separate commendation."

On the organisation of General Pollock's Army Capt. Havelock was appointed Deputy Adjutant-General, and in the various affairs with the enemy to the westward of Jellalabad has been invariably brought to notice. At the capture of Istalif, as brilliant an affair as any which has shed lustre on the late campaign, he was the senior present of his department.

He has twice appeared before the public in the character of an author, having published accounts of the Burmese and first Affghan campaigns. We do not advert to this as comprising any Military merit, although we hold a turn for literature to be desirable even in an Officer. His last work on Affghanistan is highly creditable to him, evincing, as it does, considerable professional knowledge.

We have been induced to enter into these details by a desire to bring more prominently to notice the superior claims of this thorough soldier and excellent man, whose various services have as yet met with no higher reward than has been conferred on men (from fourteen to fifteen years his juniors) of infinitely less, and comparatively ephemeral merit. Although but a Regimental Captain, we think a Brevet Lieutenant-Coloneley would not have been more than might have been awarded a man whose services "on the glorious 7th of April, in command of an almost detached column have been acknowledged as so eminent."—Naval and Military Gazette, Jan. 21.—Extracted from the Englishman.

HYDRABAD.

Hydrabad, 11th March, 1843.—"The wounded officers left us under charge of Dr. Campbell of Her Majesty's 22d Foot, for Bombay on the 7th instant in two steamers, with a number of the wounded soldiers and sepahees. We shall be happy to hear of their safe arrival in Bombay. We are also looking out anxiously for Sir Charles' description of the battle to the Governor-General. The Service has really lost some most distinguished officers; the zeal and bravery of Major Teasdale, late commanding the 25th Bombay Native Infantry, were most conspicuous; he fell with a whole section or more of his sepahees. Captain Tucker, of the 9th Bengal Cavalry, and his brother-in-law, Captain Cookson, the Adjutant, fell almost at the same moment, the former had just been ordered to charge through the bed of the river, and form upon the opposite bank, while the Brigadier with twenty or thirty troopers was dislodging a body of matchlock men on the left. Poor Cookson's head was cleft to the brain by the heavy tulwar of a Belochee, and Tucker had several balls through his body, but is doing well. Major Jackson was cut to pieces after he fell, in fact I never saw any thing to equal the desperation with which the Belochees fought. How Sir Charles escaped is really wonderful, as he was in the hottest of the fire with bullets pouring around him. Had he not led on the men at the critical moment, and ordered the Cavalry to charge at the same time, the battle must have been lost. The Artillery were very much cramped, and only four guns could be brought up; but their execution was unexceptionable as the heaps of dead near them clearly proved. The neighbourhood of our camp is quiet."—Delhi Gazette, March 25.

DEATH OF THE REV. J. J. MULLER.

We much regret to announce the death on Saturday last, after a painful illness, of the Rev. J. J. Muller, of the Church Missionary Society. The deceased was son-in-law to the excellent Rhenius and was thirty-five years of age. Had he laboured for several years in Tinnevelly, and been instrumental in doing much good. He rejoined the Church Mission Society some time after the death of Mr. Rhenius, but his health failing, he was about proceeding to England on sick certificate, when it became evident that he could not survive many days, and though his passage and that of his family had actually been taken on board the Duke of Argyle, he preferred to die in Madras. His end was peace. His remains were followed to the grave on Sunday morning by many of his ministerial brethren and other friends. He will long be affectionately remembered for his Christian spirit, his patience under suffering, and his laborious and self denying missionary career.—Madras Record, March 21.

CHINA.

PROCLAMATION.

Elepoo, Imperial High Commissioner, General of the Garrison of Canton, lately a Minister, &c. &c. and entitled to wear the 'Red Girdle,'—issues and urgently impresses these clear Commands.

Whereas, two years have elapsed since the English first took up arms, it has now pleased our August Sovereign, with a liberality large as Heaven's, and with a universal benevolence that knows no exclusion, leniently to treat them, and to grant them a renewal of their former Commercial intercourse,—in order that he may rescue his people from the grief and suffering into which they have been cast. And the said English have, on their part, immediately laid aside their arms, yielded to this gentle treatment, followed the influences of Civilization, and ceased from strife.

The High Commissioner has come, in obedience to the Imperial Commands, to Canton, that he may, in concert with the Governor General, Ke-Kung, and the Governor, Liáng-Páuchang, consider and devise regulations for the levying of duties, &c. and make all the after-arrangements of peace. From henceforward, then, the Sea Coast will enjoy rest, and this frontier will have quiet after all its trials. Our gentry and our people are bound to joy and rejoice herein, and under the impulses of gratitude to sing, as they move, the praises of the Imperial benevolence. Towards the English they should set aside their past enmity, and so remove all root of future quarrel. For it is for this, that we have received, and will obey the Imperial Commands, it is not merely their object, that we should bend and give way to foreigners from afar.

But from what cause was it, that in the first week of December last, a quarrel was commenced from which ensued strife and contention, even till some of the foreign residences were set on fire and consumed, and in their mutual animosity, lives were on both sides taken? It would seem that, from a continuance of war and its calamities, during these years past, the feeling of enmity and indignation had become so deepened,—that foolish people under the idea of taking vengeance became the tools of lawless men, who found occasion to rob and plunder: that while there was not entire absence of cause given on the part of the foreigners, there has yet been, on the part of our people, a criminality that calls for punishment. And the local officers have therefore been instructed, to apprehend with severity those lawless incendiaries and plunderers, that they may duly receive the punishment that the law decrees.

The High Commissioner has further heard a rumour, that the gentry and scholars of the country around Canton, acting still under the name of raising a patriot band of soldiers, to avenge this quarrel, have formed a "Society of Spirit and Loyalty." And sundry of these gentry and scholars, have recently presented themselves before the High Commissioner, to make a surrender of their services for purposes of war. These things are done, indeed, under the momentary impulse of a burst of loyalty and patriotism. But they are in direct opposition, to the sacred purpose of our August Sovereign, tenderly to cherish men from afar, and well-entreat those who yield him obedience,—and not less opposed to His gracious pleasure that hostilities should cease and commerce be renewed.

The people of Canton are by nature unyielding and great lovers of propriety; they are valiant when impelled by a sense of justice; they rigidly adhere to their pledged word, and where that is concerned are regardless of their lives; they frequently act without a due regard to consequences, and in a moment have recourse to violent measures. Such dispositions are often the source of much good; but they are also the cause of much evil. For example, when the patriot soldiers which the gentry had been trying to raise banded together, lately, with the populace, and burned some of the Foreign factories,—the people engaged in this affair were of different characters and prompted by different motives; but they neither knew to exercise due care, before committing the deed, nor did they look forward to the consequences that might follow from it. All rash appeals to arms, all acts of violence, are of this description.

Therefore, in addition to the clear command which the High Commissioner, verbally gave to the gentry and scholars who appeared before him, it behoves him, further, lest there should still be some of the people, in ignorance of these principles, to issue this clear and distinct proclamation for their due warning and admonition.

While ye profess to be guided by the sentiments of loyalty and patriotism, ye must know that ye cannot but obey the Imperial Commands, and may on no account give cause for a renewal of hostilities. It is no doubt the part of loyalty to ward off insult from our shores; but to go in opposition to the Imperial Will, and in the straight line of one's own inclinations, cannot be deemed loyalty. Determinately part of patriotism; but to give cause for war and strife, is very much opposed to patriotism. Ye gentry and others, having read the sacred books, must understand reason. Do ye therefore take these commands, and impress the same upon all good people; and show them, that, if they set fire to houses and rob and plunder, they are not what they profess to be—"Righteous Men;" but they are thieves and vagabonds, and most proper will it be to deter from such like acts, by making of them severe examples. No laxness shall be shown, which might lead to a spreading of the evil.

It has now been arranged by Treaty with England, that henceforth English foreigners shall not insult or injure our people;—and at the same time so long as English foreigners, live quietly and attend to their business, our people, may not disturb or molest them. Thus then, those from within and those from without, being at peace together, both parties may enjoy the blessing of living in perfect harmony, which the Sacred Emperor, has himself, so happily brought about.

The High Commissioner indulges the hope, that his people will not frustrate his good intentions, to guard against a recurrence of strife, and to give a full and complete security to all. Let every one tremble and obey! Do not oppose!

A MOST SPECIAL PROCLAMATION.

TAOUKWANG, 22 year, 12 month, 25 day.

(25th January, 1843).

[True Translation.]

J. ROB. MORRISON,
Chinese Secy. and Interpreter.

(Signed) R. THOM,
Assist. Translator and Interpreter.

The Grand Council hereby send this secret communication to the High Commissioner Elepoo.

On the 23rd day of the 11th moon of the 22nd Year of Taoukwang (24th December 1842) we received the Imperial Commands to the following effect.

"Keying has memorialized us, stating that Pottinger has complained to him of a wanton massacre (of British Subjects) at Formosa for the object of unduly obtaining Military merit, thro' false representations. The great business of treating for Peace being now settled, it is not worth while for this one particular to risk the overturning of all previous arrangements. Elepoo after his arrival at Canton, must meet Pottinger, and immediately explain to him, that the Celestial Dynasty has for its principle in governing all foreigners without it's pale, to look upon them with the same feeling of universal Benevolence with which she looks upon her own children, so that shipwrecked foreigners, no matter what country they belong to, are treated with compassion and kindness, as by law established that when Keying previously memorialized, handing up a complaint that the Commandant of Formosa had wantonly massacred people, to gain Military merit through false representations, the Great Emperor, on hearing of this, was exceedingly indignant! but on consideration, this is only a one-sided statement of the case, and He cannot therefore rashly proceed to sentence. The Emperor has already issued an Imperial Edict, commanding Eliang, Governor General of Fokien and Cheking, to cross immediately over to Formosa, there to make secret enquiries and take the steps that may appear necessary that if the foreigners whom Takungah previously killed were indeed people in distress, it will not be difficult to get proof of the fact during the course of such investigation, that the Great Emperor rules with the utmost impartiality and justice, and will assuredly have Takungah (if found guilty) sent as a prisoner to Peking, and punished with rigorous severity: further, that the Rules and Regulations for carrying on Commercial intercourse form now the most important thing to be deliberated upon and settled, and all doubts and suspicions must previously be dismissed so that then everything may be arranged satisfactorily." Elepoo, in his person, sustains a most important trust; he has had long and mature acquaintance with affairs of the frontiers and he must be able to look up and embosom our own Imperial feelings and arrange all this business with the greatest circumspection. Let this Edict be forwarded at the rate of 500 le per day, for Elepoo's information. Respect this.

We of the Grand Council therefore, in respectful obedience to the Imperial Will, now send on the same.

Sir Henry Pottinger, Bart. Her Britannic Majesty's Plenipotentiary, now addresses the Imperial High Commissioner, Elepoo, &c., the Governor General Kekung, &c., and the Governor Liang Paouchang, &c., for the purpose of making a clear important communication.

The Plenipotentiary having had an English translation made of the Imperial Edict, under date the 24th of December 1842, which was transmitted by the Grand Council on that day, to the High Commissioner Elepoo, &c., the Plenipotentiary is highly gratified to find from that document, that it has pleased His Imperial Majesty to issue His Gracious Commands that Eliang, Governor General of Fukien and Chekiang, shall proceed to Formosa to institute secret inquiries into the charges which the Plenipotentiary had made against the local authorities on that Island for having, by false representations brought forward, with a base view to personal aggrandizement, obtained orders for putting to death certain distressed and inoffensive subjects of the Queen of Great Britain, who had been cast away on the Coast of Formosa, and the Plenipotentiary accordingly, begs to humbly tender his respectful acknowledgements for this convincing proof of His Imperial Majesty's strict sense of justice, as well as august disposition to preserve and strengthen the Peace which has been happily established.

The Plenipotentiary by no means would presume to question, the indefeasible and perfectly acknowledged attribute of His Imperial Majesty; to intimate his high pleasure to all Officers of the Chinese Empire, in any language and form that may seem to His Imperial Majesty to be most fitting and expedient, but, looking to the fact, that the Edict in question, was specially communicated to the Plenipotentiary—who received it with all due respect—and further, that it will become the Plenipotentiary's duty to respectfully submit, through Her Majesty's Ministers, a copy of the translation of the Edict for the satisfaction and information of the Plenipotentiary's own most Gracious Sovereign, the Plenipotentiary thinks it right to record, with reference to that expression in the Edict which says "that the Celestial Dynasty has for its principle in governing all foreigners without its pale" that His Royal Mistress the Queen of England acknowledges no Superior or Governor but God, and that the Dignity, the Power, and the universal Benevolence of Her Majesty, are known to be second to none on earth, and are only equalled by Her Majesty's good faith and studious anxiety, to fulfil Her Royal promises and engagements.

The Plenipotentiary requests that a copy of this communication may be sent to the Grand Council, and also to His Excellency Keying, Governor General, &c.

ICE.

We are glad to report the arrival of the first Cargo of Ice, ex Omega from Chusan. It is impossible to exaggerate the advantages which may be derived from its temperate use during our summer season. It is to be desired that arrangements may be made, by mutual association, as at Madras, Calcutta and Bombay, to build an Ice House and have an abundant supply at a stipulated price. We are told this Cargo was for the private use of the partners of a leading firm, which has taken a deep interest in our Island, since its very first settlement, and the whole of whose mercantile establishment, we hope to see here in the course of a couple of months.—Friend of China and Hongkong Gazette.

EXECUTION OF THE REBELS IN MANILLA.

"Yesterday we received the Seminario Filipino, of the 5th instant, and private advices inform us of the execution of the rebels of part of the 3d regiment of the line.

On the 5th of February, upwards of 80 of the rebels were sentenced to die the death of traitors: forty-one were executed on the 9th and the others on the 11th instant, each day at 7 a. m. The spectacle was most imposing and awful.

The criminals, the day previous to their execution, were imprisoned in barracks in the neighbourhood of the artillery ground, accompanied by their confessors, and their executioners were placed as guards over them. At about half past 6, each morning, they were unshackled, having only their arms tied, and were marched between two files of soldiers (their executioners) to the ground, on which a large force was already stationed, consisting of about 3000 troops, forming three sides of a square. As the mournful procession approached, an officer proclaimed aloud to the troops, that whoever should ask for the pardon of any of the criminals should be shot.

The remainder of the regiment to which the criminals belonged, formed the bottom of the square, and behind them a strong body of cavalry was posted, before whom their late companions in arms, the mutineers, were led to hear their sentence read which was quickly got over, and they were then marched up to the vacant side of the square; where they were placed in file, kneeling, in front of a hillock, used as an artillery butt; their executioners filed off behind them, and in an instant their bayonets were unfixed, the priests informed them that the hour had come, and the words,—make ready, present, fire, were given instanter: and the file of criminals simultaneously fell like a wall—

Or statue from its base o'erthrown.

There was scarcely the space of a yard between the muskets and their victims: many continued to writhe on the ground, but not a sound of any kind was heard, save the order to reload, for no reserve was in readiness, and an agonizing delay was thus caused in finally despatching the unfortunate wretches.

The troops fired in a running fire; no particular criminal was assigned, but they were ordered to fire at the one most in front.

The same awful scene was performed on the 11th; and on that day the sergeant, who led the rebels at the insurrection, was strangled by the screwing machine, in the same square, and afterwards the right hand was cut off.

So soon as it was evident that life was extinct in all the criminals, the various regiments were marched with music playing, past the bodies, and then home to the quarters.

On the 9th, the criminals were placed close to each other, to suffer death, but on the 11th the more considerate method of separating them a yard or two was adopted.

Thus ended the rebellion of part of the 3rd regiment of the line"

This was a fearful, but we conclude a necessary example. The arrangements however for carrying the sentence into execution should have been better. It is horrible to think of many of the poor wretches writhing on the ground while their executioners were reloading.—Cal. Star.

A Lover of Truth, should send his letter to the Catholic Herald. We are anxious to stand clear of any such controversy.

The letter of B. D. would not be acceptable we believe to the party it refers to, and we therefore keep it back.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

EDUCATION IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

Sir,—The science of Statistics has made little progress in India. We stand greatly in need of facts connected with Indian customs, rites, population, education, &c. Many treatises on these subjects exist, but they are too often sealed up in the Government archives and consigned to the tender mercies of white ants, mould, &c. I send you some data connected with the progress of Education, extracted from the Report of the Bombay Board of Education for 1841; hoping it may direct the attention of your readers to what lies at the basis of all national regeneration—education. There exists at present much agitation of the public mind concerning remedial measures for India, but all schemes will prove abortive except coupled with national education in English for the few, and in the vernaculars for the many.

The Elphinstone Native Institution numbers nearly 700 pupils studying English; of whom one-half pay a fee of one Rupee monthly. Botany has been introduced as a branch of study in the higher classes, as also the elements of Moral Philosophy. The greatest eagerness is shewn to acquire a knowledge of the English language. The Vernacular School Department in connection with it, contains 725 boys; instruction is imparted in the Marathi, Guzerathi and Oordu languages. One great drawback to the spread of general education among the poorer classes of the Mohammedan population, is caused by the necessity which exists of devoting the early school years of the children to the acquirement of ritual forms. The Poonah English school contains 119 pupils. Chemistry, Political Economy, &c. are studied, History is studied chiefly by mutual interrogation. One of the pupils has translated a Geography from English into the Maratha which is printed for the use of the Government and Maratha schools. The principles of tuition acted on in Wood's Edinburgh Sessional School are being adopted. The pupils produce a letter as an exercise in composition every Monday. At Tannah in Salsette, is an English school composed of 77 boys. The Chaplain of the station takes an active interest in it.

Captain Candy, the Superintendant of Schools in the Deccan, in reply to a request of the Government, states respecting the English Government schools that 1. There should be a vernacular school in every village; an English one in every Zillah, and a College for every Province. 2. An intense desire for the acquisition of English exists among numbers of natives; in one town they employed a Pensioner as their teacher. 3. That no scholar should be admitted into an English Zillah school, who has not acquired a grammatical knowledge of his native tongue. This would secure to the English schools a class of scholars with minds trained and exercised and who therefore would enter on their new study under favourable circumstances, while it would stimulate the boys in the vernacular schools to acquire that knowledge which will qualify them for admission into the English school. The Government has acceded to this suggestion. 4. That a good education should be made one of the grounds of qualification for Government employ. Were the heads of departments to give annually two or three situations of the junior grade to the scholars most distinguished for attainments and good conduct, the influence on the schools would be great. The Poonah Sanscrit College has been placed under European superintendance which has considerably improved the Institution. At the recommendation of Sir R. Grant the students are being instructed in the vernacular languages. The European systems of medicine and astronomy have been introduced as branches of instruction. The senior students are taught English.

Government District Vernacular Schools, have been established in Guzerat and the Mahratta country; since a Government inspector has been appointed over them, an improved tone has been given to their operations. The teachers are very ignorant, and consequently little useful knowledge is acquired by the pupils. The number of schools amounts to 106. The rule of Government respecting them is, "that schools shall be established only on a petition of the inhabitants of towns, the population of which is estimated at not less than 2000." Village Schools were established under the sanction of Government in 1836, by Captain Shortrede, Assistant to the Collector of Punah and in charge of the District. They were established as an experiment of the feasibility of a general introduction of education among the agricultural and labouring classes of the community. Their number amounts to over 60. The greatest check to the progress of these schools is the irregular attendance of the children. This is owing to the poverty of the parents requiring them to keep the children at home to tend cattle and assist in agricultural operations, as also to the occurrence of marriages and other festive occasions. All the instruction aimed at, is to give the children an ability to read, write, and keep accounts. The masters are persons untrained to the work of teaching. There are about 400 scholars in them. The masters are remunerated according to their own qualifications, and the number and progress of their scholars.

The Government have sent circulars to the different Collectors, with a series of questions on the state of education in indigenous schools throughout the presidency; these questions were to be sent to the native functionaries of all the villages in the respective Collectorates, to be answered by them and transmitted to Government. A measure similar to this is greatly needed in Bengal. Attention has also been directed to the preparation of Class Books for English and Vernacular schools. The Court of Directors have resolved to supply the Committee of Public Instruction at Bombay, with copies of all Official Reports, relative to education in the United Kingdom, India, and the Colonies; also of the best works on Education in England, America, and the continent of Europe. One lakh and twenty-five thousand Rupees are expended by the Government on education, a paltry sum.

Believe me, yours, &c.,

TRUE CHURCHMANSHIP.—Let any person but keep close to God, the creed, and the commandments, believe those things which Scripture hath made necessary to be believed, and do those things which Scripture hath made necessary to be done, and he is under no manner of obligation to inquire what any church on earth thinks fit to believe or do besides. Many opinions may be true and useful; many practices may be innocent and edifying; but nothing can be matter of necessity, except what Christ and his Apostles have required as terms of salvation. Every person that complies with them is a true Christian; every Church that teaches these is a true Church; and neither ignorance nor error about any other matters can forfeit our title to everlasting life. When once Christ hath said, "Believe, and do such and such things, and you shall be saved," who is it that shall dare to say, "Believe and do more, or you shall not be saved?"—Porteus.

THE REGIUS PROFESSORSHIP OF DIVINITY, CAMBRIDGE.—The voting for the Regius Professorship of Divinity, on last Wednesday, was as follows:—For Dr. Ollivant 4; for Dr. Wordsworth 2; for Dr. Mill 1. The electors were, the Rev. W. Whewell, B. D. (Vice-Chancellor), the Rev. George Thackeray, D. D. (Provost of King's), Joshua King, LL. D. (President of Queen's), the Rev. John Graham, D. D. (Master of Christ's) the Rev. Ralph Tatham, D. D. (Master of John's), the Rev George Adam Browne, M.A., and the Rev. John Browne, M.A., the two senior Fellows of Trinity College. Professor Ollivant, until very recently, held the office of Vice-Principal, Professor of Hebrew, and Junior Professor of Divinity in St. David's College Lampeter.—Pat.

WESLEYAN STATISTICS.—The following account of the number of members in the Wesleyan Societies in Great Britain is extracted from their Monthly Magazine for December:—

| Members (or communicants) | | Increase during ten years. |
|---|---|---|
| in 1772 | 31,983 | |
| 1782 | 46,331 | 14,348 |
| 1792 | 75,342 | 29,011 |
| 1802 | 119,654 | 44,312 |
| 1812 | 155,124 | 35,470 |
| 1822 | 211,392 | 56,268 |
| 1832 | 249,719 | 38,327 |
| 1842 | 326,747 | 77,028 |

From this statement, it will appear that the aggregate increase of the last ten years has been larger than that of any corresponding period during the preceding seventy years.—Pat.

[illegible] .—The Commission of the General Assembly met, according to the requisition of the Special Commission, on Tuesday; Dr. Welsh, Moderator of the last Assembly, taking the chair. The object of the meeting was, to consider a petition to Parliament on the subject of the Church's Non-intrusion claims. The first point raised, however, was one respecting the constitution of the Commission.

Dr. Cook referred to a recent decision of the Court of Session, in the Stewarton case, against the title of the quoad sacra ministers to sit in the Church Courts; and he moved a resolution, that in conformity with that decision, the Commission should refuse to enrol in the sederunt the names of any such members, or to hold them as entitled to deliberate or to vote on what might come under its consideration.

It was contended by Mr. Dunlop and others, that the Commission could not take cognizance of the decision; on two grounds—first, that the Presbytery of Irvine, with whom the matter lay, did not meet till that very day; and secondly, that the judgment was not final, as an appeal might be made to the House of Lords.

Mr. Dunlop moved that the Commission proceed to the business of the day; and that motion was carried, by 115 to 23, who voted for Dr. Cook's motion.

Dr. Cook observed, that he could not enter any protest, as he did not consider it a legally-constituted Court; but he read a "statement or representation," which was tantamount to a protest against the legal constitution of the Commission and its "title or authority to act for or in the name of the Church of Scotland as by law established." Dr. Cook and the minority then left the Commission.

Dr. Candlish introduced the business of the day with a speech of some length, taking a very high tone with regard to Sir James Graham's letter, which he declared to misrepresent the claims of the Church. He moved a series of resolutions, adopting and partially recapitulating the minute of the Special Commission in reply to Sir James's letter. No counter-motion was made; but

MR. JAMES MONCRIEFF, while approving generally of the motion, disapproved of the idea of immediately seceding from the Church if all their demands were not immediately complied with. He would take a Non intrusion measure which would effectually protect the Church against the encroachments of the Civil Courts; and, having obtained that vantage ground he would then "continue to fight the battle of the constitution."

Dr. Candlish's motion was carried with a single dissentient.

A Committee was then appointed to prepare a petition; which they did. It was adopted by the Commission; and copies of it were ordered to be sent to the Duke of Argyll and Mr. Fox Maule, for presentation to the two Houses of Parliament.

A reference having been made to the Commission from the Presbytery of Edinburgh, requesting advice as to what was the duty of the inferior Church Courts under the decision of the Stewarton case, the Commision, at the suggestion of Dr Candlish, directed that Presbyteries should go on transacting their ordinary business, and all matters where no difference of opinion existed; but in cases, such as settlements, where there were litigating parties, to refer them to the superior Church Courts.—Pat.

THE BISHOP OF NEW ZEALAND.—The Sydney Herald of May 21, 1842, gives an account of the reception of Dr. Selwyn, the Bishop of New Zealand, and the Rev. William Cotton, of Christ Church, Oxford, his Lordship's chaplain, by the bishop and clergy of the Church of England within the diocese of Australia, previously to their departure for the scene of Bishop Selwyn's future labours. At the conclusion of an address made by the Bishop of Australia in the name of the whole body of clergy, Bishop Selwyn knelt down at the feet of the elder diocesan, and received his parting benediction! Bishop Selwyn made an eloquent reply, replete with feelings of fervent piety and ardent zeal, assuring those present, that, so far from considering it a sacrifice to leave his native country and his dearest connexions in such a service, he deemed it a high privilege to be permitted to do so on such a mission; and that the sacrifice would rather have been to have remained at home in comparative ease when so much and of so important a nature remained to be performed by the Church and its members in far distant and hitherto neglected countries. The Bishop and Mr. Cotton sailed for New Zealand on the 19th of May; the remainder of the Clergy and attendants were to follow in June.—Ibid.

ARRIVAL OF MRS. WILLIAMS FROM THE SOUTH SEAS.—We have cordial satisfaction in announcing the long-expected arrival of the respected and beloved widow of the late Rev. John Williams. Mrs. Williams, accompanied by her youngest son, a youth ten years of age, reached the port of London from Sydney, in the Cairo, on the 25th of October. We are thankful in being able to state that her health has been greatly improved by the voyage, and that, under the sudden and awful dispensation that deprived her of her cherished and honoured husband, [illegible] by the [illegible] of returning solitary to her native land, her mind has been graciously sustained by the consolations of the Gospel. Her progress from the distant islands to Britain is described in the following letter to the Directors, which, we are sure, will be received by our readers with peculiar interest, and from which they will learn the various unavoidable causes which have concurred to defer so long her arrival on our shores.

Denmark street, Nov. 7, 1842.

Dear Sirs,—With heartfelt gratitude, I desire to acknowledge my deep obligation to God, by whose kind and watchful providence, I and my dear child have been preserved through seasons of trial and seasons of danger, and brought back, in circumstances of great mercy and comfort, to our native land. May I entreat the favour of your uniting with me in devout thanksgiving and praise to our gracious Deliverer?

But while I would chiefly adore the God of my life, I would not be unmindful of those his servants, whom he has disposed to sympathise with me in my sorrows, to offer prayer on my behalf, and kindly to contribute to the support of myself and my beloved family. To you, dear Sirs, I would tender my best and warmest thanks, for the measures which you have devised and the means you have employed, to mitigate, in some degree, the severity of my trial, and to relieve my mind from the pressure of my pecuniary cares; and may I now request, that, through any medium which you may deem the most respectful, and in the strongest terms you can employ, (for they cannot be stronger than my feelings,) you will kindly convey to those numerous friends to whose affections I am so deeply indebted, my best thanks for their generous donations. These I value, not merely on their own account, but as another evidence and testimony of regard to that beloved and honoured man with whom it was my unspeakable privilege to be united. May that God to whom his life was devoted, and who has said that "a cup of cold water given to a disciple, in the name of a disciple, shall not lose its reward," abundantly return to you, and to those who have thought of me in my affliction, a rich and gracious recompense!

It is now twenty-six years since we became connected with the London Missionary Society; and, I must still say, I cannot feel myself separated from your noble Institution; while I shall ever esteem it my highest honour to have been engaged in the great cause which you aim to advance, as the wife of such a man as my late beloved and honoured husband. Widely as he was known to the churches, and intimately as some of you were acquainted with his character, I may be permitted to say, that no one knew, so well as I did, how entirely his whole heart and soul were devoted to his work, and how truly he counted not his life dear unto him, so that he might glorify God, and win souls to Christ. These were the ends, I can testify, for which he lived and for which he died. Often has he said to me, "Life is short for so great a work as ours; and we must, therefore, labour while it is called to day."

As our arrival in England has been so long delayed, it may be proper for me to state the cause. When the Camden arrived at Upolu with the heart-rending intelligence, it affected my health and spirits so much that I did not feel myself then able to undertake the voyage, nor to part with either of my dear children; and, as it was expected that the vessel would only be absent six months, I decided on awaiting her return. But nine months passed before the Camden again appeared, and it was not until the 11th of March that we sailed from Samoa. On our passage to Sydney, we touched at five of the islands of the New Hebrides group. Fotuna was the first, and there we left two native teachers. One of the chiefs of this island accompanied us to Aneitum; and I had not conceived possible that a heathen savage and a cannibal could have expressed so much feeling and sorrow when he was told who Williamu and I were. Immediately, tears rolled down his cheeks,—he beat his breast, and uttered something in his own language, in which he repeatedly exclaimed, "Williamu! Williamu!" When we took him back to his own island, we were delighted to find that the native teachers there had been treated very kindly.

We then sailed to Tanna, when Captain Morgan pointed out to me the different places where my dear and much lamented husband stood, walked, and conversed with the people. To describe my feelings at this time, is impossible. It required no ordinary effort to endure the trial; and the more so, as we had the dark island of Erromanga in view. There was, however, much at Tanna to call forth our warmest feelings of gratitude to God, who had permitted his servant to carry to its shores that Gospel which we then found was taking root among its inhabitants. From Tanna, we crossed over to the small island of Niua, and were soon close in with the dark shores of Erromanga. But you can better conceive than I can describe the agony of my mind on seeing its cruel inhabitants; but yet I think I was then able to say, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they did!" May their savage natures be very soon changed by the sweet influences of the Gospel of Jesus! After this, we visited the Loyalty Islands, [illegible] Island, the Isle of Pines, [illegible] which I landed, and New Caledonia, and then steered our course for Sydney, where we arrived on the 28th of April.

As the season was so far advanced, and I was expecting my son at Sydney in about four months, I determined to wait until December; but, as the missionaries arrived by the Cairo, in October, Mr. M'Kean recommended my coming in her; and, as it was expected that she would be one of the first vessels to leave for England, our passage was taken in her. But, owing to unavoidable delay in lading, we did not sail until the 16th of April. During the first nine days we were at sea, a dreadful gale carried away the bowsprit and foretopmast; and we were obliged, in this crippled state, to put back to Sydney. This occasioned nearly the loss of a month, as we did not sail again till the 13th of May. We then had a long passage of ninety-four days to the port of Bahia, which place we left on the 19th of August; but, from contrary winds, we had still to pursue another tedious voyage of ten weeks before we reached, on the 25th of October, the beloved shores of our native land.

I have thus, Dear Sirs, briefly described the way in which we have been led by Him, who has so graciously heard prayer on our behalf, in bringing us safely across the stormy ocean. May I entreat you still to remember me at the throne of Divine mercy, that I may be preserved in humble dependence upon my Saviour, and be enabled, at all times, and in all circumstances, to act as a consistent Christian? Again thanking you for your prayers, and other expressions of sympathy and kindness, believe me,

Yours sincerely and gratefully, M. WILLIAMS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NEW PEERS.—Lord Auckland, having been created Earl of Auckland, took the oaths and his seat in the House of Lords on Thursday, having been introduced according to the usual form. Afterwards Lord Rodney took his seat for the first time, after the death of his brother: and Lord Ponsonby of Imokilly, having been created Viscount Ponsonby of Imokilly, took the oaths and his seat, having been introduced in the usual manner. Viscount Hill next took the oaths and his seat, and he was followed by Lord Vivian, who sat for the first time in Parliament after the death of his father.—Pat.

DR. LARDNER is starving at Philadelphia; and Mrs. Heaviside, of Brighton, his chère amie, has eloped from him.—Cork Constitution.

LORD LOVAT.—The claims of the Rev. Alexander Fraser to the Lovat estates and title have been set aside. The case was decided on Monday, when his merits were thus stated by Lord Cunninghame:—"He was bound to say, that in no service whatever, whether opposed or unopposed, had he ever seen a pedigree more clearly and convincingly instructed than was that of Lord Lovat; and that, as to the pretensions of the other claimant, though he had not thought proper to appear before them, they had had these pretensions laid before them in the claimant's own words, and had also had evidence led to them, showing in the clearest manner that these pretensions could not be well founded—proving that John Fraser, the brother of Lord Lovat, was dead and buried some thirty years previous to the period when the other John Fraser, who was a cooper at Lancaster, and the alleged grandfather of the reverend claimant, became the parent of the claimant's father." The jury found accordingly, and unanimously served Lord Lovat in terms of his brieve and claim.—Aberdeen Herald.

THE DUKE OF SUSSEX has intimated his intention of standing sponsor in person to the infant son and heir of Lord John Russell.

VISCOUNT JOCELYN has resigned his appointment of Steward of the Viceregal household, the noble lord finding the duties of the office incompatible with a due attention to parliamentary business. Lord Jocelyn is succeeded by Mr. Seymour, married to Lady Emily Murray, sister of the Earl of Mansfield.

THE EARL OF ROSSE has intimated that the next general meeting of the British Association will be held at Cork, in the month of August.

COL. FANCOURT, THE KING OF HANOVER'S pet and ally, has been appointed Governor of Trinidad—of which no mention has been made in any public organ here. He had claims, undoubtedly, on a Tory Government, having sacrificed money and more in their service.—Hants Independent.

SIR R. PEEL'S PROGRAMME OF THE PARLIAMENTARY CAMPAIGN.—It is as follows:—"We are commanded by her Majesty to acquaint you, that measures connected with the improvement of the law, and with various questions of domestic policy, will be submitted for your consideration." Safe at least! There is nothing too small to fulfil; nothing so great as to exceed the limits of Sir Robert Peel's pledge. Civil, criminal, and ecclesiastical law—Poor-law and Bankruptcy-law—magistrates—prisons—Church-[illegible]—currency—education—bribery—and police—this will not be too little, nor all too much, for [illegible] promise. Like the [illegible] of Paris, bonnet, it does equally well to keep in your pocket, or to cover an army of 10,000 men. Never, certainly, was sentence framed from which a smaller quantum of information was to be extorted.—Times.

POOR LONDONDERRY.—It is rumoured in the west-end that the Marquis of Londonderry has withdrawn his name from the Carlton Club, having been disappointed in not obtaining the Coloneley of the Royal Horse Guards (Blue), on the death of Lord Hill, and also that his sons, Viscount Castlereagh and Lord Seaham, have both followed his example.—Hants Independent.

PROGRESS OF TORY PRINCIPLES.—Since Parliament last met the following entire or partial extinctions of Tory influence in the press have taken place. The London Courier, defunct; the Leicester Herald, ditto; the Hull Times, ditto; the Bedford Standard, ditto; the Leeds Conservative, ditto; the Liverpool Mail, abridged from a three times a week to a once a week appearance.—Pat.

DEPLORABLE STATE OF DR. SOUTHEY.—The following is an extract from a communication from Mrs. Southey (formerly so well known as Caroline Bowles) to Mrs. Sigourney, an American authoress, in answer to a letter, in which the latter lady desired to be remembered to the Laureate:—"You desired to be remembered to him who sang of 'Thalaba, the wild and wondrous tale.' Alas, my friend, the dull, cold ear of death is not more insensible than his, my dearest husband's, to all communications from the world without. Scarcely can I keep hold of the last poor comfort of believing that he still knows me. The almost complete unconsciousness has not been of more than six months' standing, though more than two years have elapsed since he has written even his name. After the death of his first wife, 'Edith,' of his first love, who was for several years insane, his health was terribly shaken. Yet for the greater part of a year that he spent with me in Hampshire, my former home, it seemed perfectly re-established, and he used to say, 'It had surely pleased God, that the last years of his life should be happy.' But the Almighty's will was otherwise. The little cloud soon appeared which was in no long time to overshadow all. In the blackness of its shadow we still live, and shall pass from under it only to the portals of the grave. The last three years have done on me the work of twenty. The one sole business of my life is that, which, I verily believe, keeps the life in me—the guardianship of my dear, helpless, unconscious husband."—Leeds Intelligencer.

FORGED EXCHEQUER BILLS.—This subject is again, and soon, to be brought before Parliament; indeed, the question could not well be allowed to remain in its present state. As a preliminary step, the Chancellor of the Exchequer will on Monday, the 13th inst., submit a motion to the House of Commons "relative to the forged Exchequer-bills."—Pat.

NORTH-EASTERN BOUNDARY.—Among the state papers of France, was discovered lately a note by Franklin to the Count de Vergennes, dated Paris, 6th December, 1782, and a map, on which he had marked with a strong red line, "The limits of the United States as settled in the preliminaries between the British and American Plenipotentiaries:" this map had passed through the hands of Mr. Webster to the Committee of Foreign Affairs during the discussion of the disputed boundary: "the strong red line," says Mr. Jared Sparks, who discovered the document, "runs wholly to the south of St. John: in short, it is exactly the line now contended for by Great Britain, except that it concedes more than is claimed."—Ibid.

STATISTICS OF TRAVELLING.—Only eleven mail coaches now leave London daily for the country. A few years since, before railways were formed, there were nearly thirty that used to leave the General Post-office. The number of miles which the mail coaches going to and from London daily travel on turnpike roads is about 5,000. The number of miles which the different railway companies convey mails daily is 4,435. Cross-road mails in England, Scotland, and Wales, run over nearly 12,000 miles of ground every day. Thus, by principal conveyances the correspondence in this country is conveyed over more than 20,000 miles of ground every 24 hours. From these principal conveyances innumerable mail carts and horse and foot letter-carriers branch off, and every road, lane, street, and court in the kingdom is traversed from sunrise to sunrise.—Ibid.

TIVERTON.—On Friday, the 2nd inst., the friends of education were gratified by the announcement of the opening of the costly and beautiful Schools recently erected in this town at the sole charge of the much beloved and truly philanthropic member for the Borough, John Heathcote, Esq. The expense will be nearly 4,000*l.* and they are to be conducted on the plan of the British and Foreign Schools. The Boys' Schoolroom was selected for the occasion. It is capable of holding between 300 and 400, and was crowded in every part. A platform was erected, on which Mr. Heathcote took his seat, supported by the various Dissenting ministers of the town, and one clergyman of the establishment. The excellent founder, explained at length his object in building these schools at so large an outlay; which was to provide a good and useful education for the children of the working classes free of expense. A short address was afterwards delivered by the clergyman present, in some parts of which he touched on the subject of dissent, and was most ably replied to, by the Rev. W. H. Hendebank, Independent Minister.—Pat.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "CONSTITUTIONEL."

SIR,—I am anxious to reply, through your columns, to the numerous and contradictory assertions which have from time to time appeared in the French journals, insinuating that the manager or engineer of the works for the salvage of Le Telemaque had absconded; that the salvage had been completely given up, and, in short, that the company which undertook the enterprise had only been formed with a design of imposing on the public.

The capital of the company is composed of 2,000 shares, of which 1,800 have been sold in England, and 200 in France. I consider it due to my character to declare, in the most positive manner, that the company for the salvage of "Le Telemaque" has always acted with good faith, and that the works, the danger and difficulty attendant on which have been great, have hitherto been fully successful.

I have faithfully fulfilled the most difficult part of my task; and I count on being enabled to renew and complete the works in the approaching spring. I shall very shortly lay before the shareholders a detailed report on the enterprise, and the public can judge of its character.

I cannot lay down my pen without expressing, Mr. Editor, the regret which I have felt in hearing how much malicious satisfaction has been expressed at the temporary suspension of a work of so much historic interest; which has become, in consequence of the hitherto insurmountable difficulties which have attended its prosecution, a work of science and of public utility, deserving not only of the exertions of a private company, but of the attention of a body of men so distinguished as the engineers of France.

I am, Sir, &c., W. H. TAYLOR.

Paris, Rue Neuve, Saint George's, No. 6.

LOSS OF LIFE BY AVALANCHES.—The Lyons journals state from Savoy, 26th Dec., that a hamlet of seven or eight houses near Chamouny had just been overwhelmed by an avalanche, and all the inhabitants had perished. Fourteen bodies had already been dug out of the ruins. A curious circumstance is mentioned in the same letter. At Monthiou (Savoy), in consequence of the ground having been completely saturated with water, a garden on an elevated point, on which was a house containing seven inhabitants, gave way, and was removed to a distance of 50 yards on lower ground, without any of the inhabitants having been injured. It is added, that even the house was only slightly damaged. The Narateur Fribourgeois publishes the following from Groyéres (Switzerland), Jan. 22:—"Whilst efforts were being made to dig out the three young men who were buried in the snow near the village of Estavanens, a new avalanche took place, and all the workmen were nearly destroyed. Fortunately, however, the snow did not fall in a compact mass, and they were able, with one exception—a young man of Epagny, who was buried by it, and has not been discovered—to effect their escape. On the 16th ult., an avalanche fell between Gessenay and Gsteig. In its course it destroyed about a thousand fir trees, a barn, killed some cattle, and caused considerable injury to a house. This avalanche was between 800 and 900 feet in width, and of great thickness. On the same day an avalanche fell at Glarnisch and injured several houses. Similar accidents have taken place in various parts of Eastern Switzerland; and on the Lake of the Four Cantons, during a violent storm, a market-boat, returning from Lucerne, has been lost with all her cargo, but the persons on board were saved. At Valorsine, a village of Savoy, on the frontier of the Valais, the steeple of the church, two inns, and three other houses, have been destroyed by an avalanche. Two persons were killed."—Pat.

ABOLITION OF LOTTERIES IN AUSTRIA.—The Leipsic Gazette states, from Vienna, that the Government is about to restrict the lottery system in the Austrian territories, as a preliminary step to the total abolition.—Ibid.

TWO DEPUTIES OF RHENISH BAVARIA have refused to take their seat in the Bavarian Chamber, on account of this Chamber being deprived of those parliamentary prerogatives, due to the representatives of a free people. They have been replaced, but their declaration caused a very powerful impression.—Ibid.

SPAIN.—Barcelona letters of the 28th state, that the Captain-General had at last been obliged to employ rigour, by putting soldiers in the houses of those who would not pay the contributions. The municipality was forced to give a list of the richest inhabitants. The agitation increased in consequence. On the 27th, twenty-five alcaldes having refused assistance to the soldiers, were sent to the citadel as prisoners. The provincial deputation was all so restive, and threatened to quit Barcelona. M. Ortiz, a rich inhabitant, was [illegible] to the citadel for refusal to pay. And, in fact, the mutual exasperation between people and soldiers was at its height.

El Patriota of the 27th ult. declares, that according to a report furnished by the Board of Engineers at Barcelona, it appears that only eight houses were totally destroyed in that city at the period of its being bombarded, and 100 more or less injured.—Pat.

BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA.

Palace of Agra, the 20th March, 1843.

The Governor General directs the publication of the following extract from a letter, dated the 8th instant, addressed to His Lordship by His Excellency the Governor of Scinde:

"I have received the enclosed account of one of the most gallant actions I ever read of. The damage to the boat is estimated at 200 Rupees; but I imagine your Lordship will order the boatmen more than a mere remuneration."

The Governor General directs, that one hundred rupees, in addition to the estimated amount of the damage done to the boat, be paid to the Tindal.

The Governor General will be gratified if His Excellency the Governor in Council of Bombay should see fit to grant one step of rank to the Jemadar, Mookunjee Naike, of the 15th regiment of Bombay native infantry, who commanded on the occasion of this gallant defence made for three days and nights, by a small party of sepoys, against large numbers of Beloochees, and likewise to the havildar, the two naicks, and the six sepoys named by the jemadar, as having particularly distinguished themselves.

The Governor General requests that His Excellency the Governor of Scinde will cause the jemadar, and the several non-commissioned officers and sepoys, who composed the detachment engaged, to be informed, that their very brave conduct has been brought to his notice, and receives his especial thanks.

By order of the Right Honourable the Governor General of India,

J. THOMASON,
Offg. Secy. to the Govt. of India, with the Govr. Genl.

Evidence of Jemadar Mookunjee Naike, 15th Regiment N. I., relative to the attack on his detachment, strength as below, by a party of Beloochees, estimated at from 800 to 1,000 men, on the 19th, 20th and 21st of Feb.* 1843.

On the morning of the 19th February 1843, about 11 A. M., a party of Beloochees, consisting of about 25 horse and 50 foot, fell suddenly upon my party, when we were quietly cooking our dinners, without the slightest suspicion of any attack, or of any enemy being near us. The enemy rushed into the lines with loud shout of "Deen," "Deen," "Alli," "Alli," and at once killed Mr. Barnes, the sub-conductor, and his wife, who were in their house close to the lines. On hearing the shouts and seeing the enemy, I called out to my men as there was no possibility of "falling them in" to fire away from their houses, and that now was the time to acquit themselves like men.

The sepoys immediately obeyed my orders and killed nine of the enemy at the first discharge; two of whom were chiefs, and one of whom I shot myself. The enemy upon this retreated from both sides of the huts, having killed two of my sepoys and wounded five others. As soon as they had retreated to a short distance, I fell in the detachment and looked about for some defensible position, but seeing none, I ordered my men to take up the wounded, and with our arms and ammunition only, we marched to a large boat which was moored to the bank, about thirty paces from our huts, of which we took possession with the consent of the tindal "Buskkoo," who was on board, and rendered us every assistance. Immediately we were all on board, I cut the cable and pushed off into deep water under a very heavy fire of matchlocks. The enemy by this time amounted to at least 300, and their number was every moment increasing. In getting on board the boat I had three more of my men wounded, and but for the high sides of the boat, which sheltered us from the storm of bullets we could not possibly have escaped. After leaving the bank, we floated up the river about half a coss as the tide was rising, and anchored the boat in deep water, the Beloochees keeping a heavy fire upon us from both banks. On seeing us get on board the boat, the Beloochees seized another large Cotra which had just arrived from Cutch, and having embarked about 200 men, pushed off in pursuit of us, but the Cotra after proceeding about 100 yards, grounded; the enemy then procured a smaller boat similar to the one we were in, and pursued us in that; on seeing them coming, we weighed anchor and floated up in the Tatta direction, occasionally returning the enemy's fire which was very heavy, both from the boat and the banks. When the tide turned we cast anchor, upon which the Beloochees put out men to tow their boat up to us, upon which we fired upon the men who were towing, and thus prevented their boat approaching nearer to ours. The enemy then got out six jingals from the Cotra and tried to sink us with them, but these had no effect, as they did not know how to use them. In this manner advancing, when the tide rose and anchoring in deep water when it receded, we continued to fight incessantly for three days and nights. On the morning of the 22d, the enemy fled, and a banyan came on board our boat and informed us, that the English had taken possession of Hyderabad, and that the whole country had become ours. We thereupon returned to Vikkur, and on the 23d we proceeded to Annee Bunder, where we found the boat sent from Kurrachee by Lieutenant Preedy on the 17th, and which had arrived on the morning the fight commenced, and had been seized by the enemy. The tindal of the river boat rendered us the greatest assistance, gave us food and behaved most nobly. The whole of the detachment behaved most bravely but the following six men particularly distinguished themselves:

|---|---|---|
| Lixmun Sing, | 5th | Company. |
| Man Sing, | 6th | Do. |
| Lalla Ava, | 7th | Do. |
| Narain Urgee, | 7th | Do. |
| Ktojee Nargurie, | 7th | Do. |
| Ramjee Salwee, | 7th | Do. |

The jemadar reports that he had for two or three days previous to the attack, observed bodies of men coming down the river and landing at Vikkur, and that he had enquired who they were, and was informed that they had come down by order of the Ameers, to collect the grain which is collected annually on account of Government; that he had doubted the truth of this, and had brought the assembly of these men to the notice of Mr. Barnes, but he had replied, that there was no danger to be apprehended. On the morning of the attack, the jemadar had again drawn Mr. Barnes' attention to the people collecting around the village; but the conductor had again assured him, that he need not to be under any apprehension. The jemadar states, that the river boat in which he and his party fought was much injured by the enemy: the tindal should, therefore, be reimbursed for the loss sustained.

The following articles were broken, or thrown overboard by the sepoys, to make a clear deck fore and aft, in which to fight, viz.:

* 1 Jemadar, 1 Havildar, 2 Naicks, and 28 Sepoys.

GENERAL ORDERS BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA.

Agra, 10th March, 1843.

The leave of absence granted in General Orders by the Governor General, of the 11th January last, to Lieut. N. R. Chamberlain, of the 16th Regt. N. I. doing duty with His Lordship's Body Guard, for three months, on Medical Certificate, is extended to the 3d of May next, on the same account.

Agra, 11th March, 1843.

The Right Honourable the Governor General is pleased to appoint Brevet Captain E. F. Smith, of the 23d Regiment Native Infantry, to officiate as 2d in Command of the Assam Light Infantry, during the absence of Captain N. A. Parker.

12th March, 1843.

The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to make the following Appointments on His Lordship's Personal Staff:

Captain R. P. Alcock, Assistant Quarter Master General, to be an Extra Aide-de-Camp, during the period he may be in charge of His Lordship's Camp Equipage.

Lieutenant S. A. Abbott, of the 51st Regiment N. I., late in charge of the Commissariat duties of His Lordship's Camp, to be an Acting Aide-de-Camp.

The latter Appointment to take effect from the date of Major Broadfoot's sailing for Moulmein.

14th March, 1843.

The Right Honourable the Governor General is pleased to appoint Captain E. F. Smith, of the 23d Regiment N. I., at present acting, to be 2d in Command of the Assam Light Infantry, vice Captain N. A. Parker, who has been placed at the disposal of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief for Regimental duty.

The charge of all Public Buildings at Subathoo is vested in Lieutenant Spens, Executive Engineer, from the date of the publication of this Order at that Station.

Lieutenant Spens will receive charge from Captain O'Brien should that Officer have reached Subathoo, if not, from the individual who has been acting for Captain O'Brien.

Captain J. P. Ripley, of the 1st European Light Infantry, late in charge of the Candahar Treasure Chest, having reported that his Accounts have been made up, and despatched to the Accountant General, is placed at the disposal of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief for Regimental duty.

15th March, 1843.

The Right Honourable the Governor General is pleased to appoint Major General E. H. Simpson, Colonel of the 24th Regiment of Native Infantry, to the General Staff of the Army, in succession to Major General J. Cook, who has obtained leave to proceed to Europe, on Furlough, on account of his private affairs.

The appointment to have effect from the date of embarkation of Major General Cook.

The Officers and Soldiers who formed the Escort of the Gates of the Temple of Somnath, having been directed in General Orders by the Governor General, Political Department, dated the 10th instant, to return to Regimental duty, the Services of Assistant Surgeon M. A. R. Gerrard, late of the 2d Grenadiers, and Kishen Sing, Native Doctor, late of the 43d Light Infantry, are placed at the disposal of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief from that date.

GENERAL ORDERS BY THE HONOURABLE THE PRESIDENT IN COUNCIL.

Fort William, 17th March, 1843.

No. 59 of 1843.—The Honourable the President in Council is pleased to publish the following paras. 2 to 5 of a Military Letter from the Honourable the Court of Directors to the Government of Fort St. George, No. 33, of the 29th June 1842, and with the concurrence of the Right Honourable the Governor General of India to direct, that the arrangements hereinafter prescribed shall have effect at all the Presidencies, from the 1st January 1843.

"Para. 2.—It was fully intended that under the arrangement promulgated in General Orders of the 28th July 1840, and of subsequent dates, by which the Bengal Scale of Pay and Allowances was introduced at your Presidency, every Non-Commissioned Officer and Soldier of Her Majesty's Service stationed in India, should receive as much as, and in most cases more than, he would be entitled to receive according to Her Majesty's Warrants, if serving abroad in Crown Colonies or Settlements, as for instance in Ceylon.

"Para. 3.—The data of Computation, were

"1st.—That the Pay shall not be less in amount than if issued at a rate equivalent to the intrinsic par value of the Company's Rupee, that is, that the Soldier should receive as much fine Silver in Company's Rupees as he would be entitled to receive if paid in British Currency, viz. at the rate of 2s. $\frac{3}{4}$d. the Rupee, as shewn in the margin.*

* The British Shilling contains 80 7-10 grs. of fine Silver.
The Company's Rupee contains more than double the quantity, viz. 165 grs. being equal to 2s. $\frac{3}{4}$d.

"2nd.—That the Soldier should be stopped 5*d*. per diem for Rations of Bread, Meat, Salt, Tea, and Sugar, according to the published Scale, and that if those Rations should cost the public less than 5*d*. per diem, the difference should be paid to him.

"Para. 4.—The Orders issued by us in March 1840, were designed to accomplish these objects. And for the sake of illustration we will here show the result, as affecting the Privates of Infantry, premising that according to Her Majesty's Warrants, Soldiers serving abroad, are not entitled to "Beer Money," which is paid only to Troops serving at home.

| | According to H.M.'s Warrants deducting 5d per diem for Rations 31 days. | | | According to the Bengal Scale. | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | | | If at a Full Batta Station 31 days. | | | If at a Half Batta Station 31 days. | | |
| | Rs. | As. | P. | Rs. | As. | P. | Rs. | As. | P. |
| Privates of Infantry of 14 years Service, .. .. .. | 11 | 6 | 2 | 14 | 1 | 3 | 12 | 7 | 5 |
| Ditto under ditto,.. | 8 | 13 | 8 | 12 | 0 | 2 | 10 | 6 | 4 |

"Para. 5.—Thus the Privates of Infantry gain additional Pay, varying from 1 R. 1 A. 3 P. to 3 Rs. 2 A. 6 P. per Mensem. In all other Ranks of Infantry and in all Ranks of Cavalry it will be found, in making a similar comparison, that no one sustains loss, and that most are gainers."

2. With reference to the above, the following arrangements are to have effect at the three Presidencies from the 1st January 1843.

3. The cost of the Ration of a Soldier shall be considered to comprise the actual cost to Government of the following items—Bread or Rice, Meat, Salt, Tea or Coffee, and Sugar, fuel being supplied by Government gratis.

4. In every instance where the actual cost to Government of the Ration above specified shall fall short of the authorised stoppage of 5d., or 3 Annas 4 Pie per day, the Soldier will be entitled to receive the difference from the Commissariat Department according to the following arrangement.

5. Every Executive Officer entrusted with the victualling of European Troops will, as soon as possible after the expiration of every month, in which the cost of the Soldier's Ration shall fall short of the stipulated deduction from his pay, viz. 3 Annas 4 Pie daily, furnish to the Commanding Officer of each Regiment or Detachment, a Certificate of the actual cost per man of the Rations issued during such month. In accordance with the above Certificate a bill will be presented by the Commanding Officer, or authorised Staff Officer, to the Commissariat Officer, by whom payment of the difference will be made; these bills being subject, in due course, to the audit of the Military Board.

6. When Troops are marching or in the Field, this Certificate is to be furnished by the Executive Commissariat Officer as soon after the adjustment of the Agent's Accounts as possible.

7. The Honourable the President in Council is further pleased to fix the sum of 3 Annas 4 Pie, being the equivalent of the stoppage of 5d. per day, or Co.'s Rs. 6-8-4 for any month, as the general rate of Dry Batta, to be drawn by all Classes of European Soldiers attached to Native Corps, Garrisons, or Departments, who are not entitled to receive Rations in kind from the Commissariat, including those on the non-effective list in receipt of Pay and Half Batta without reference to the Station at which they may be serving.

8. Agreeably to the rule laid down under the Orders of the Honourable the Court of Directors in Clause 8, of the G. O. G. G., dated the 8th of July 1840, the revised scale of Dry Batta now fixed is to be deemed prospective only, and is not to affect those now in receipt of a higher scale; but, as the revised scale does not include Compensation for Spirit Rations, to which the Soldier is entitled, he will receive with it, the higher rate of pay in which that Compensation is included, authorized in the G. O. above quoted.

9. The Dry Batta to Individuals who are not entitled to receive Rations in kind from the Commissariat Department will continue, as heretofore, to be drawn from the Pay Department.

No. 60 of 1843.—In publishing for general information the subjoined Extract, para. 11 of a Letter from the Honourable the Court of Directors to the Government at Fort St. George, No. 33, dated the 29th of June 1842, the Honourable the President in Council, with the concurrence of the Right Honourable the Governor General of India, in obedience to the Orders therein conveyed, is pleased to direct, that the additional pay for length of Service, of European Soldiers at all the Presidencies, which has hitherto been converted into Indian Currency at the Exchange of 2s. 6d. the Rupee, shall, from the 1st of January 1843, be converted and paid, as in the instance of Good Conduct Pay, at the Exchange of 2s. 0$\frac{3}{4}$d.

2. The additional Pay of a Penny per diem, formerly allowed to certain classes of European Soldiers after 10 years' Service in the Cavalry, and 7 years in the Infantry, having been discontinued in Government General Order dated the 18th May 1837, the rate of Pay for such first period of Service inserted inadvertently in the Pay Tables published in G. G. O. of the 8th July 1840, is to be expunged.

"We observe that there is a discrepancy in the Pay Tables in consequence of the additional Pay for length of Service having been originally converted into Rupees in Bengal at a higher rate of Exchange than additional Pay of the same amount in Sterling granted as 'Good Conduct Pay,' which is now converted into Rupees at 2s. $\frac{3}{4}$d. Thus the Private of Infantry whose period of Service is 14 years is entitled to 2d. a day additional Pay, but he receives only Rupees 2-1-1 per month of 31 days, as the equivalent; whilst the Soldier who is entitled to 2d. a day, as Good Conduct Pay, receives Rs. 2-8-8 per month as the equivalent. We are aware that in the aggregate the Soldier of 14 years' Service receives more in India than he is entitled to by the Royal Warrant, but as it is undesirable that the difference we have pointed out should be continued, we direct that the addition for Service be equalized with that for Good Conduct."

No. 61 of 1843.—Captain Charles O'Hara, of the 4th Regiment Light Cavalry, is permitted to retire from the Service of the East India Company, from the 1st instant, on the pension of his rank.

The Honourable the President in Council is pleased to make the following Promotions:

MEMORIALS OF AFFGHANISTAN.
BY J. H. STOCQUELER.

ON the 15th of April, 1843, will be published, in one volume, the whole of the despatches, narratives, state papers, &c. connected with the expedition to, and occupation of, Affghanistan, between the 1st of October, 1838, and the 1st October, 1842. These documents, arranged in chronological order, will be connected by a brief and succinct narrative of the operations in Affghanistan and Scinde, commencing with the assembly of the Army of the Indus at Ferozepore, and terminating with the evacuation of the former state after the restoration of the prisoners.

The object of this work is to present, at one view, the whole of the occurrences which have distinguished a most eventful period of British Indian History, and thus to facilitate the references of the student, the politician, and the soldier.

The work will be illustrated with sketches of remarkable places, striking incidents, portraits, costumes, &c. &c.

PRICE 20 RUPEES.

☞ Amongst the documents contained in this work will be found Lord Auckland's Proclamation, the despatches of Sir John Keane, General Wiltshire, General Sale, Sir Willoughby Cotton, General Pollock, General Nott, &c.; the narratives of Captain Outram's pursuit of Dost Mahomed; of Captain Gray's escape; of the destruction of the Goorkha Battalion; of Captain Ferris's escape from Pesh Bolak; of the disaster which befell Skinner's horse in the Bolan Pass; of Major Brown's defence of Kahun; of the defence of Kyelat-i-Ghilzie; of the rise and progress of the insurrection at Cabul; of the retreat from Cabul to Jellalabad, &c.; Lord Ellenborough's Proclamation, &c. &c.

Applications for the work are to be addressed to the Editor of the Englishman.

THE HIGHLANDS, THE SCOTTISH MARTYRS, AND OTHER POEMS,

REV. JAMES G. SMALL.

FOR the Poems on THE HIGHLANDS, THE SCOTTISH MARTYRS, and THE LIBERATION OF GREECE, Prizes were adjudged to the Author at the University of Edinburgh. The two former have since been much extended, and the first, which consists of five Cantos, embodies reflections during various tours among the most interesting districts of the Highlands. The following extracts indicate the opinion of the adjudicators regarding the Prize Poems in their original state:—

I. PROFESSOR WILSON.

"Mr. J. G. Small displayed extraordinary talents and accomplishments, and gained a prize for a very beautiful Poem on the Highlands." 1836.—"His compositions in verse were superior to those of the ablest of his rivals, and characterised by feeling and fancy, and pure and elevated sentiments"—"A Poem of much power and beauty on the Scottish Martyrs." 1837.

II. PROFESSOR DUNBAR.

"The first 24 or 25 stanzas* possess great poetical beauty and energy of description. Some of the lines are equal almost to any thing of the kind in English poetry, both in the boldness of conception and felicity of expression." 1835.

* Of the Poem on the Liberation of Greece, in the stanza of Spenser, in which measure "The Highlands," and the Tale entitled "Imagination," are also written.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 432. Vol. IX.] SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, APRIL 13th, 1843. {Price 2 Co's. Rs. monthly, or 20 Rs. yearly, if paid in advance.

The Union Bank and the Magistrate.—Mr. P. O'Hanlon has followed up his attack on Mr. Gordon, the Secretary of the Union Bank, by another letter, which has just appeared in the papers. The two points on which the attack rests, are the loss sustained by Mr. O'Hanlon's son of Rs. 4431-8-11 by the failure of Messrs. Mackintosh and Co. ten years ago, and the mismanagement of the affairs of the Bank. Some allowance must be made for the warmth of his paternal feelings, but still the charge of breach of trust brought against the only member of the defunct firm now in India, in reference to this transaction, appears to be entirely groundless. Capt. Fagan, it is said, sold a house for Capt. O'Hanlon and remitted the proceeds to Mackintosh and Co. to be held on his account. The Agents carried it to his credit, and soon after failed. If it had been proved that Captain Fagan had directed this sum to be invested in public securities, or that Capt. O'Hanlon had made any such communication to the firm, the transaction would have assumed a serious aspect; but it appears to have been a simple matter of account. The sum ought not to have remained a day in the house without being entered in the books to the credit of some account. Mr. O'Hanlon says, that when "perfectly aware of their impending bankruptcy, they got possession of so much of his property and converted it to their own use." Yet in another part of the letter Mr. O'Hanlon says, that it was remitted to them from Nusseerabad, without their asking for it, and that they were told to hold it on account of his son. They obeyed their instructions. The son did not call for it before the bankruptcy, and he suffered in common with the rest of the creditors from not having got his money out in time,—yet ten years after, Mr. O'Hanlon writes peremptorily to Mr. Gordon, will you pay, or will you not. He says at the close of his letter that a competent legal authority will decide whether this 'conversion and appropriation' were just. If he intends by this to say that the question is to be brought into Court, it appears inconsistent with the rules of equity to publish an exparte statement calculated, though not intended, to bias the minds of the Judges.

But the more important part of the Magistrate's letter refers to the management of the Union Bank, from which he is very anxious to expel the Secretary. The absence of all caution in the dealings of the Bank with Gilmore and Co. is generally acknowledged and as generally lamented. The Bank has suffered severely for its loose way of doing business. Yet it is some little palliation of that carelessness that till the failure of that firm it had never suffered from the confidence which was reposed in the integrity and honour of the merchants it assisted. Both banks were formerly managed with too little mistrust. Both of them forgot that a bank is but a large pawnbroking establishment and ought to regulate its accommodation on the same sure and safe principles which guide the pawnbroker. The Bank of Bengal got out of the scrape first; mainly, we believe, because of the admixture of Government Directors in its Committee. The Union Bank Direction was composed entirely of those who wished to borrow, and a reform of the system became more difficult, Mr. Gordon's predecessor stated that if he were to urge on his masters to refuse advances on that which was in fact no security at all, it would give mutual offence—if he had said mortal offence, he would have been nearer the mark. The blame of the losses rests more with the Directors than with the Secretary, and more with the Proprietors than the Directors; for it was a well-known fact that the funds of the Bank were shared among a few houses, to such an extent and upon such security, as no individual proprietor, would have sanctioned if he had enjoyed the disposal of his own money. It was known that this pernicious system of credit must continue unchecked as long as the Directors were chosen from what may be called the House List; yet, year after year, did the proprietors run the same round of election, without ever attempting to get out of the circle.

Mr. Gordon may be fonder of speculation than Mr. O'Hanlon; or than is altogether safe, at the present, perhaps even at any time. But the real question is whether the present position of the Bank has arisen from the speculative turn of the Secretary; and there is nothing in the disclosures which have been made to support such an idea. On the contrary, it appears that the embarrassments of the Bank have grown out of the advances which have been made to merchants and cultivators upon the pledge of indigo factories, sugar mills, and the like. They have arisen from its having locked up its capital, for the most part, in those agricultural speculations which swept the old houses into the gulph of bankruptcy, notwithstanding the larger share of profit which they reserved to themselves. Has this devotion of capital arisen from the preponderance of Mr. Gordon's influence, or that of the Directors in the management of the Bank? It is generally understood that the Secretary has been overruled by his masters, not the Directors by the Secretary; and we think there is little reason to doubt that if Mr. Gordon had not been Secretary, and had not in some measure succeeded in stemming this tide of indiscreet accommodation, the affairs of the Bank might ere this have passed into the hands of Assignees. Mr. O'Hanlon says, "Two years ago I denounced to a general meeting of proprietors the appropriation of forty lakhs of our capital by a few cultivators and traders. This was unavailing to induce caution or reserve. The sum advanced in this way has been nearly doubled." And with whom does the blame rest, but with those proprietors, who, notwithstanding Mr. O'Hanlon's denunciation continued listlessly to permit the capital to ooze out till it was entirely absorbed by a few cultivators and traders? We cannot see the fairness of selecting the Secretary for the scape goat on such an occasion, or making him answerable for a state of things which has arisen from the necessities of the Directors, and the indolence of the Proprietors. Even now the Proprietors have not the courage to demand the names of the "few cultivators and traders,"—seven or eight,—in whom the capital of this Bank is now vested.

Mr. O'Hanlon seems to think that to expel Mr. Gordon from the Secretaryship would be the salvation of the Bank. We doubt whether his removal would improve its prospects. The facetious Abbé asked the sansculloterie of Paris during the French Revolution, whether his being hung up at the lantern-post, would enable them to see any better. And we may ask with equal confidence whether the ejection of Mr. Gordon would impose any cheque on the dangerous system into which the Bank has fallen. We believe it is owing in a great measure to Mr. Gordon's influence that matters are no worse. They may not go right under a successor. By whom is that successor to be chosen? By the same majority of proprietors who have perpetuated the election of Directors in certain firms to which Mr. O'Hanlon, not without justice, attributes much of its present embarrassments. Will a successor thus chosen be less under the influence of the Directory; less disposed to yield to their wishes in disposing of the funds of the Bank, to suit the convenience of a section of the mercantile community? It is not in the nature of things that it should be so. Mr. Gordon has the benefit of experience, and he is backed by the public voice; and though he has received every provocation to retire, we hope he will continue at his post till he has relieved the Bank from its perilous connections, and restored its credit.

The Ningpo Bell.—We publish below an explanation which Capt. Warden has sent to a contemporary relative to the Bell, which he presented to the Bishop for the Cathedral, from among the spoils of Ningpo. It entirely exonerates him from all blame in having made a private appropriation of this article of plunder. It appears that the city was not given up to private plunder, as the Englishman supposed. The Bell came into Capt. Warden's possession, and he made it over as in duty bound to the prize Agent, who considered it of no value and returned it. After this Captain Warden's right to dispose of it according to his own wishes became undoubted. But the gallant Capt. must excuse the freedom of our observing that while we sufficiently commend his piety in thinking of the new Cathedral on such an occasion, we wish he had consulted one of the Chaplains sent with the expedition, as to the propriety of the gift. We think they would have saved him from the anomaly of presenting to God what had been rejected by men. They would have directed him to the canon of Scripture, in which he would have read, "Whatsoever hath a blemish, that shalt thou not offer, for it shall not be acceptable for you."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ENGLISHMAN.

Sir,—Having but yesterday seen in your paper, the remarks of the Friend of India, upon my presenting a Bell to the Bishop, for the New Cathedral of Calcutta, I beg to offer a few remarks in reply thereto, for his satisfaction.

The Friend of India observes, I had no right to this Bell, it being the property of the Crown, or Prize property, and ought to have been made over to the Prize Agents. In all this, the Friend of India is quite correct. The Bell in question, was made over to the Prize Agents, and by them rejected, not being of sufficient value, as it was Iron, to repay them for the expense of removing it.

Consequently, as they rejected it and would have nothing to do with it, and as I took it, I kept it, and brought it round to Calcutta, for the purpose to which I have since applied it, and I consider I had an undoubted right so to do, and I hope after this explanation, the Friend of India will think so too.

I am, Sir, your's obediently.

April 6, 1843. W. WARDEN, Qr. m.

THE LANDHOLDER'S SOCIETY.—The Hurkaru of Saturday last says, that from the manner in which we have epitomized the proceedings of the Landholder's Society, he might be led to believe that the resuscitation of that long dormant body had caused us some uneasiness. We see no cause for uneasiness, and are not aware of having used any expression, from which such a feeling might be inferred. In common with the rest of the community we have been amused with the singularity of its present movements, and have thought it not unworthy of comment.

The Society was established with the view of affording Government the assistance of its influence and advice in the administration of the country. After having got up a remonstrance on the subject of the Resumptions, and offered some comments on the New Sale Law, it folded its arms and went to sleep. Those who are not versed in the national character may be astonished that a Society with so high and animating an object before it, should have thus continued in a state of suspended animation for so long a period as two entire years. Those again who remember the large claims which it advanced to public confidence, as the guardian of public rights and interests, will naturally be surprised that it should have failed to afford to Government any aid whatever in the construction of those various important acts which have been discussed or passed during this period, regarding the protection of moveable and immoveable property against wrongful possession in cases of succession—the collection and payment of debts due to deceased persons—the provision of measures connected with public health and convenience,—the emigration of labourers to the Mauritius—the Registration of deeds and the abolition of slavery; besides many minor arrangements which have been made for the improved administration of justice. All these measures have been discussed, with more or less eagerness, by all classes of society; the Landholder's Society alone has been silent. It is well for India that its improvement has not been dependent in the smallest degree on its exertions.

This total neglect of those public interests for the protection of which the Association was ostensibly established, is strongly contrasted with the bustling activity which marks its present movement. It appears to have arisen from its slumbers and held its first meeting at its new office on the 22d of March. In the brief space of three weeks it has made arrangements for establishing a system of Registry throughout the country; it has taken up questions connected with the Sale law—the resumption of Alluvial lands, and of lands under 50 biggahs—the remission of fees on remittances to the General Treasury; and has extended its efforts to the settlement recently concluded in the North West Provinces. These grave and important subjects have been brought forward and discussed, and memorials have been drawn up to Government with a rapidity which almost stupifies the mind. They require large observation, much experience, and deep thought, yet they appear to be disposed of at a railroad pace. The Society seems resolved to make up for lost time at all hazards; to establish the fact of its existence by the extent and variety of the subjects it overhawls, without any particular reference to the utility of its interference. In its anxiety to do something which shall keep it before the public, it has even travelled to the Western Provinces, where its members have no interests whatever at stake.

Is it unreasonable that we should entertain some doubt of the permanent utility of a body subject to such extremes of sloth and labour; that we should feel a presentiment that the present paroxysm is too violent to last, and that it will in all probability be succeeded, in the natural course of things, by another fit of somnolency, during the continuance of which the Government will be left to carry on the administration of the country from its own resources, without advice or censure from the Landholders? It must be perfectly obvious that Mr. George Thompson is the moving cause of the activity which the Society now exhibits; and there is reason to apprehend that when he is no longer here to animate it with his own spirit, it will fall back into a state of torpidity. Our opinion of the utility of such an association continues without alteration. Although it represents but one interest, that of the landholders, and its representations must therefore be received with some allowance for human infirmity, yet it comprizes many men of great local experience and knowledge, and some men of superior liberality of thought, and may therefore exert a salutary influence over measures which are designed for the welfare of the country. But to make that influence beneficial, it must be steadily and permanently exercised. The Society must not mistake the paroxysms of feverish excitement for healthful energy.

With respect to the proposal regarding the Notice of Sales which the Landholder's Society is anxious to obtain, and our remarks on which appear to the Harkaru to indicate that we have followed the example of that body and fallen asleep also, we offer the following explanation. Our contemporary says that the Society prays for the enactment of the Third Section of the original draft of the Law, and that if we had referred to the section specified we should have avoided the mistake into which we have fallen. On reference to the third section however we found that it had been enacted, and stood as Section III. of the Law. We therefore concluded that it was some other notice which the landholders desired; and we naturally suspected that it had reference to some intimation to the defaulter, which might impair the principle of the law,—which is rigid punctuality. We have now gone over the original draft and the enacted law, and find that the Section to which the Landholders apparently allude is the Fourth, and that the notice they require, is that specification of estates in arrear which it was originally intended to affix in the public officers and at the Cutchery of the defaulter; and which for reasons which appeared good and sufficient to Government, was omitted in the Act subsequently passed. As we may shortly expect the Landholder's memorial on the subject, we shall not attempt to anticipate its arguments. The three objects which Government proposed in the enactment of the new law, were, that the revenue should be punctually paid; that the sale of estates, with all the numberless inconveniences which the poor ryot suffers from every change of masters, should be diminished; and that estates when put up to sale should realize their full value. How far the law has answered these objects; if not, how far the suggestions of the Landholders are likely to secure their accomplishment, we shall be able to judge when the document is before us.

The Harkaru says, we are equally wide of the mark in saying that the Landholder's Society has resolved to memorialize the Government in favour of a permanent settlement in the North West Provinces previously to obtaining all the necessary information." The resolution runs thus:

"Resolved,—That the Secretary be directed to take the necessary measures for obtaining information respecting the settlements already made in the North Western Provinces and Cuttack, and to draw up a memorandum on the subject, to be hereafter submitted to the Committee, with a view to the preparation of a memorial in favour of the permanent settlement of those portions of the British possessions in India."

We may be mistaken in our opinion, but we understood this resolution to mean that the Landholder's Society had made up its mind to memorialize Government in favour of a permanent settlement; and that the Secretary was directed to procure information for the support of this memorial. If the resolution had stated that the information was intended to enable the Society to judge of the propriety or impropriety of praying Government that the settlement might be made perpetual, we should not have fallen into this error, if indeed we are in error. Let the Hurkaru assure us that the question of the perpetual settlement is yet an open one with the Landholder's Society, and we will at once retract our remarks; but in this case we must intreat that body to be a little more explicit in its phraseology. The insuperable objections we entertain to any permanent and unalterable settlement, in a country where every thing is subject to alterations, we shall be prepared to urge as soon as the Memorial is ready.

Finally, we beg to offer the Landholder's Society not only a "kindly notice" of their labours in the cause of Registration, but the tribute of our humble commendation. Only we regret that their assistance was not offered at an earlier stage of the business, and that it comes after the question has been disposed of. It will not probably be brought forward again till Lord Ellenborough has leisure from his political perplexities to master the complicated details of such a measure. We fear that it is in vain to expect that his Lordship will be able to command such leisure, during his administration. The address of the Society on this subject, however valuable, would have been more to the point if it bore fewer tokens of haste. But we rejoice to find the landholders so cordial in calling for registration. It was from them that we expected the most formidable opposition to a measure which, so far as it intended to secure exactness and diminish litigation, is so diametrically opposed to the national character. We cannot hope that after the question has been under consideration for near two years, and has been laid on the shelf, the present memorial will induce Government to open it anew, at a time when the Council labours under the disadvantage of being separated by so many hundred miles from the Govern

General. But whenever the subject comes round again, their commentaries will be found valuable, and their co-operation still more so.

The Bengal British India Society.—At the last meeting of Native and other gentlemen, including Mr. Speede, at the Fouzdaree Balakhana, Mr. George Thompson proposed the establishment of a British India Society, upon the model, we believe of that which he had assisted in forming in England. The following are the rules of the proposed Association.

I.—That in the deliberate and solemn judgment of this Meeting, the circumstances of the British Indian Empire and the relations subsisting between that empire and the Government and people of Great Britain, impose upon every individual member of the community, the duty of doing all in his power to ameliorate the condition of the people, and to advance the general prosperity of this country.

II.—That it is the opinion of this Meeting that, in addition to individual effort, it is expedient and necessary that a Society should be formed in Calcutta, upon a basis that shall admit of the friendly co-operation of all persons anxious to promote the good of India, and the improvement, efficiency and stability of the British Government, without respect of Caste, Creed, Place of Birth, or Rank in Society.

III.—That a Society be now formed and denominated The Bengal British India Society; the object of which shall be, the collection and dissemination of information, relating to the actual condition of the people of British India, and the Laws, Institutions and Resources of the country; and to employ such other means of a peaceable and lawful character, as may appear calculated to secure the welfare, extend the just rights, and advance the interests of all classes of our fellow subjects.

IV.—That the Society shall adopt and recommend such measures only, as are consistent with pure loyalty to the person and government of the reigning Sovereign of the British dominions, and the due observance of the Laws and Regulations of this country; and shall discountenance every effort to subvert legal authority, or disturb the peace and well-being of society.

V.—That all persons of adult age, and not at the time receiving instruction in any public institution, contributing to the funds of the Society, and conscientiously subscribing to the above fundamental Resolutions shall be eligible to Membership.

VI.—That the following gentlemen be a Committee to prepare an Address to the public, in the spirit of the foregoing resolutions, together with a list of officers, and such Rules and Regulations as may appear to be necessary for the management of the affairs of the Society, and that they submit the same to a general meeting of Members, to be held in this place on Thursday Evening the Instant.

The object which is here proposed to the Natives of India, is worthy of all praise; and any Society which shall employ itself steadily in the collection of information relative to the actual state of the people and the laws, institutions and resources of the country, will deserve the gratitude both of the community and the Government. One great obstacle to a wise and beneficial administration in India, is our comparative ignorance of the habits and feelings of the people, and of the influence of the institutions which have been introduced by our Government; and in proportion as this ignorance continues, must we continue to legislate at hazard. Government has neglected no opportunity which presented itself of obtaining correct data of the condition of the people, or of the result of its own measures. All the information within its reach has been carefully collected, and even when it has told decidedly against the wisdom of its arrangements, has been fearlessly published to the world. The educated Natives are in a much more advantageous position for collecting and communicating this information than any other class in the community. It is in this department of labour that the can become the most valuable auxiliaries of Government; and it is to be hoped that the impulse which Mr. George Thompson has communicated, will survive his departure. These representations will be received with deference by the ruling authorities in proportion to the correctness with which they are drawn up, and the sound judgment they exhibit.

We think he might have left out of his address, the ungracious remark that "a portion at least of the public press will aid the Society." Why should not the whole press aid the Society in such an undertaking? Every symptom of improvement in Native Society was hailed with joy, and every attempt at national amelioration was warmly encouraged, without exception, by the public journals in Calcutta, till the present agitation began and the Mookerjee Baboos, and the Old Hindoos began to abuse the public authorities, and to use language which every man of right feeling felt to be unjust. The change in the sentiments of the Press was the natural and inevitable consequence of the change which had been so suddenly produced in the feelings and views of the natives. The papers which had been steadily remonstrating with Government on public abuses, and using every argument which appeared likely to secure reform, felt it a matter of duty to suspend this peaceful agitation of grievances, and to rally round a Government so ungenerously, so unjustly assailed. In the objects which the new Society proposes to itself, we are certain the co-operation of the press of India will be unanimous.

We hope the Meeting to be held on the 20th, will modify the 4th Resolution, and leave out altogether the talk about "pure loyalty to the person and government of the reigning sovereign." The loyalty of the Native community in Calcutta has never been doubted; and it would be unwise to give colour to the suspicion that any change had been wrought in its feelings or sentiments which rendered the affirmation of its loyalty necessary. When India was threatened with an invasion from across the Indus, and the Persian newspapers in Calcutta were calling on the Natives to rise and expell us, such an expression of loyalty to the British Government would have been most appropriate. But there is no political crisis now impending; peace smiles upon us; there is no agitation but at the Fouzdaree Balakhana; and surely this is not of so serious a character as to render it necessary to come forward with an assurance of loyalty to the British Crown.

The New Saugor Appointments.—We have received a letter signed Rufus on the summary dismissal of the officers employed in the Saugor and Nerbudda Territories, which we feel it improper to publish. The writer deals in innuendos; he applies disparaging epithets to the Governor General; he imputes improper motives for the appointments which have been made. To publish the letter would do Lord Ellenborough no good; and ourselves much injury. We carry the idea of editorial responsibility a little farther than our contemporary of the Hurkaru, though we impeach not his judgment as to the extent of freedom which he allows his correspondents to indulge in. We have invariably endeavoured to act upon the maxim of not permitting any correspondent to make this journal the channel of personal observations which we should shrink from placing in our editorial columns. The publication of sentiments which may appear to us erroneous, we do not object to, because nothing serves more effectually to elicit truth than the free discussion of opinions; but we cannot sanction the publication of epithets of abuse when the Governor General is the subject of them, any more than we can consent to disseminate a charge against the Civilians of systematically encouraging corruption in their Native officers from interested motives. Such sentiments as these: 'May the pangs and heart burnings he has inflicted on the many, follow him'—'He has sought popularity in loudly braying out benevolent intentions;' (an expression evidently second hand, a mere imitation of the Satirist, when he says that Lord Ellenborough has imitated Sampson, not only in the matter of the Gates, but in slaying his enemies with the 'jaw bone of an ass')—'Does the Mahout expect to find all submit their necks as he would wish?' may or may not express public opinion; but we consider the publication of them objectionable, and must transfer the responsibility to others.

On one assertion in the letter, we are diametrically at issue with our correspondent. "I say and so say all around me that it is a disgusting instance of the exercise of power to push on his own friends, or his friend's friends." Never was our correspondent more entirely mistaken. Lord Ellenborough has not, we believe, in a single instance pushed on his own friends, or his friend's friends. He has, on the contrary, regarded the solicitation of his friends as any thing but a recommendation of a candidate. It is a mere act of justice to his Lordship to state that the vast patronage with which he is invested—the greatest entrusted to any subject,—has been distributed on the purest and most disinterested principles. This is the great redeeming point in the present administration. Never has any Governor General so signally disappointed his friends and even his relatives at home, as Lord Ellenborough. In his hands the patronage of India has been lost to all Ministerial purposes. He has invariably sought out merit and rewarded it. He may have been sometimes mistaken in the objects of his support; and the rewards he has bestowed have not been in keeping with the habits and aptitude of the individual; but the principle visible in all his appointments has been such as to command general admiration.

The error of the administration lies in the marked disfavour manifested towards those who distinguished themselves under Lord Auckland's administration. It is impossible to mistake his Lordship's feelings with regard to the men who served their country with zeal under his predecessor. We have sought for some palliation of these feelings in the individual character of the men, but the general proscription which has pursued them, resembles too much the proscriptions of Scylla, for its character to be mistaken. We deeply regret this prejudice; for there is nothing so fatal to the reputation of a Governor General as the display of littleness of mind. He may commit great errors and yet be safe with posterity, but mankind seldom forgive and never forget that want of generosity which stamps a mind feeble. The dismissal of the Saugor functionaries in so summary and wholesale a manner, has had the appearance of having been done in a pet, and a Governor General must be above such a feeling, if he would retain public respect. In whatever point of view we regard this sweeping ejectment, objections rise up thick against it. It is unjust to the officers who have been ejected. They had applied themselves successfully to the languages; they had passed their examinations and had been rewarded with Interpreterships and Adjutancies in their respective corps. Browne, Doolan, Banks, Hamilton, Duncan, Herbert, Hayes, Boland had all resigned those appointments to accept of situations in the political line, and they are now dismissed without ceremony, and remanded to their regiment without staff employment. They are in a worse position than as though they had not qualified themselves for public employment; for they return to their corps to regimental duties, and regimental pay, with a slur on their characters.

They cannot all have been guilty of having caused the outbreak. If an example had been made of the most culpable, their fate might have acted as a warning to others. But the indiscriminate dismissal of the whole body, can produce no other effect than to repress the zeal and ardor of all by shewing them that there is no certain reward for distinguished exertions, and that caprice may in a moment blast the prospects of the most deserving. His Lordship, it is said, wished to remodel the Agency. But would it not have been far better to have allowed it to remain as it was, than to have adopted a measure which destroys the character of Government for calmness, wisdom and justice? After all, it is much to be doubted whether the appointment of new men, unacquainted with the language, habits and feelings of the people, to work the new plan, will not neutralize the effects of any wisdom which may have been exercised in constructing it. The employment of men who have not passed an examination, is moreover unjust to the rest of the service if it is to be regarded as an exception to the rule, and very unwise if it is to become the rule. The value of our administration in the East depends mainly upon the degree in which our functionaries acquire the language of the people. The principle of connecting proficiency in the languages with promotion in the service, cannot be too rigidly enforced; and whatever tends to impair it, must be detrimental to the character, and fatal to the utility of our Government.

The Lotteries.—The State Lottery has been suspended pending a reference to the Court of Directors; and the small fry of the minor lotteries have disappeared. But we are sorry to perceive that the evil is likely to be perpetuated by private speculators. The papers of the week announce the Establishment of a Phœnix Lottery Company, with a Capital of One lakh of Rupees, though upon what principles we are not informed. The Third Lottery of this Company is also announced. It comprizes 3000 Tickets at 50 Rupees each; or 150,000 Rs. while the sum to be given away in prizes is stated at Rs. 144,540, leaving a clear profit to the speculators of only 5460 Rs. or about three and a half per cent.; the very moderation of which is calculated to create some misgivings. It seems incredible that any individuals should embark in an expensive scheme, which offered so inadequate a return. But let that pass. The example which has thus been set, is we fear too likely to become contagious in a city in which habits of gambling have been so long encouraged; and we may expect that lotteries will spring up rapidly in every direction, each vying with its rival in plausibility and attraction. Thus the evils which grew out of the great State Lottery will be perpetuated, and perhaps extended, and the cause of public morals will have gained nothing by its abolition. It is necessary to apply a legislative check to the establishment of such lotteries,—and indeed of all lotteries. As soon therefore as the sanction of the Court of Directors shall have been received to the permanent discontinuance of the Government Lottery, we hope to see the draft of an Act, forbidding their establishment by private individuals. We trust the favourable decision of the Court will be received before Mr. Bird quits the Government in October next, that he may be enabled to consummate the good work he has begun, and deliver society entirely from the evil of Lotteries.

Education in the North West Provinces.—We have the pleasure of publishing a valuable Memorandum on the Education of the Agra Presidency drawn up at home by a gentleman in the Civil Service, who has devoted all the energies of his mind to the promotion of Education in India, and whose intimate acquaintance with the habits and feeling of the people in the North West Provinces, gives a peculiar value to his suggestions.

It is an undeniable fact that the attempt to impart the blessings of education to the districts in Upper Hindoostan through the medium of English, have not been attended with those gratifying results which are visible in and around the metropolis. The scale of attainments which the students reach before they quit the scene of instruction in the West is far inferior to that attained by the successful youths in the Hooghly and Hindoo Colleges, and the General Assembly's Institution. In the interior of the country the English Schools are in a still more languid and inefficient state. This is easily accounted for. In the metropolis of our power, and the great mart of our commerce, the feelings and the interests of Native society are closely identified with a knowledge of English. A native youth in Calcutta who has not a good English tongue and pen, is held in little or no estimation. English is become so common that the acquisition of it is easy, and ignorance of it disreputable. It is not so even at Agra and Delhi. In those cities there are not perhaps more than two hundred individuals—the military excepted—who are in the habit of using it; and every European and East Indian is acquainted with the vernacular tongue. The obstacles to the acquisition of a familiar knowledge of English are as great in those cities, as the facilities are great in Calcutta. Neither is English necessary to the prospects of the students. It leads to no situation worth more than a Hundred Rupees a month. Those who have devoted the period of youth to the acquisition of it, have obtained no peculiar distinction in society; and the subordinate position they occupy is rather a discouragement than a stimulus to others. Hence it becomes a matter of duty to modify the system of instruction, and to endeavour to impart useful knowledge through vernacular channels, reserving the study of English for the few who have leisure and zeal for the study of it. When a native places at our disposal that important period of life in which habits are to be formed, and information to be acquired which shall give the tone, for good or evil, to his future life, this confidence ought to be considered as creating a corresponding obligation on our part to give him the most substantial benefits in our power. To allow that period to be frittered away in a vain attempt to acquire a foreign language which he cannot sufficiently master to turn to any account, when he might, through his own tongue, acquire a stock of knowledge which would improve and elevate his mind, can scarcely be considered in any other light than a violation of trust. Now it is certain that nine-tenths of the youths who attend our English Schools in the north-west, will carry away nothing but a smattering of English, which they will forget in a twelvemonth, and which if they could retain, would stand them in no stead when they come on the theatre of life. It is certain that with suitable vernacular books, they would be able to acquire during that same period solid and important knowledge, the influence of which would continue with them through life. Our system of education should therefore be remodelled, and our attention bestowed primarily, but not exclusively, on indigenous tuition.

But Schools without constant and vigilant superintendence are never of much use. The masters and scholars must feel that they are subject to a system of supervision, and that neglect of duty will not pass unnoticed and unreproved, or zeal remain without encouragement. If the state of the Schools in the North West Provinces presents matter for painful remark, let us remember that the fault lies at our own door, and may be remedied. What would be the condition of the Native Courts in the interior, if they were left to themselves, as the Schools have been left;—if the control over their proceedings was equally distant, occasional and feeble? The same system of control which has rendered the Courts efficient, would render the Schools efficient also. In this country, far more than in England, faithful and periodical superintendence must be the soul of every system of education; and if we cannot thus breathe a living soul into it, the inanimate body had better be removed out of our sight.

It is physically impossible that any system of education in the North West Provinces can be adequately superintended by any functionary in Calcutta, however admirable his qualifications for the task may be. It would be deemed a mockery to place a School at Bangalore under the control of a Secretary of Public Instruction at Calcutta. Is it not equally preposterous to subject to his supervision a School as remote as that of Barelly or Saugor? If it be intended that the Schools in the North West shall exist merely to stop the mouths of those who cavil at our Government for the neglect of popular education, the present system will answer the purpose; if it be desired that they should become instrumental in elevating the national mind, a separate Educational Secretary for the Agra Presidency is indispensible. He should be encumbered with no other duties; his undistracted energies should be devoted to this single object. The expense of such an office need create no alarm. Almost every Governor General contrives to throw away on public objects which suit his own fancy, as much money as would keep half a dozen such Secretaries. The Secretary of Public Instruction for the North West should be stationed in the most central position, probably at Allahabad. The four months of winter should be devoted to circuit duties; every school should be personally visited, if possible, twice in the year, that the Secretary may be enabled to ascertain its progress; to censure inefficiency; to encourage zeal, and practically to teach the people, high and low, that Government attaches as much importance to its educational as to its legal institutions. During the rest of the year he might be usefully employed in constant correspondence with the Masters, in preparing School books, in procuring translations, and in devising means for imparting the stimulus of motives to the Schools under him. This he will be able to effect by keeping before the various public officers the names of the most successful scholars, and labouring to secure their admission to public offices. The Schools would thus become the nurseries of the Service; the Service, the stimulant of the Schools. Such a system steadily pursued, would give a new and elevated direction to the feelings and hopes of Native society, and produce a degree of intellectual and administrative improvement of which we can now form but a faint idea.

With these Preliminary observations, we now introduce the Memorandum to the notice of our Readers. It refers to a three-fold division of Schools. The first embraces the indigenous vernacular Schools, which with a little encouragement and the aid of a few books, might be rendered efficient to a considerable degree at little expense. The second class refers to the District Schools of which many already exist. The plan proposes to enlarge the scale of instruction; to impart to the pupils through the medium of their native tongue as large a portion as possible of European morals and general information so as to fit them to become virtuous, well informed and useful members of Government; and to give an English education to those who are likely from their character and circumstances to profit by it. It is proposed to adopt in reference to these Schools the plan which has been found so successful at Bombay, of allowing no youth to apply to English before he is grounded in his own language. The third part of the system embraces the establishment of a Normal School to complete the education of youths destined for the service of the state in the four departments of Civil and Criminal Law, Medicine, Civil Engineering and Tuition. But the great point on which the efficiency of this scheme and indeed of any scheme depends, is the establishment of a separate agency in the North West Provinces, for the inspection and control of the Seminaries and Schools. And if Government could obtain the services of an individual on its own establishment who should unite with the requisite mental qualifications, an enthusiasm in the cause of national education, it would be the dictate equally of wisdom and benevolence to entrust the system to his care, and to constitute him the Minister of Public Instruction. Lord Ellenborough has the Government of Agra in his own hands. He has pledged himself to devise means for the improvement of the country. He is more independent of the Court of Directors, and more absolute than any Governor General since Lord Wellesley. He has a contempt for money when any scheme of probable utility strikes his fancy. Will he give the North West Provinces an Education Minister?

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

MEMORANDUM ON THE EDUCATION OF THE AGRA PRESIDENCY.

It appears evident that the Education of the N. W. Provinces cannot be efficiently superintended even by the ablest Authorities stationed in Calcutta. The manners, feelings, and languages of the people are quite different from those of Bengal; and the distance of the schools renders their due inspection and examination physically impossible. The truth of this position is confirmed by the anomalous means proposed by the Calcutta Committee of Education, and sanctioned by Government, for remedying the proved inefficiency of the present system; namely, that Mr. Thomason, member of the Allahabad Board of Revenue, should superintend the Agra and Delhi colleges; Captain Marshall, G. G.'s Agent, that at Benares; and the Masters of the larger schools overlook those of the smaller ones.

These distinguished officers will no doubt ably discharge the extra-official duties imposed upon them; but would it not be better to appoint one active and zealous Superintendent of Education, with head-quarters at Agra or Allahabad? Unfettered by a Committee, a Secretaryship to Government, or any other duties, nothing should be allowed to interfere with his educational labours. It should be his duty to make an annual circuit, and personally examine every Zillah school during the cold weather, furnishing a full report to Government immediately on his return. During the hot weather and rains, he might be usefully occupied in superintending the preparation and printing of a complete series of school-books in English, with counterpart versions in all the vernacular dialects of Hindustan; in overlooking a Central Normal College to be established at his head-quarters; and in acting as a general centre of communication and information to the translators and other friends of Education throughout the country. In these labours he should be aided by Assistants selected from the most deserving Schoolmasters.

The Schools might be divided into Three Classes.

1st. THE INDIGENOUS VERNACULAR SCHOOLS, conducted by native teachers on their own account. These might be assisted with small grants of books, maps, &c. under the general supervision of the Masters of Zillah Schools, and money premiums given by the Superintendent at the annual examinations to such as distinguished themselves by the superior proficiency and number of their pupils. An immense field of primary education would thus be brought under the influence and direction of Government at a small expense; and abundant sources open for supplying the Zillah schools with a class of boys, already, in some measure, acquainted with their own language, and the elements of European knowledge.

The course of Education at these schools would at first be limited to the arts of Reading and Writing the vernacular; Arithmetic; Weights and Measures; Book-keeping; and the elements of History, Geography, and Natural History; but the character and proficiency of both teachers and pupils might be expected rapidly to improve under a system of encouragement and vigilant inspection.

2d. ZILLAH SCHOOLS, under English Masters, assisted by Native Teachers. Into these schools no boy unable to read and write in the vernacular, should be admitted. The main object should be, to diffuse among the pupils, through the medium of their native tongue, as large a portion as possible of European morals and general information, so as to fit them to become virtuous, well-informed, and useful servants of Government, and worthy leaders of the march of improvement among their fellow countrymen.

Where, from the talents and character of any boy, and the pecuniary resources of his family, there may appear a reasonable probability of his remaining at school long enough to acquire a thorough knowledge of English, the Master should give him instruction in that language, and carry his educational course as high as possible, through that medium; but the acquisition of a mere smattering of English, as a substitute for all other useful knowledge, should be discountenanced.

It should be the aim of the Master to attract to the school as many boys as possible of the higher ranks of native society, the sons of Zumeendars, Bankers, Officers of Government, &c. &c., who would be able to remain longer at school, and, from their rank and wealth, be more likely to make good use of their knowledge after leaving it.

The Education given in these schools might comprise—

- A thorough knowledge of the Hindustanee and English languages.
- Arithmetic—Geometry—Linear Drawing—Mechanics—Mensuration, and Surveying.
- Geography—Astronomy—History.
- Natural History—Physiology—The Chemistry of daily life—and a general knowledge of the conditions of Health in the human frame.
- The Elements of Botany and Vegetable Physiology, with reference to Gardening, Planting, Agriculture, and Medicine.
- Civil Engineering.
- Political Economy.
- Regulations, Law, and Principles of Jurisprudence.
- Principles and Practice of the Art of Tuition.

Each School should have a good garden, and the boys be encouraged to work in it by the example of the Master, who would thus be enabled to impart much useful practical information, and cherish a fondness for agricultural pursuits, so necessary in a country where the Revenue is raised almost entirely from the land.

When the Master is a married man, and his wife competent, a girls' school should be established, if possible, under her superintendence.

The Schoolmasters should be formed into a regular service, with Superannuation, Widow, and Orphan Funds. This would be a bond of union and discipline; and prevent Masters rashly throwing up their employments.

3rd. A CENTRAL NORMAL COLLEGE, at Agra or Allahabad, for completing the education of the most promising youths, destined for the service of Government in the four departments of

CIVIL AND CRIMINAL LAW,
TUITION,
MEDICINE,
CIVIL ENGINEERING.

A certain number of Scholarships in these four departments, the number in each department varying according to the exigencies of the service, might be offered annually by Government to be competed for by the whole of the Zillah Schools. The selection to be made by the College Council, on written answers to sets of questions framed with reference to the different departments. Idleness, or Misconduct, as shewn by the School Registers, to be a sufficient ground of Rejection; industry and good principle, as well as mere cleverness, being necessary for a Government Officer. The Masters of those Schools which turned out the greatest number of successful candidates, to be promoted and rewarded, as these examinations would form a good test of the relative state and proficiency of the different schools.

On the selection of the Students to fill the scholarships of the different departments, their education would thenceforward assume a more strictly professional shape. Examinations would be held annually; and qualified students receive Diplomas of proficiency and character, which would entitle them to vacant situations in their respective departments.

Scholarships to be limited to three years, and liable to be forfeited by idleness or misconduct.

Young men desirous of qualifying themselves for any department of Government employ, to be allowed to attend lectures at the College, and be eligible for diplomas.

The College Council to consist of the Superintendent as Visitor, the Principal, and all the Head Teachers. These might be selected from the best Schoolmasters: also a zealous and intelligent Medical Officer, with an experienced Normal Teacher, and a Civil Engineer, from Britain.

Besides lecture rooms and sleeping accommodation for two hundred scholarship students, the College should have Lithograph and Printing Presses, for the preparation of a uniform series of school books, English and Vernacular—a large Garden and Orchard—and a Model Junior School. There should also be apartments for the Professors and Teachers, the whole forming one large Quadrangle; it being of much importance to keep the young men from the corrupting effects likely to follow from their living at large in a Native Town, at a distance from their families; and to bring them into close contact with the European teachers, not only during lecture hours, but in their hours of recreation.

As for the expense of such a system as I have sketched out above, this is an objection which would not be made, had we a due sense of the unspeakable importance of properly training up the rising generation, particularly that portion of it destined to fill the highest uncovenanted situations under Government. We spend without scruple crores of rupees in worse than useless wars, whilst we grudge a single lac for the moral, intellectual, and physical improvement of millions. Is this right? Is it following out the designs of the Great Ruler of the Universe? Can it be supposed that the Empire of Timoor has been given to Britain for no higher and better purpose than the enrichment of a few Europeans? Let us then act up to our magnificent Destiny! Let us devote our power and means to the real improvement of the splendid Empire entrusted to us! It is a noble, a generous object; worthy of us as men, as Britons, as Christians. With God's blessing and help, Britain shall yet leave an impress of GOOD on the mind and character of India—shall yet be blessed as a beneficent Benefactor—shall yet reap the high reward of following out her noble destiny, and discharging her duty to this magnificent dependency, then, in a far higher sense, "the brightest jewel in her crown."

"NIL DESPERANDUM."

THE OVERLAND ROUTE.—A Passenger who arrived by the Hindoostan, has favoured us with a few observations on the peculiarities of this route, and inconveniences and advantages which attend it. Though late in the day, we give them insertion with much pleasure, chiefly under the impression that they may be interesting to the passengers who leave Calcutta to-morrow morning before gun-fire.

The Great Liverpool left Falmouth on the 3d of February, carrying 70 passengers for Bombay, Madras and Calcutta. She reached Alexandria on the 20th, having been detained two days at Malta waiting for the Marseilles Mail, which had been despatched from London on the 6th. This detention has lately taken place every month. It would be well to make it a fixed arrangement to despatch the Steamer from Southampton on the 3d, instead of the first of each month. Passengers are subject to considerable annoyance in having their baggage searched and tin cases opened at the Custom House at Alexandria. This occurred especially to those who were most anxious to get their baggage passed first. The officers of the Custom House at last got tired of looking into the trunks of 70 passengers, many of whom had double the quantity of baggage allowed by the rules of the Company, and which turned out to be the cause of detention to the Hindoostan at Suez. The relays of horses on the canal have been advantageously changed for two tugs on the Archimedes screw principle, which conveyed us to Atfe in nine hours. The journey from thence to Cairo in the Lotus and Cairo occupied about 20 hours. The food supplied on board these steamers, as well as on the Canal, was of the most abominable kind. No doubt this defect will be remedied by the Company's Agent, Mr. Davidson, a man not more remarkable for his activity than for his imperturbable good temper. No man ever endured with better grace the endless attacks made upon him for not having accomplished things utterly impossible. So long as Messrs. Waghorn and Hill continue to have the transit of the passengers from Alexandria to Suez in their hands, the arrangements never can be satisfactory. The demand has grown beyond their resources and abilities, and it is to be hoped, that the Bombay people will not commit so egregious a piece of folly as to grant Messrs. Hill and Co. a renewal of the lease of the Houses in the Desert which expires in June. In the hands of the P. and O. Company, who have both the will and the means to improve the transit, future passengers may hope for a better system. In the mean time however let travellers remember however many the petty inconveniences are at present, four days suffice to carry them from Alexandria to Suez. The journey from Cairo to Suez in a van occupies from 20 to 26 hours. The road has been much cleared of stones, since the writer of this crossed it in 1840. In consequence of the large quantity of passengers' baggage and the freight for the Hindoostan to be transported across the desert, so great a delay occurred that the Bombay Steamer left Suez before the baggage of some of her passengers arrived. The Hindoostan was detained 13 hours after the departure of the Bombay Steamer and brought away with the baggage of her own passengers, all that the Bombay vessel had left behind. It has been judiciously suggested that if a Telegraphic communication were made to Cairo of the number of passengers arrived at Alexandria sufficient time would be afforded to make the necessary arrangements for a proper supply of vans and camels. The non-arrival of the India Steamer at Suez was a sad inconvenience to some for whom Mr. Waghorn had most inconsiderately taken their passage in her. The Hindoostan has proved herself to be a very fast boat. She had made the passage from Calcutta to Suez in 21 days under steam, but her accommodations and ventilation are utterly unsuited to a tropical climate. Very great pains have certainly been taken with her by her Architect, but it is impossible to give to a man at Liverpool any idea of the ventilation required when the Thermometer ranges between 80° and 100°. The Cabins are not more than 6 feet square, and with singular inconsistency the side venetians are covered with a plate of zinc perforated with holes no bigger than the head of a pin, which of course exclude the little air which the venetians would otherwise admit. Some sacrifice in the number of berths must be made, and until this is done, the Hindoostan will not be popular with those who have once experienced the discomfort of her cabins. In her return from Suez she made the passage to Aden in 6 days and three hours and passed on the third day from Suez the Atalanta which had 18 hours start of her! The expence of a single Gentleman from Calcutta to Southampton, including every charge in the desert and on the Nile, is 150£. The writer of this with his wife has spent 311£ on the route and calculates that he has saved at least 100£ in outfit and cabin furniture by adopting this route instead of that round the Cape of Good Hope.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, APRIL 6.

— The Star informs us that the Coolies shipped to the Mauritius are procured through Duffadars, that is crimps, who receive so much a head for every one who can pass muster with the Agent and obtain a certificate. The following fraud has just been perpetrated. An abled bodied man received a certificate, and a poor emaciated creature who had never been before the Agent, was shipped in his stead, the sound coolie being kept for a second certificate and premium. The fraud was fortunately discovered and two out of three of the rogues concerned in the fraud were fined 200 Rupees. Would our contemporary obtain and publish the number of coolies as yet shipped, the names of the shipping Agents as well as of the vessels?

The Englishman adds to this information that the decrepit old man was decoyed by the duffadars under the pretence of obtaining employment, detained under their roof for a fortnight, and forcibly shipped off. He also states that this illegal imprisonment of the Coolies is a matter of common occurrence.

— The 19th Regiment of Native Infantry has been ordered to Scinde; and the officers of that corps who were on Staff employ have been ordered to accompany it. This is a much wiser plan than that of simply allowing the Staff employées to volunteer their services when their regiments are sent into the field. Sukker is to become the Head Quarters of the troops in Upper Scinde. There will now be available for that country one Regiment of Light Cavalry, three of Native Infantry, and two companies of Artillery with a camel battery.

— The last Bombay papers state, that a meeting had been held to decide upon the kind of Monument which was to be erected to the memory of those who fell in Affghanistan. It was numerously attended. The Bishop of Calcutta, the Metropolitan of India, delivered a very eloquent address on the occasion. It was resolved that the monument should be a Church, consecrated according to the rites of the Church of England. The Bishop is reported to have said, "Those whom we are about to commemorate, had many of them remained without Christian burial. We give it to them here, and their memories will remain guarded by a sacred edifice, surrounded by all the solemnities of Christian worship until the resurrection of the dead. If you wish to make any thing eternal, you must connect it with the Christian Religion." This Church of the Dead will become useful to the living, not only as a memento of mortality, but as the scene of divine instruction. It is to be erected at Colaba. It is in this Church that the mortal remains of Sir William Macnaghten should have been deposited. There would have been a peculiar propriety in such an arrangement. Of all the victims of Affghan perfidy, he was the most illustrious; and he was Governor Elect of Bombay.

FRIDAY, APRIL 7.

— The Englishman thinks we are mistaken in supposing that Captain Warden had no right to the Ningpo Bell, because when a place is given up to plunder, the property acquired belongs to individuals. But the question is, whether Ningpo was thus given up to plunder. This circumstance has not, as far as we are aware, been mentioned in any despatch; and we are much inclined to doubt the fact.

— Some noise was made a day or two ago about a robbery committed in Messrs. Jamieson and Co's. godowns; and a hue and cry was raised against the Police. The indefatigable Deputy Superintendent determined to search the matter to the bottom. He proceeded to the spot, examined the scene of burglary, and discovered that the hole had been made by the burglarious rats, who had been attracted by some bags of rice in the godown.

— Mr. Peard, the Solicitor, has received instructions from Mr. Dickens, to protect the copy right of his works against the pirates of the Indian press, and he has served a notice on the Editors warning them of the risk they will run if they venture to reprint Martin Chuzzlewit, or any other of Boz's productions. This is most ungrateful. Boz, with all his popularity at home, owes most of his popularity in India to the support of the press. It is the Editors who have kept up the public interest in his productions by the copious extracts they have published from them. For one purchaser of his works whom they may have kept from the bookseller they have sent ten to him, to purchase works for which the extracts have created a desire. It is unwise. The journals of India will not lose a single subscriber by not publishing extracts from Boz or any other popular work, but the authors will lose many a member of the reading public of India, if the papers should adopt the plan of passive resistance and refuse to notice the works.

— The Harkaru states, that Government has called on Mr. O'Hanlon for an explanation of his correspondence with Mr. Gordon.

— From the papers we learn on the authority of a letter from Rangoon that the Comet has appeared in Burmah and alarmed the inhabitants, who consider it ominous of war. An Embassador from Pekin had lately arrived at the capital and a large house was being built for him.

— The Nemesis and Pluto, war steamers, left Calcutta yesterday morning for Bombay.

—It is generally understood, that Mr. Dickens, formerly a member of the Bar of Calcutta, but latterly a member of the firm of Fergusson, Brothers and Co. which is in the hands of Trustees, is coming out immediately to return to the bar. His extensive connexions in Calcutta, both in the European and Native community, combined with his legal experience, and untiring industry, hold out to him the prospect of a full bag of briefs.

SATURDAY, APRIL 8.

— The Star published some disparaging observations last week on Lord Ellenborough's want of pecuniary liberality. We thought our contemporary deficient in information and rather hasty in his judgement, and this opinion is confirmed by the last Agra Ukhbar, which states that his Lordship had just returned from Futtehpore Sikree, where he presented 100 Rs. to the Minister of the mosque, and another hundred to the servants and old women of the place.

— The Buffs have marched into the Fort at Allahabad, a place as ill adapted for European soldiers as any in India. It is said to be the hottest place in the country, which is saying a great deal. The poor soldiers will have a miserable hot weather of it; and for any comfort they may enjoy might almost as well be in the furnace of Jelalabad.

— The business of Resumptions draws rapidly to a close. Of the two Special Commissioners in Calcutta, the office of one is to be folded up; and Mr. D'Oyly, the Commissioner, goes home. The Court is to be transferred, they say, to the Sudder Adawlut, to save house-rent.

— The last accounts from Bombay state that Ahmednugger would probably be selected as the place of residence for the fallen Ameers of Scinde. Others speak of Asserghur. Ahmednugger is open to the objection of being too near to Scinde; and is on that account as improper a place for their residence, as Loodianah was for that of Dost Mahomed.

— The Englishman states, that a thatcher has been caught in the act of setting fire to houses in Calcutta. There can be no doubt that the numerous conflagrations in the city have been the result of design not of accident. We are told that the Chief Magistrate is bestirring himself about carrying into effect the Law of 1837, which prohibited the building of houses with combustible materials. The law has been dormant for six years, while fires have been active enough. It is quite time to put it in force, for nearly a fourth of the town appears to have already fallen a prey to the flames since the season for fires begun.

MONDAY, APRIL 10.

— The papers announce the death of two gentlemen connected with the mercantile community in Calcutta; Mr. James Colquhoun and Mr. Thomas Hyde Gardener.

— The Englishman states, on the authority of a letter from Bombay, that the report of the 8th Native Infantry, the 3d Cavalry, and Leslie's Horse Artillery having been obliged to retreat to Sukkur is not confirmed; but an engagement is believed to have occurred on the 26th.

— The commercial treaty concluded between Russia and England a few days before the meeting of Parliament, is published in the last Official Gazette.

— A case of homicide has just occurred in Calcutta, which is traced to a love affair. Two youths of the name of Peterson and Eastman, had a dispute about a Miss Grey, which ended in the latter way-laying the former. He was severely wounded; but was slowly getting round, when he was one evening walking before his door, and was barbarously assaulted by a band of ruffians. In a few days the young man died. The undertaker perceiving marks of violence on the body, gave intimation of it to the Coroner. The body was brought into town from the suburbs, where Peterson died, and a jury empannelled; but a doubt arose whether the Coroner could legally interfere, when the casualty occurred beyond his jurisdiction. A reference was made to the Chief Justice, the result of which has not yet been published.

— We are happy to learn that the Hindoostan has already a hundred and ten berths engaged.

— The Delhi Gazette states on the authority of the newswriter at Lahore, that Dost Mahomed crossed the Indus on the 7th or 8th of March. The influence of Akbar Khan at Cabul is described as being on the wane. The arrival of the Dost will entirely alter the state of things at the capital.

— Great complaints have been made to the Chief Magistrate of the nuisance created by women of the town parading the streets, immodestly apparelled and exhibiting every kind of indecency. The papers state that he has issued the most positive directions against this objectionable practice. But unless a penalty is imposed on disobedience, the order must be ineffectual.

— The last accounts state, that the quantity of prize money as yet discovered at Hydrabad does not exceed 110 lakhs of Rupees, a little above a million sterling; viz. 60 lakhs in money and about 50 lakhs in jewels. The treasures hoarded up by the Ameers used to be stated at twenty millions!

TUESDAY, APRIL 11.

— The Governor General, finding the Palace at Agra too hot for him, has removed to the Government House.

— A meeting of the friends of Major Outram has been held at Bombay, when it was resolved that a sword, of the value of 300 Guineas, should be presented to him as a token of public esteem. He has taken his passage in the steamer which left Bombay on the 1st of April. He has not obtained the smallest recognition of his services by the Governor General, though the defence of the Residency was of itself worth a Proclamation.

— There has been a rumour for some two or three days past of an engagement between the Belochees and our troops. The Englishman gave the 26th as the date. The northern dawks had been stopped, and this, as in the case of Cabul, was considered a token of some great commotion. The Bombay Times received this morning, says that intelligence had just been received of an engagement on the 24th. The force at Sukkur was moving down to join Sir Charles Napier. The Belochees, are said to have marched against it, and Sir Charles to its assistance, which brought on a general engagement in which we were victorious.

— The Star states, that the Enterprize Steamer left Calcutta on the 9th, with Major Broadfoot on board, for Moulmein.

— The Deputy Governor has appointed Baboo Oomakaunta Sen to act as Commissioner in the Soonderbuns a post which has never yet been held by any one but a Covenanted Servant.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12.

— There is no Extra from Bombay with particulars of the battle fought on the 24th between Sir Charles Napier and the Belochees; but the Englishman has a letter from that Presidency which states that the battle was fought at Meerpore; that the enemy was completely defeated; and that a report was very prevalent that Sir Charles Napier had fallen in the engagement.

— The April Steamer left Bombay on the 2d at day light. Major Outram has gone to England in her. The Calcutta post of the 23d March was in time for the Steamer.

— An extraordinary meeting of Council has been held at Madras, the cause of which has not transpired. It is rumoured that it has reference to the decision lately passed in the Supreme Court, by which the inviolability which the inmates of the Chepauk palace have hitherto enjoyed in actions for debt, has been invaded. Another rumour is that the meeting had reference to the proposed despatch of a European Regiment to China.

— The account of the murder we noticed on Monday has been corrected in the papers of this day. It appears that the deceased was the brother of John Peterson, who was paying his addresses to Miss Grey; that Eastman his rival, attacked the two Petersons and a friend in the street, but without doing damage. They retired to the house of Grey. In an hour or two a fire broke out in the neighbourhood; they went out to assist in quenching it, when Eastman and his three Portuguese bludgeon, men, who had been lying in ambush came up, and one of them, Dacruz, dealt James Peterson his death blow. He lingered for a few days and then expired. As he died out of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, the Judges have decided that the case is not within the cognizance of the Coroner. It has been transferred to the Magistrate of the 24-Pergunnahs.

— The Hindoostan is advertised to start positively at 2 A. M. on the morning of Friday next.

This day is the anniversary of two actions as brilliant as any that our Military annals exhibit;—the Capture of Badajos in 1812 and the action at Jellalabad in 1842. The first, one of the most desperate assaults on record, commenced at 10 P. M. on the 6th of April, but the place was not in possession of the British Army until the morning of the 7th. The loss of the British during that night was 59 Officers and 744 men killed, 258 Officers and 2,600 men wounded. A scene of more fearful carnage or more determined courage than that exhibited at the breach of this Fortress, was probably never witnessed.

The other event which "gilds the memory" of this day is so recent as to be fresh in the minds of all. Then was seen a gallant handful of Heroes, whose courage and skill had foiled every effort of a numerous enemy flushed with success, and confident in the advantages they possessed, then were they seen, we say, the Briton and the Hindoostanee moving out from those walls, which they had so long and gallantly defended, side by side to encounter that foe, who had so cruelly and treacherously destroyed their comrades just three months before. And well was this barbarous perfidy avenged, vying with each other in the race of glory, the Sepahee and his fairer comrades rushed forward on the foe and notwithstanding the tremendous odds against them bore down all opposition. But alas the triumph was not without its drawback; one who had often before shed his blood on the plains of India now received his death-wound.

When the health of the Illustrious Garrison is drank to-night, as we know it will be all over India, let not the memory of the "fallen brave" be forgotten.—Cal. Star, April 7.

THE COMET.

The comet now visible is, in all likelihood, an entirely new visitor to our system; it is of very small dimensions compared to several others which have been less conspicuously observed in the heavens. The general reader must suppose it to have advanced towards us from some indefinitely remote journey into the realms of space, tracing a path similar to that exhibited in the diagram, but of infinitely greater elongation. It approached and passed around the sun—and having returned from its perihelion, encountered the moon, and thus became, so far as we can discover, a satellite revolving round the moon and earth. The statement in our last, that it had not reached its perihelion, but was deflected by the moon on its advance towards the sun, is in so far erroneous.—Bombay Times, March 21.

CEREMONY OF LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF THE "GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE."

The truly interesting and important ceremony of laying the foundation stone of the "Grant Medical College" was performed on the evening of

Thursday last, in the presence of a numerous assemblage of the principal gentry, European and native, and ladies of the island, at half past five, by the Right Rev. the Metropolitan, assisted by the Right Rev. the Diocesan, and Captain Goodfellow, civil architect. There were present on the occasion the Hon. Sir George Arthur, Governor; H. E. Sir Thos. McMahon, the Hon. Mr. Anderson; the Hon. Mr. Reid; the Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys; the Rev. Messrs. Fletcher and Pratt; Major-General Valiant; Mr. Willoughby; Colonel Moore, Captain Jamieson, &c. &c. &c. The Metropolitan was seated on the eastward of the site of the stone on the right; on the left was the Diocesan; and in the centre the Hon. the Governor; behind them were H. E. the Commander-in-Chief, and the Hon. Mr. Anderson; on the north side were the Hon. Mr. Reid, Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, and the Ven. the Archdeacon The Diocesan commenced the ceremony by repeating the 127th Psalm. The Metropolitan then offered up a solemn and appropriate prayer. The Diocesan next read the inscription on the silver plate, of which the following is a copy:—

In the reign of Her Most Gracious Majesty
and under the Government of THE HON'BLE SIR GEORGE ARTHUR, K. C. H., Governor of Bombay,
THE FOUNDATION STONE OF
"THE GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE," to be erected on this spot at the joint expense of THE HONORABLE EAST INDIA COMPANY AND OF the Friends of the late
RIGHT HON'BLE SIR ROBERT GRANT,
G. C. H.,
Governor of this Presidency,
Who died at Dapooree, 9th July, 1838,
IN MEMORY OF THE EMINENT CHRISTIAN VIRTUES AND THE JUST AND ENLIGHTENED ADMINISTRATION OF THAT DISTINGUISHED PERSON, WAS LAID, WITH SOLEMN PRAYER TO ALMIGHTY GOD,
BY
DANIEL, BISHOP OF CALCUTTA AND METROPOLITAN OF INDIA,
ON THURSDAY, MARCH 30th, 1843,
IN THE PRESENCE OF THE GOVERNOR AND OTHER CHIEF PERSONAGES
PRESIDENCY OF BOMBAY.

The Metropolitan then descended and placed the plate in its depository, after which the stone was lowered down and settled in its proper place; and in a prayer in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, dedicated, for the good of mankind, the college commonly called, and to be known by, the name of the "Grant Medical College." He next read a feeling, eloquent, and generous address, in which he eulogised, in the strongest and most affectionate terms, the memory of his late lamented friend, Sir Robert Grant, to whose virtues he directed, in the warmest terms, his particular attention, dilating on them in beautiful and feeling language. At the conclusion of his speech, and on resuming his chair, his Lordship was universally applauded. Mr. Willoughby rose and returned thanks, on the part of the committee of the Grant Testimonial, in a neat and excellent speech, to his Lordship for his kindness in honouring them with his presence, and performing the interesting ceremony that evening witnessed, and requsting, in the name of the committee, that his Lordship would kindly permit his address to be published. The Metropolitan, in acknowledging, in most courteous terms, the honour done him, stated that he thought the speech of not sufficient merit to be published, but stated, if they desired it, it was at their service. He then courteously saluted the company, and retired.—Communicated.—The Bombay Times, April 1, 1843.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

AGRA MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in sending you the following particulars concerning our local Institution the Agra Missionary Society, in the hope that a short account of it will prove interesting to many readers of your valuable journal.

The third Annual General Meeting took place in the Union Chapel,—a very neat and recently erected building situated in the civil lines of this station, on the evening of Thursday the 10th instant; Captain J. H. Macdonald, of the Artillery, presiding. The place was well filled and the business of the meeting was gone through in a manner that left an aspiration in every bosom for "peace on earth and good will to men" especially to the benighted heathen whose spiritual interests it had assembled to promote.

The Report, read on the occasion, of the transactions of the Society for the past year was more than usually interesting. It stated that the Society had embraced, in comparison with the preceding year, a more extensive field of usefulness, which had been productive not only of much general good but of much spiritual benefit to individuals; this was particularly manifest in the villages where the reception of the Gospel had been most encouraging and hopeful of future success.

The Report stated that the Society had eight native Christians attached to the Mission,—six of whom were employed as preachers, one was an inquirer and candidate for Missionary work and an aged Christian was a peon or tract distributor.

The labours of the agents in connexion with the Mission Chapel were of an encouraging nature. Week-day and Sunday preaching had been regularly attended to on these occasions, both in the Chapel and near a Platform erected for the convenience of travellers; the attendance had ranged from 40 to 60 persons,—two prayer meetings had been kept up during the month and the weekly lecture for the spiritual improvement of the Agents had also been delivered with the greatest regularity.

Of itinerant labours the Report was full of interesting particulars; the Missionaries had been sent two and two within a circuit of 60 miles, they had preached and distributed the Holy Scriptures in about 113 new villages 8 cities and at 14 Melas and it was given as the united opinion of the Missionaries that there is manifest and decided improvement on past years both in the manner and eagerness with which the villagers welcome them and listen to Gospel truths; they were looked upon at Melas as Teachers and were sought out to come and preach to an assembled and inquisitive audience,—they had in particular instances been affectionately treated, sheltered and their wants supplied by respectable Zemindars and in the Cities of Bhurutpore and Muttra especially where formerly they used to be hooted their labours were followed with peculiar marks of encouragement and success.

The Report dwelt at length—as the expressed opinion of the Missionaries,—on the necessity of a more liberal support to inquirers and converts who are deterred from leaving all they have been accustomed to hold dear and sacred and embracing Christianity,—from the fear of being left destitute;—and suggested that if a village were purchased or rented it would afford an acceptable Asylum to many an anxious inquirer who would openly become a Christian, but who cannot, under present circumstances, get over the difficulty of his future maintenance if once cut off from his home and occupations.

The Report further made respectful mention of the Revd. R. Williams who had been obliged to leave this scene of his usefulness to seek restoration to his shattered constitution by a sea voyage to his native land. The Committee, with their wonted diligence, availed themselves of Mr. Williams' valuable assistance to endeavour if health and time permitted to awaken an interest in Britain in behalf of the Society, and if it should please God to make him successful the Society will then be placed in a better position to supply the want of an efficient superintendence as also to establish what is exceedingly desirable an institution for the training up of pious East Indian and native converts for the work of the ministry with the view of supplying in some measure the present urgent want of an efficient native Ministry.

This interesting Institution has not yet succeeded in its endeavours to obtain the Services of an European Superintendent which are much required and which the Committee have made considerable exertions to procure; but from all that is seen and heard it is the general impression that this Society, composed by a union of Christians of all denominations, to promote the best interests of the heathen around us, has met with a considerable measure of the divine blessing. It has overcome its first difficulties, it is prospering in its efforts of disinterested benevolence and it is gradually but certainly gaining the favour, the support, the co-operation and the prayers of an increasing number far and near, who believe that there is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, male nor female, but that all are one in Jesus Christ. Referring you for further particulars to the Report which has been ordered to be printed and circulated,

I have the honour to remain,
Yours faithfully,
TESTA.

RELIGIOUS.

THE BISHOP OF LONDON, while adverting in his recently-published charge to the question—whether a clergyman when preaching should wear a surplice or a gown, recommends it as "most consonant with the intention of the church, that he should wear a surplice when preaching after the morning service, and a gown when the sermon is in the evening." His lordship's sentiments on this, as on some other points, would appear to have undergone an alteration from black to white; for in the year 1824, while Bishop of Chester, his language to the clergy of the diocese was—"Gentlemen, it is most consonant with the intention of the Church that you should, while preaching array yourselves in black." Indeed his Lordship seems to have aggravated the divisions in the Church by the means he suggested to heal them, for the congregations regard the adoption of the white surplice as the signal of having embraced the peculiar views of what is called the Catholic Church, while the black gown is the colour of the preacher of the Protestant Church of England. It is said that the Bishop of London is unwell, and is very unhappy at the ferment and dissension which has resulted from his charge.—London Mail.

CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.—A formal answer has been returned to the memorial of the Non-intrusion Convention lately held in Edinburgh, conveyed in a letter from Sir J. Graham to the Moderator of the General Assembly, which embodies the decision of Government. We give the following extract:—

A church established by law cannot quarrel with the courts of law and long retain its respect for the authority of Parliament.

The statute law is but the voice of the legislature, the final declaration of its will. The civil court is the expositor of its intentions, the instrument whereby its purpose is effected. If the statute of Anne were repealed to-morrow and another law substituted in its place, disputed questions would arise, and the new statute in its turn like every other statute, those included on which the establishment of the Church of Scotland rests, could only be enforced by the jurisdiction and decrees of those civil tribunals which are objects of jealousy to the Assembly, and whose judgments are resented as encroachments on spiritual power.

And further, with regard to alterations of the existing law to be made by Parliament, Her Majesty's Government must observe, that the demand of the Assembly is not a declaration of the law, which might remove doubts or smooth difficulties in the spirit of concord and good-will, but a subversion of the existing law, and a total abolition of patronage.

Her Majesty's servants have evinced no disinclination to prevent the collision of doubtful authority even by express enactment, and to secure to the church in the matter of collation all the judicial power which it can reasonably claim.

The wish of the Government to heal these unhappy divisions, and to close this unseemly spectacle of a church in connexion with the state openly violating the law, remains unabated and sincere.

We are convinced that the church established by law in Scotland has produced the best practical effects on the morals and religious character of the people. It has well fulfilled, and it continues to fulfil, the important purposes for which it was founded; and any shock which might endanger this great national establishment would be regarded by Her Majesty's servants as a fearful calamity.

But in resisting the abolition of patronage, Her Majesty's servants believe that they are maintaining a right which is conducive to the welfare and stability of the church itself.

It cannot be denied that the right of presentation in the Crown is a bond of amity, which intimately connects the church of Scotland with the head of the state; and patronage in the hands of laymen has also its effect in securing to the Presbyterian establishment the co-operation and support of powerful interests, where hostility might otherwise be apprehended, and could not fail to be injurious to the church.

You complain of patronage as the chief grievance, so long as the right shall continue to be enjoyed by its present possessors, but you omit to state in what hands you desire to vest it.

In this respect the wishes and intentions of the church are not clearly avowed.

The proposal of a transfer of the right of patrons to the people is indeed specious and attractive; but, whatever might be proposed or intended, there is too much reason to apprehend that in no long time the whole power would fall into the hands of the church itself—a consummation which you will probably think with me would be no less injurious to religion than dangerous to the state.

The disposal of patronage, however, is a matter of secondary importance compared with the spiritual welfare of the people, and the free exercise of ecclesiastical authority in the selection of persons duly qualified for the performance of the duties of the sacred ministry.

Doubtless in times past the right of patronage has been abused, but stringent and wholesome correctives have been progressively applied.

The choice of a patron is now limited to licentiates who derive their right of preaching from the will of the church, who are subjected to long training under ecclesiastical discipline, and who undergo the most strict examination before the licence to preach is granted.

The power of rejecting candidates for this licence is absolute in the church.

But, even after this ordeal, the presentation of the patron only opens the way to a second examination.

The licentiate, when presented, is taken on trials by the Presbytery; his qualifications are tested; if he be not fit and suitable to congregations, objections are stated; reasons are heard, of which the Presbytery alone may judge; and, although presentation is a civil right, examination belongs exclusively to the Church Court.

It is open to the Presbytery, acting as judges, with the sense of their moral responsibility attaching on them, either to give effect to objections on cause shown, or to overrule them, making in both cases a judicial deliverance.

Admission also is an ecclesiastical act.

The Church Court alone can create the pastoral relation between the presentee and his parish; or dissolve it, when it has been created.

The licence, then, which precedes presentation, is in the power of the church; the examination and admission which follow it, and without which presentation is ineffectual, are fully conceded to the church; and, unless it be contended that patronage itself must be either directly or indirectly abolished, the matter in dispute is reduced to narrow limits.

The refusal to take the presentee on trials, under the operation of the Veto Act, constituted in the Auchterarder case the defeat and violation of the patron's legal rights.

The statute is imperative, the presentee is entitled to be taken on trials. The Veto Act interposes an obstacle; this obstacle can be of no avail, except in defiance of law; and it is no answer to say that the Presbytery is an ecclesiastical body, for this is neither more nor less than a claim for Churchmen for exemption from the duty of obedience to the statute law.

If the Veto Act, which is illegal, were rescinded by the Assembly, the respective rights of the patron to present, of the congregation to object, and of the Church Courts to examine, to hear, to judge, and to admit or to reject, would be clear and well defined.

In the hope of peace Lord Aberdeen, one of Her Majesty's present advisers, sought by legislation to remove doubts, which by some were supposed to exist, respecting the admission of ministers to benefices in Scotland, by declaring the law, and by defining with precision the respective rights and powers of the different parties interested in the settlement of a minister.

In the same spirit I expressed on the part of the Government, in the course of last session, willingness to attempt legislation on these same recorded principles, hoping that both the church and people of Scotland might be found desirous to terminate this unhappy controversy on terms which are strictly conformable to Presbyterian discipline and to established rights.

The acts of the General Assembly, the claim, declaration, and protest, the address against patronage, the demand of the repeal of the statute of Anne, have unhappily diminished, so far, at least, as the church is concerned, these reasonable hopes; and Her Majesty's Ministers, now understanding that nothing less than the total abrogation of the rights of the Crown and of other patrons will satisfy the church, are bound with firmness to declare that they cannot advise Her Majesty to consent to the grant of any such demand.

I have the honour to be, Rev. Sir,

Your faithful servant,

J. R. G. Graham.

Upon receipt of this letter a meeting of the Special Commission of the Assembly was held, when they agreed to a minute in reply to the letter from the Home Secretary on the subjects which at present agitate the church. The minute argues at great length the right claimed by the church for exclusive jurisdiction in ecclesiastical matters, and contends that the power assumed by the civil court is a power not conferred by the state. It then alludes to the other questions referred to in the letter from Government, and, assuming that ministers are not inclined to grant any redress of the grievances complained of, it states that "the legislature will have an alternative submitted to them, namely, whether to force on a disruption of the established Church of Scotland, with all its attendant evils, or to restore the church to the state in which she was between 1834 and 1838, when the Veto Act had not been declared illegal—the power to admit quoad sacra ministers had not been challenged—and the jurisdiction of the civil courts, which has since been so largely exercised, had not been claimed."

The Special Commission are of opinion that the claim of right should be laid before Parliament, and that the Commission of Assembly should petition both houses, calling the attention of the legislature to the grievances and applications for redress set forth in the church's claim.

Sir James Graham's note to Dr. Gordon, acknowledging receipt of the minute of special commission, in reply to Sir James's letter, is to this effect:—"Sir J. Graham loses not a moment in acknowledging receipt of Dr. Gordon's reply to his letter; and, as the church have appealed the matter to Parliament, he feels it unnecessary to correspond further with the commission on the subject."

The Fife Herald says, "We are enabled to state that Mr. Fox Maule has a bill in reference to the Kirk question, ready to bring in on the opening of the session. Its precise character has not yet transpired"

The extraordinary meeting of the commission, summoned for the 31st of Jan, is one of the very highest interest and paramount importance. It will, in all likelihood, be the last opportunity the church will have of remonstrating with the state before their final and fatal decision be taken. We feel assured, therefore, that however inconvenient—as it cannot but be most inconvenient—for members to attend, each man will be at his post, to evince his sense of the importance of the crisis. We are also confident that the same hospitality and assistance will be afforded by the friends of the church as at the meeting of convocation. As on that occasion, contributions towards defraying the travelling expenses, addressed to the care of Mr. Johnson, will be received at the publishing-office of this paper.—Edinburgh Witness.

The Judges have delivered their opinion in cases, which involve the legality of the acts under which the ministers of Parliamentary churches, of chapels of ease, or of quoad sacra, extension, and secession churches were admitted by the General Assembly to the full status and privileges of parochial ministers. Of the Judges whose opinions have already been given, the Lord Justice Clerk, Lord Meadowbank, Lord Medwyn, Lord Cunningham, Lord Murray, and Lord Wood, consider that the acts in question are illegal, and that the suspension and interdict in the present case ought to be sustained; on the other hand Lord Moncrieff, Lord Cockburn, and Lord Ivory, support the legality of the acts in question. The Lord President and Lord Mackenzie delivered their opinions on 19th Jan, and both were conclusively against the legality of the erection of quoad sacra parishes, and the admission of their ministers into the General Assembly. Lord Jeffrey and Lord Fullarton delivered their opinions on the 20th, and both were in favour of the General Assembly. The Judges have now all delivered their opinions—eight being against the legality of the quoad sacra parishes, and five in favour of the church. It is understood that the House of Lords will be appealed to.

The Times says: "A very important circumstance has occurred in the features of this question since Sir J. Graham's letter to the Moderator was published. In giving his opinion in another Church case, Lord Jeffrey (whose elaborate opinion in defence of the veto has always been held up by the leaders of the dominant party in the Assembly as the best statement of their case, and of the principles on which they hold the judgments of the House of Lords to be an invasion of their independence) declared in most distinct terms that he was now satisfied that the case had been rightly decided by the Court of Session and by the House of Lords—that the Church had gone against the provisions of the statute law of the land, and that the Courts had jurisdiction to restrain that excess of power."—London Mail.

Bishop Phillpotts Again.—Our Right Reverend and [illegible] diocesan has withdrawn his licence to preach from Dr. Beale, Head Master of the Tavistock Grammar School. The Learned Doctor, who is a young man of very distinguished ability, and the son of a highly respected Wesleyan minister, preached a sermon on "the Unity of the Brotherhood." At the earnest request of several persons at Tavistock, the sermon was printed. The liberal spirit of Christian charity which characterized it, proved offensive to our Right Reverend and respected Prelate, although the sermon was strongly fortified by references to the Fathers of the Anglican Church, and had the direct approbation of more than one Bishop of the Church. The meek and holy Prelate refused to admit the young and able Divine to Priest's orders—gave him a considerable period to recant; and shocked, perhaps, at his unbending determination to preserve his consistency, even at the expense of forfeiting the good Bishop's patronage, finally withdrew his license from him.—Western Times.

The Bishop of London.—The truth is, that the Bishop is driving too fast; and we rejoice to find that one of the most estimable of his clergy has had the courage and fidelity to address to his Diocesan a letter of earnest remonstrance upon the doctrines and pretensions advanced in his Lordship's Charge. The "respectful Address" appears at length in the Record, with the signature of C. J. Yorke and dated Shenfield. The "six notions" to which Mr. Yorke calls the attention of his Diocesan, as being, in his view, "adverse to Christianity and dangerous to the Church," are:—

"1. That the Bishop should himself be the guide of the minds of his clergy.

"2. That an Episcopalian ministry is the sole channel of spiritual blessings.

"3. That in Episcopalian baptism there is immediately and invariably an effected regeneration.

"4. That the Liturgy is the exponent of the Articles, not the Articles of the Liturgy.

"5. That the externals of Religion are in themselves invariably beneficial.

"6. That it is obligatory upon the Clergy to act out the Rubric in every particular."

These six notions are regarded by Mr. Yorke as the main-springs of the movement of the day. "Convinced," he says, "that the spirit of this movement is essentially evil, I am also convinced that it is the duty of all to do what they can against it, whatever be the sphere in which God has placed them. The time is come, in which men who draw from Christ and the Gospel their happiness and hopes, should speak without fear or favour." Mr. Yorke has spoken out nobly. In reference to the third notion, he strikes a blow at the root of the Anglican heresy:—

"If I may be allowed to say so, your Lordship's connecting regeneration with justification was correct. To be regenerated without being justified, or to be justified without being regenerated, would equally constitute a nullified blessing. Besides which, as in the rays of light all colours co-exist, so are the spiritual blessings which come from Christ essentially inseparable: indeed, all is ours, if Christ is ours. But bearing this in mind, can we in the face of God and man affirm, that every episcopally baptized child is both regenerated and justified? To affirm this, is to affirm what not only must be invisible to the world, but directly contrary to all that, by its natural eyes and ears, or by its natural judgment and conscience it can morally observe and comprehend. Are there not myriads of persons who, having been baptized, are still so far from being heavenly-minded, that they are evidently mere formalists; nay, more, drunkards, thieves, courtezans, sceptics, atheists, and scoffers? I have been assured, my Lord, that such papers as the Weekly Dispatch seized with immediate glee and triumph upon your Lordship's statement, as being one which the weakest observation might disprove."

We must refrain from further extracts. The remarks on the ridiculous attempt to resuscitate the obsolete directions of the Rubric, are well deserving of the attention of the clergy. In a note, we find the following pithy statement. "There are, in France, two opinions about English High Churchmanship; the first, that it is verging to Popery; the second, that it desires to beat down Popery in such a way as to succeed to its ecclesiastical dominion." Both opinions are pretty near the truth. The doctrines of High-Churchmanship verge on Popery; but Oxford aspires to be the rival of Rome.—Pat.

Persecution of the Baptist in Germany.—At Marburg, one of the principal towns in Hessia, there is a small Baptist church, whose members, at the present time, are suffering a severe persecution on account of their principles as Baptists. The subjoined extract from a letter, written by Dr. Raumer, a member of the church at Stuttgart, to Mr Lehmann, Pastor of the Baptist Church at Berlin, describes the following scene as having lately occurred at Marburg. The letter is dated July 6, 1842:—"Our sister church at Marburg, of which you have heard, has now been for a long time an object of persecution and hostile treatment on the part of the magistrates there. A beloved brother there, Jeremiah Grimmel, who neglected to bring his infant child into the state church to be sprinkled, was at first punished in the payment of a heavy fine, which was intended to compel him to obey the requisition. As he did not of his own accord pay the money exacted of him, he was fined still further, and his furniture, even to chairs and beds, was seized and taken from him. These measures having failed to shake the firmness of the brother and his like-minded wife, the magistrate then threatened to take the child from them by force, and to perform upon it themselves the rite of church baptism. As the first step to the execution of this threat, a guardian was appointed to the child and the parents. At length, on last Monday, the plan was carried fully into effect. The guardian, taking advantage of the absence of the father, came into the house with a band of police officers and soldiers, and demanded the child of the mother. Upon her refusal to surrender it, the infant was torn from her by force and immediately dragged away in order to have the act of church baptism, so called, performed upon it, before the father could return to prevent it." To prevent the recurrence of such scenes, the brethren propose to petition the Government for a relaxation of the laws in their behalf. Their prospects of success in this application are not, however, for the present, at least, the most encouraging.—Pat.

Martyrdom of two more Native Christians.—Again the blood of the martyrs of the Lord Jesus has been made to flow in the island of Madagascar. The district of Vonizongo is now stained with the blood of two devoted disciples belonging to the little flock which had long time taken shelter in the hospitable province of the chief Obadiah; though, of course, the murderous orders were issued, as formerly, from that "city of violence" which is rapidly filling up the measure of its iniquities,—Antananarivo. The narrative of the event received from the distressed Christians only yesterday, is briefly this:—Obadiah had heard that some king or kings of Ambongo would receive the Christians; but no messenger having arrived from that part, and he, not knowing whether one or all were favourably disposed, determined to send two trusty Christians to ascertain what prospect of escape existed, and to make themselves acquainted with the road. He selected for the purpose Ratsitahina and Rabearahaba, and sent them on their way, accompanied by the wife of the latter and a little slave girl, probably intending by this to lull suspicion in case of their being observed by the Queen's people passing over the boundaries of the Sakalava country, where a guard is stationed to apprehend all persons attempting to pass into the enemy's country. They crossed the frontier in safety, and arrived at the house of a friend, to whom they showed their copies of the Scriptures. He immediately assured them that a neighbouring king, called Ilavantsikindahy, was desirous to hear and know the word of God; and "Come," said he, "let us all go together and see him personally." They agreed to the proposal, and, having written to Obadiah and Ralaijo, and another Vonizongo Christian, to inform them of the arrangement, they proceeded on their journey, leaving at the house of their friend the woman and little girl to await their return. During their absence, the woman and her young companion became alarmed, and fled towards the territory of the Queen—their native land. They reached the boundary, but, in repassing, they were apprehended by the guardian or land-watchman; and being closely questioned by him, the woman, as it afterwards appeared, disclosed all she knew respecting the plans of Obadiah and Ralaijo, and the visit of two men to Ilavantsikindaby, and wrote immediately to the Queen and officers at Antananarivo on the subject. In the mean time, the two men returned from their visit, and finding that the woman had fled, they instantly set off in pursuit of her, fearing she would be caught and inform against them. They fell thus into the hands of the land-watchman, who was, no doubt, looking out for them. They were taken up to the village as prisoners, and subsequently sent to Antananarivo for judgment. There they were subjected to similar tortures and questioning to urge them to impeach others, as the former martyrs had to undergo; such as "Who sent you on this errand, and what was your design?" "We went," said they, "of our own free will, not being constrained by any one; and our design was to try and soften by instruction in the word of God, the hearts of those robbers beyond the border country who steal our cattle, and commit violence against our country (Vonizongo). That was why we took those books." Again they were asked, "Who are that great number of people who were to follow you; and did you not intend to take up arms against the Queen?" They replied, "As to our designs, we do not deny that we prayed, or followed the practices of the praying people; we did so, as the books found upon us testify; but as to taking up arms against Ranavalona, we never intended that. We demand the water to try if any thought of bearing arms against the Queen was ever entertained by us." They were condemned to death, and ordered to be executed in their own country, one upon the Sunday, and the other on the Monday, in the Market-place. These days fell, I believe, upon the 19th and 20th of June last. To a messenger of the Christians who took them food during the interval, they on one occasion whispered an affectionate farewell to all the Christians; saying, "Let them not fear that we shall disclose their names; we shall do them no harm; but say farewell. If we do not meet again here on earth, we shall meet in the future life." With unflinching fortitude they kept this noble promise to the last; and seem to have been even cheerful in death. Obadiah speaks of them as having only ascended into heaven before their companions. Their heads were cut off after execution, stuck on poles, and left to bleach in the scorching sun of Imerina, as an intended warning to the people, but really serving as an additional evidence of the unmitigated cruelty of the Queen, and the sustaining power of that grace which kept our departed friends faithful unto death.—(From a letter from Mr. Baker of the Mauritius.)—Pat.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Statue of the Duke of Wellington.—On Monday the committee under whose auspices the city equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington by the late Sir F. Chantrey (completed since his death by Mr. Weekes) is about to be erected, were summoned to inspect the full-sized model in the studio in Belgrave-place, the figure of his Grace, in clay, having been placed on horseback in order to judge of the general effect previous to being cast in bronze, as the horse has already been. Sir P. Laurie, Dr. Croly, Mr. Rainbow (the secretary), Mr. Barclay, jun., Mr. Chadwick, and several other members, attended and expressed themselves well pleased with the design; and, after their departure, we believe, the Lord Mayor (ex officio a good judge of a horse!) and some other members, who had been detained opening a Commercial-hall in the city, arrived, were similarly gratified with the appearance of the group. The Duke is seated in a very erect military position—his breast advanced, his left hand holding the bridle, and the right holding the "marshal's truncheon," resting easily on his thigh and the saddle. The likeness is forcible, and the head uncovered. The costume is very simple—the whole nether man, from the waist to the toe, being clothed in one unbroken pantaloon, whilst a short cloak covers the shoulders, and is skilfully draped over the whole back, and partially down each side. The head of the horse is full of fire, the ears pricked forward; he is standing on all four legs, and not in action. The entire height is rather more than 12 feet; and the executors of Sir Francis stated that it would be ready next June, as agreed upon; but Sir P. Laurie doubted if the site near the Mansion-house, dependent on the building of the Royal Exchange, would be cleared for its reception by that time. The committee paid their respects to Lady Chantrey; and, having partaken of refreshments with her, retired.—Literary Gazette.

City Antiquities.—Amongst the most important works now in progress in the City, connected with its improvement, is that of the extension of the sewerage through Lad-lane, connected with the main leading sewer in Prince's-street. The excavations, which are from eighteen to twenty feet deep, have during the last week exhibited some interesting facts relative to the early history of the City. Some few coins, principally of Antoninus, and a few interesting fragments of Roman and Samian pottery, with household utensils, have been found; but the chief objects of interest have been the discovery of some vestiges of the foundation walls of some old Roman buildings. The most extensive of these was found last week opposite Mr. Chaplin's, of the Swan-with-Two-Necks, where the excavators arrived at a wall composed of flints, about eighteen feet below the surface, which was between five and six feet in thickness, and through which they had some difficulty to penetrate. A contiguous line of wall was also found in the excavations for laying the foundation for the extensive warehouses of Messrs. Pickfords, which are adjacent, and others have been found in other excavations in the neighbourhood, which lead to the idea that on this spot there formerly stood a castle or other extensive erection. A passage was also found between this and another wall running in a parallel line betwixt this and Cateaton-street, about twelve feet apart. At the lower depth was a fine stratum of vegetable mould, apparently belonging to an ancient garden site, which supposition is strengthened by the appearance of gravel, probably used in the formation of garden walks, as it is only found in thin layers, and in detached portions. Above this was found the site of the foundation of the old houses destroyed by the fire of London, the rubbish of which, without the aid of concrete, formed the foundation of the more modern buildings. Opposite to the church walls in Cateaton-street, at the depth of about eighteen feet, there was found a large quantity of human bones, showing that there existed here a place of sepulture, which must have been coeval with the time of the Romans.—Pat.

A Literary Curiosity.—A Poetical friend of ours, says the Boston Transcript, has a paper-folder with the following line from Gray marked on it:—"The ploughman homeward plods his weary way." On looking at the quotation, it occurred to him that it might be expressed in various ways, without destroying the rhyme or altering the sense. In a short time he produced the following eleven different readings. We doubt whether another line can be found, the words of which will admit of so many transpositions, and still retain the original meaning—

The weary ploughman plods his homeward way.
The weary ploughman homeward plods his way.
The ploughman, weary, plods his homeward way.
The ploughman, weary, homeward plods his way.
Weary the ploughman plods his homeward way.
Weary the ploughman homeward plods his way.
Homeward the ploughman plods his weary way.
Homeward the weary ploughman plods his way.
Homeward the ploughman, weary, plods his way.
The homeward ploughman weary plods his way.
The homeward ploughman plods his weary way.—Pat.

"Old Mortality."—The only occupation of the old man was wandering about the country, repairing the tomb-stones of the Covenanters, travelling from one church-yard to another, mounted on his old white pony, till he was found dead one day by the road side. His family experienced a singular variety of fortune. One of his sons went to America, and settled at Baltimore, where he made a large fortune. He had a son, who married an American lady, and the latter, out-living her husband, became Marchioness of Wellesley! His daughter was married to Jerome Buonaparte, and after her separation from him wedded Monsieur Serruier, the French consul at Baltimore. What would Old Mortality have said, as he pored among the neglected grave-stones in Scotland, had he forseen that the widow of his grandson was to become an English Marchioness, sister-in-law of the Duke of Wellington, and his grand-daughter Queen of Westphalia and sister-in-law of Napoleon!—Inverness Courier.

Labour Market. London. Bakers.—Wages for foremen 22s. to 24s. per week: for 2nd hands, 14s. to 18s. per week of 7 days—16 to 20 hours a day.

Brush Makers.—Wages mostly by piece-work—a good hand in full employ can earn 3s. 6d. per day of 10 hours. About one-fourth of the trade unemployed.

Carpenters.—Wages from best employers, 4s. to 5s. per day of 10 hours. Last summer, 3,000 hands were out of work, and men offered themselves at 3s. 6d. and 3s. per day; doors were knocked together for 2s. 6d. which were worth 4s. 6d.

Cart-wheelwrights.—Wages mostly by piece-work—a good hand in full work can earn from 3s 6d. to 6s. 6d. per day of 11 hours. Demand for labour, fair. In this trade there are almost as many small masters as there are men.

Copper-plate Engravers.—Wages by piece-work—varying from 3s. 6d. to 7s. 6d. per day. One fifth of the trade unemployed.

Dyers and Scourers.—Wages 4s. to 5s. per day—Jobs, 5s. per day. Summer is their season, but during the last one not more than half of the trade employed, though for many years previous the demand has pressed upon the hands.

Engineers.—Wages 30s. to 50s. per week. Employment good.

Gentlemen's Shoemakers, General Trade.—Wages, by piece-work; a good hand can earn 3s. 6d. to 4s. per day. Employment very bad. An unusually large number out of work.

Ladies' Shoemakers, General Trade.—Wages by piece-work; a good hand can earn 1s. 3d. to 3s. per day; average earnings, when employed, 15s. per week. Employment bad; few masters speculating in stock this winter.

Painters and Glaziers.—Wages generally 4s. to 4s. 6d. per day of 10 hours—in a few shops, 5s. Work much scarcer this than last winter.

Saddlers and Harness-makers.—Wages, at inferior shops, 3s. to 3s. 6d. per day; at best shops, 4s. to 7s. per day.

Stone Masons.—Wages, 4s. 6d. to 5s. per day of 10 hours; ruffers, 5s. 6d.; stone carvers, 8s. Employment better than for many years previous.

Tailors.—Wages by piece-work; at the best shops, on coats, 4s. to 6s. per day; on trowsers and vests, 3s. to 3s. 6d. Employment this winter better than last, but very bad. From 9,000 to 10,000 men earning not more than 8s. to 10s. per week. Many others are at work at slopshops down to 10d. per day. Employment has been growing worse and worse in this trade for several years, and now about one-third are out of work.

Trunk Makers.—Wages at the best shops, 3s. 6d. to 4s. per day of 10½ hours; for slight work, 2s. 6d. to 3s. 6d. Employment dull.—Sentinel.

Mount Etna.—Private Correspondence.—Cantania, Dec. 6, 1842.—We pass whole nights in the open air, intent on admiring the sublime and imposing picture which Mount Etna presents almost without intermission, for the eruption continues with more or less violence. Numbers of foreigners flocking hither, some with the view of making scientific observations, and others merely seeking to gratify their curiosity by a sight of the grand phenomenon; so that Catania, in addition to all its other attractions, now combines that of numerous and select society. All the hotels, and many private houses, are occupied by foreigners. We are favoured with delightful weather—perfect spring temperature. The fields, even at this season of the year, are clothed with verdure, and the surrounding country, which is rich and highly cultivated, presents the most charming pictures, especially when lighted up by the moon, or by the flames of Etna. The lava continues to flow in a broad stream in the direction of the Valle del Bove; but if, as there seems reason to apprehend, it should take the direction of Milo, it will make a descent on the place called La Zatfarana, and in that case will destroy Giarve and Mascari on the sea shore. Up to the present time there is no reason to fear for the safety of Catania.

DECEMBER 15.—On the 7th I ascended Mount Etna, at least as far as it was possible to ascend without danger. I advanced near enough to hear the roaring of the crater and the noise of the subterranean convulsions, which were like peals of thunder. I found the lava advancing slowly in a wide torrent, which dispersed itself in the hollows, ravines, and clifts, formed by previous eruptions, of which history affords no record. The different lateral openings of the crater are agitated with fearful violence, and they by turns vomit ashes, sand, and scoria, mixed with small quantities of liquid lava. This circumstance, combined with the peculiar nature of the locality, (the declivity not being steep,) checks the rapid course of the burning torrent, which from the spot whence I observed it, appeared to be about 600 French feet in breadth, and from 20 to 22 feet in length. The mass seemed to become cool, and to coagulate. Its distance from the nearest cultivated or inhabited point might then be about 6 Italian miles, and it would require copious eruptions to enable the lava to reach that point. In that direction, therefore, no danger need be feared. On the evening of the 8th a heavy rain set in, and lasted until the 11th. Every morning a beautiful effect was produced by a zone of snow encircling the upper part of the cone, and thus forming a boundary between the cultivated region, abounding in luxuriant vegetation, and the region of terror and destruction. We were obliged to make our observations only from our balconies and the flat roofs of our houses in the town. The volcano continues throwing out columns of fire and immense masses of thick black vapour. On the 12th we had again spring temperature, and on the 13th I made another ascent. The lava had not made much progress in advance, which served to confirm my opinion that it is cooling at least superficially. We soon arrived at the point called La Calanna, towards which the torrent of fire is directed, and where we distinctly heard the internal noise of the mountain.—Pat.

THE PROCLAMATION OF THE GATES.—Agreeably to this Proclamation, we are informed that "the gates of Samnat (Som'nauth) are to be escorted by 100 men, and a proportion of Europeans from Nott's division, to which will be added twenty-five troopers from the Governor's body-guard, under Captain Herries, the Aide-de-camp. The men forming the escort are to have double batta while employed on this duty. The Procession is to be received with every demonstration of respect in the various States through which it may pass en route to Guzerat, when they are to be again affixed to the Temple of Samnat, from which they were removed 800 years ago."

A military procession, headed by British Officers, to the Temple of an Idol, the scene of every abomination that can defy the only True God, and dishonour human nature! Surely, a fouler insult to Christianity was never offered, nor a grosser outrage committed upon the feelings of every believer in the Christian Revelation—not in intention, we readily concede, but nevertheless in effect. We do not charge the noble Lord with any evil design, but we must pronounce him to be guilty of a flagrant crime, which, if consummated without remonstrance, will involve the British nation itself in the guilt and disgrace of prostrating the Imperial power to which Divine Providence has consigned the empire of the East, before the Hindoo polytheism. "What say we then?" to use the Apostle's language in reference to this very subject; "that the idol is anything? No, but the things which the heathen sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, and not to God; and we would not that" British Christians "should have fellowship with devils. Dare we provoke the Lord to jealousy? Are we stronger than he?"

Whatever Lord Ellenborough may intend, there can be no doubt as to the light in which this public act will be regarded by the Hindoos themselves; and indeed, were it not a compliment to Idolatry, it would fail of its avowed purpose. If the Bishop of Calcutta and his Episcopal brethren, if the Missionaries of every Protestant communion in India do not, with one accord, raise their voices against this scandalous and criminal policy, they will be "without excuse."

We have spoken of the light in which this restoration of the Temple will be viewed by the Hindoos; but there is another consideration, which seems to have been wholly overlooked, yet which ought to have weighed much more with any sane ruler; namely, what view will be taken of it by their Mohamedan fellow-subjects, from whose disaffection we have far more to apprehend than from that of all the millions of Hindoos under the British sceptre. Sultan Mahmood of Ghiznee, one of the greatest men of his age, whose empire extended from the Oxus to the Ganges, is a favourite subject of eulogy with Mussulman historians, with whom he ranks very high among their defenders of the faith. If his name is still remembered by the Mohamedans of India, it must be with honour and veneration. Neither his ruthless warfare against the idolaters, nor his having Ghiznee for his capital, would render him to them an object of traditional hatred. He appears to have been, like Baber, of Tartar descent; and the Putan, or Affghan sovereigns of Delhi, occupy one of the most brilliant chapters in the annals of Hindoostan. In the course of eight centuries, the recollection of Sultan Mahmood's inroads must, however, have been quite effaced from the mind, even of the Hindoos of Guzerat by later spoliations. The temple of Som'nauth recovered both fame and wealth enough, after his days, to render it an object of attack to other Mohammedan princes; and a Guzerat Sultan of the same name, in A. H. 877, is stated to have razed the Temple to the ground, and built a mosque on or near the site. "The mosque in its turn has fallen to ruin; and Auhlya Bhye, the Mahratta princess, erected a temple to Seeva on the original spot, which is still visited by pilgrims from every quarter." (Modern Traveller, India, vol. iv. p. 205.) It is, we presume, to this modern Temple, to which they never belonged, that the sandal-gates are to be attached. To suppose that any national recollections will be gratified by the restoration, is the height of absurdity. The trophy might have graced a British Governor's palace. A Roman Catholic governor would have presented them as an offering to his Church, to form the splendid ornament of some metropolitan edifice. The very worst possible use to which they could have been applied, has been selected by the would-be Aurungzebe now unhappily entrusted with the reins of our Indian empire, who, with just knowledge enough of history to lead him astray, has contrived to give a worse than farcical termination to a conquest achieved in spite of his prohibitory orders, yet for which he has the audacity, with impious egotism, to take credit to himself. How ill does the almost profane reference to Divine Providence, in this absurd Proclamation, harmonize with the tribute to the Idol Som'nauth! But Lord Ellenborough thinks perhaps, with Pope, that, "Jehovah, Jove or Lord,"—it all comes to the same thing! Why, why was this superlative coxcomb sent out to misgovern India, and to traduce all his predecessor?—Pat.

NEW SOUTH WALES.—In the Sydney-Herald, of the 27th July, we find the financial statement laid by Sir George Gipps, before the legislative council, showing the state of the revenue and expenditure of that colony.

The estimates of expenditure for the year 1843, amount to 370,855*l.* 14s. 3d., being less by 46,000*l.* than those voted for the year preceding. Assuming the revenue of 1843 to be equal only to that of 1841, namely, 403,590*l.*, and the expenditure, as estimated, there will be a surplus, in the year 1843, of 32,737*l.*

The Land Fund in 1841 is in a very different condition, owing to the extent to which immigration had been carried, and the falling off in the land sales. The amount realized was 90,387*l.*; deducting a sum refunded 175*l.*, 90,212*l.* And the charges were—for survey and sale, 31,656*l.*; aborigines, 18,650*l.*; immigration, 331,971*l.*; total, 382,277*l.*; being an excess of expenditure over revenue of 292,065*l.*

During the year 1842, up to July, a further sum of about 104,800*l.* had been paid on account of immigration, whilst the amount derived from the sale of land in the half year ending the 30th June last, was only 7,566*l.* Treasury debentures had been issued to supply the deficiency, to the amount of 49,500*l.*, and the whole deficiency outstanding is stated at 60,000*l.* The balances now on hand in favour of the government at Sydney and Melbourne, amount to 30,000*l.* It appears that, during the year 1841, 23,000 souls were landed at Sydney and Melbourne. The report of Mr. Merewether, the immigration agent, says that the children in the above number amounted to 5,315, leaving 17,885 working hands; and at the close of the year only 153 of the whole were in want of employment, the rates of wages being little less than those of the years preceding, or about 3*l.* per annum lower for labourers and shepherds. The Report of the debenture committee, dated the 14th December, 1841, confirms that of Mr. Merewether; and it is observed, that, although these facts were notorious, yet, according to Lord Stanley, Sir George Gipps is made to say that there "was no demand for labour in the colony." The debenture committee sum up their report by saying, "That the copious supply of labour recently poured into the colony had found immediate employment at remunerative wages, and that the emigrants expected to arrive have every prospect of obtaining engagements, although at reduced wages." The colonists propose to have a public meeting, to represent in a petition to the Queen and both Houses of Parliament the injustice that has been done to them, and praying for immediate redress. —Pat.

THE POPULATION OF RUSSIA.—The last official census of Russia gives the following as the populations of the chief towns of the empire:—St. Petersburgh, 470,202 souls; Moscow, 349,068; Odessa, 60,055; Cronstadt, 54,717; Wilna, 54,499; Toula, 51,735; Kiew, 47,424; Astracan, 45 938; Casan, 41,304; Sebastopol, 31,155; Darpat, 12,203; Abo, 13,050; Helsingfors, 12,725. Warsaw has 140,571 inhabitants.—Galignani's Messenger.

FRENCH SLAVERY.—"It is reported," says the Universe, "that the Duke de Broglie is to present in a few days, on his return from the country, his report on the abolition of slavery. The conclusions of this remarkable document tend, we are informed, to put an end to slavery without costing the treasury a sous."—Pat.

THE MARQUESAS—The papers announce that the Marquesas Islands are to be garrisoned forthwith. —"The harbour of Brest," says the Commerce, "is to furnish the personnel and materiel necessary for the establishment about to be founded in the Marquesas Islands. According to a despatch of the Minister of Marine, the garrison of those islands is to consist of a battalion of Marines, a company of Artillery, and a detachment of Engineers. There are already in the Marquesas, two companies of the Third Regiment of Marines, twenty-one cannoneers, and a few engineers. The battalion about to be sent out will be commanded by M. de Bren. M. de Sar is to fill the functions of Director of the Engineering and Ordnance Departments, and to have under his orders Captains Gautreau and Lebail. Instruments of husbandry, to be chosen by the Maritime Prefect, a supply of articles of clothing and equipment for at least eighteen months, and a hundred iron bedsteads for the use of the sick of the colony, are to be embarked in the course of January."—Ibid.

SPAIN AND HAYTI.—Letters from Santander state that a naval war has arisen between Spain and Hayti. The Haytians have already sent out cruisers. Within the last year Spain has fitted out three ships of the line and five or six frigates.—Ibid.

GENERAL ORDERS—QUEEN'S TROOPS.

Head Quarters, Camp Narrsinghur, 11th March, 1843.

With the sanction of the Right Honourable the Governor General, and in continuation of General Orders of the 8th of January last and the 11th ultimo, His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to direct, that the supplementary Companies, now forming a part of the corps of sappers and miners, be designated the 7th and 8th Companies.

The establishment of these Companies is to correspond with that of the other Companies of the corps, but transfers from one to the other are not to take place, and their promotions are to be kept distinct.

2 Jemadars.
6 Havildars.

The supernumeraries of the 7th and 8th Companies, as noted in the margin, are to be borne as supernumeraries, in their present grades, on the strength of these Companies, until by the occurrence of vacancies in them they can be brought on the establishment.

Clothing and equipments of every description, similar to that of the corps, are to be indented for the 7th and 8th Companies. The equipments now in use, not corresponding with the established pattern, are to be sent into the Magazine at Delhi.

Vacancies in the commissioned and non-commissioned grades, as they occur in the 7th and 8th Companies, are to be filled up by promotions in them; and should the Companies fall below their established strength in privates, they are to be kept complete by recruiting.

The following orders are confirmed:

The Dinapore division order of the 1st instant, directing Surgeon C. S. Curling, of the 32d native infantry, to receive charge of the records of the Superintending Surgeon's Office, from the 1st February, retaining medical charge of his own regiment.

The Meerut division order of the 2d instant, directing Sergeant Major Robert Couch, late attached to the 2d light infantry battalion, to join and do duty with the 27th regiment of native infantry at Meerut.

The undermentioned non-commissioned officers are transferred to the Town Major's list, and appointed Quarter Master Sergeants to corps as follows:

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MEMORIALS OF AFFGHANISTAN.

BY J. H. STOCQUELER.

ON the 15th of April, 1843, will be published, in one volume, the whole of the dispatches, narratives, state papers, &c. connected with the expedition to, and occupation of, Affghanistan, between the 1st of October, 1838, and the 1st October, 1842. These documents, arranged in chronological order, will be connected by a brief and succinct narrative of the operations in Affghanistan and Scinde, commencing with the assembly of the Army of the Indus at Ferozepore, and terminating with the evacuation of the former state after the restoration of the prisoners.

The object of this work is to present, at one view, the whole of the occurrences which have distinguished a most eventful period of British Indian History, and thus to facilitate the references of the student, the politician, and the soldier.

The work will be illustrated with sketches of remarkable places, striking incidents, portraits, costumes, &c. &c.

PRICE 20 RUPEES.

☞ Amongst the documents contained in this work will be found Lord Auckland's Proclamation, the despatches of Sir John Keane, General Willshire, General Sale, Sir Willoughby Cotton, General Pollock, General Nott, &c.; the narratives of Captain Outram's pursuit of Dost Mahomed; of Captain Gray's escape; of the destruction of the Goorkha Battalion; of Captain Ferris's escape from Pesh Bolak; of the disaster which befell Skinner's horse in the Bolan Pass; of Major Brown's defence of Kahun; of the defence of Kyelat-i-Ghilzie; of the rise and progress of the insurrection at Cabul; of the retreat from Cabul to Jellalabad, &c.; Lord Ellenborough's Proclamation, &c. &c.

Applications for the work are to be addressed to the Editor of the Englishman.

REV. JAMES G. SMALL.

FOR the Poems on THE HIGHLANDS, THE SCOTTISH MARTYRS, and THE LIBERATION OF GREECE, Prizes were adjudged to the Author at the University of Edinburgh. The two former have since been much extended, and the first, which consists of five Cantos, embodies reflections during various tours among the most interesting districts of the Highlands. The following extracts indicate the opinion of the adjudicators regarding the Prize Poems in their original state :—

I. PROFESSOR WILSON.

"Mr. J. G. Small displayed extraordinary talents and accomplishments, and gained a prize for a very beautiful Poem on the Highlands." 1836.—"His compositions in verse were superior to those of the ablest of his rivals, and characterized by feeling and fancy, and pure and elevated sentiments."—"A Poem of much power and beauty on the Scottish Martyrs." 1837.

II. PROFESSOR DUNBAR.

"The first 24 or 25 stanzas* possess great poetical beauty and energy of description. Some of the lines are equal almost to any thing of the kind in English poetry, both in the boldness of conception and felicity of expression." 1836.

* Of the Poem on the Liberation of Greece, in the stanza of Spenser, in which measure "The Highlands," and the Tale entitled "Imagination," are also written.

AGENCY FOR THE RECEIPT AND TRANSMISSION OF PACKAGES BY THE MONTHLY STEAMERS TO AND FROM INDIA.

MR. THOMAS HILL, Agent at Southampton for the Oriental and Peninsular Steam Navigation Company, having opened an Office at that port for the purpose abovementioned, begs to submit to the Indian public the rates and conditions upon which packages are received and forwarded. Mr. HILL feels assured, from the advantages of his position, that he will be enabled to afford the highest satisfaction to those who may honour his Agency with their support.

Bombay, Ceylon, Madras, and Calcutta.—For each parcel 8s. with 5 per cent. on the value (Assurance, Guarantee, &c. and further 1s.) for every lb. to the extent of 12*lb.*; for every lb. beyond 12*lb.*, 10*d.* to the extent of 24*lb.*; for every lb. beyond 24*lb.*, 8*d.* to the extent of 36*lb.*; and for every lb. beyond 36*lb.* 6*d.* to the extent of 50*lb.*

Packages despatched by T. HILL are forwarded through Egypt with the Mails, and under ordinary circumstances reach Bombay in 35 days; Ceylon 40; Madras 45; and Calcutta 48 days.

Letters of advice to be sent to T. HILL, or his Agents when a package is sent off to their address, stating contents and value.

Payment of charges is required to be made by Post or otherwise immediately the sender is apprised of the amount, otherwise the Package will be registered as unpaid and charged double, which must be paid before it can be delivered up or forwarded.

Dues and Duties in England, as well as in Egypt, will be paid by T. H. out of the above rates.

Packing in Tin, being absolutely necessary for the protection of Jewellery, Apparel, Books and Medicines from the Sea air, &c. the same will be done at Southampton and Calcutta free of charge.

A Declaration of true value must be sent in the absence of which no package can be registered.

A Receipt will be forwarded to the Owner as soon as the package comes to hand, which Receipt need not be sent out or home to claim the property.

Damage or Loss occasioned by the Act of God, the Queen's Enemies, Vermin, or fire, afloat or on land, and all other dangers of the Seas, Rivers, Steam, and Navigation whatsoever, agreed to be borne and made good.—T. HILL takes upon himself this additional responsibility in consequence of the frequent loss of property from some of the abovenamed causes, and knowing that it is seldom an individual thinks it worth the trouble and expense of opening a Policy for a small amount.

CAUTION.—T. H. will not be responsible in any way for a package containing a Letter, Bill of Exchange, Money, or any Liquid or dangerous substances; but will hold the sender responsible for any evil consequences proceeding from the same.

EUROPEAN AND ORIENTAL AGENCY.

MR. PARKE PITTAR

HAVING arranged the formation of an Agency, the particular object of which will be the transaction of affairs, connected with this country and Europe, begs to offer his services to the community of India, in any way they can be rendered available.

A peculiar and important feature in the Agency now established, will consist in the annual return of Mr. P. Pittar to India. Taking advantage of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's Steam Vessels, he purposes re-visiting Calcutta about the latter end of every October, and returning to Europe about the middle of the following February, thus affording to persons entrusting the management of their affairs to his care, the opportunity of a personal conference and explanation of their views and intentions,—an advantage in the transaction of affairs of a complicated, or family nature, the greatness of which need not be commented upon.

A long residence in India, combined with an intimate knowledge of almost every description of manufactured article, and its various manufacturers, rendering him peculiarly fitted for the office of Agent to persons procuring their supplies or other articles, such as Table Equipage, Philosophical and Optical Instruments, Books, Maps, Sporting Apparatus, Musical Instruments, Military Equipments, Wines, &c. &c. direct from Europe, he offers them his services with every confidence that his selections will give the most perfect satisfaction, whether as regarding quality, cheapness, or adaptation to the climate; but in the execution of these commissions, a previous remittance for their full amount, or reference for payment, will invariably be required.

Every article purchased through this Agency will be most minutely examined previous to its being packed and the same care under every circumstances, taken as if persons were themselves individually present and superintending. Packages of a large size will, as usual, be shipped by fast-vessels to their destined port; but those of smaller dimensions, will, (unless otherwise instructed,) be sent through the Peninsular and Oriental Company's Office, Overland; thus enabling persons in most instances to receive their orders fully executed within four months from the date of the transmission of their instructions.

In transactions of a private and confidential nature a fair remuneration, according to circumstances, will be expected; in those of the ordinary nature of Agency Business, the Commission will be regulated by the customary rates; and for the selection, purchase and shipment of goods, a Commission of 5 per cent. on the gross amount will be charged.

Letters to the address of MR. PARKE PITTAR, EUROPEAN AND ORIENTAL AGENCY OFFICE, LONDON, will meet with the most prompt attention.

Reference in Calcutta, R. J. Lattey, Esq. of the firm of Messrs. Lattey, Brothers and Co.

Sir Charles Napier's Second Victory over the Belochees.—On Friday morning intelligence was received through the Bombay Times and Courier Extra, that Sir Charles Napier had again engaged and discomfited a large army of Belochees, within six miles of Hydrabad. The battle was severely contested for three hours. The position of the enemy was admirably chosen, and their works were so strong, that in the opinion of those capable of forming a comparison, they could scarcely have been rendered stronger by European engineers. The Belochees fought with desperate valor, and sustained a loss of a thousand killed and two thousand wounded. Our loss was by no means trifling. Two officers and 37 men were killed, and eleven officers and 217 men wounded. Though all the troops engaged on this occasion, distinguished themselves by their valour, the brunt of the action, and the larger proportion of the casualties, fell on Her Majesty's 22d Regiment. Sir Charles Napier increased his own reputation—if that was possible—by the admirable disposition of his forces, and his undaunted gallantry. As on the former occasion, he exposed his own person in the thickest of the action, almost beyond the rules of Military prudence. The result has been a complete victory, and the capture of all the guns and standards of the enemy. They have fled in the direction of Meerpore, against which town it was said to be the General's intention to advance by forced marches, in the hope of capturing that nest of enemies before the garrison could be fully prepared for resistance.

This second engagement places our position in Scinde in a new and not very agreeable point of view. Never have we yet encountered so formidable or persevering a foe on the plains of India. In all other wars within the Indus, one grand decisive victory has, almost without exception, decided the campaign, and extinguished opposition. In all our recent engagements with the wild and warlike tribes beyond the Indus, they have been found to trust chiefly to their local advantages, to their mountain fastnesses and defiles. In Scinde, however, the Belochees have met us upon open ground and fought pitched battles with a degree of courage and obstinacy which could scarcely have been exceeded by European troops. So far from being disheartened by the first signal defeat in which they lost 5000 men and their whole park of artillery, they have assembled another army nearly as numerous, and brought a fresh army of guns against us. Instead of waiting for us to attack them in their strong holds, they have boldly advanced against us almost to the verge of our entrenchments, and assaulted us in a position in which we enjoyed every advantage. With a recklessness of danger never yet exhibited by natives of India they have anew assailed an army, flushed with victory and strengthened by reinforcements, after having been previously defeated by half its number. Though the Government of the Ameers has been represented, and not without justice, as the most galling despotism in India, they have succeeded in attaching to their rule a race of soldiers, who appear ready to shed the last drop of blood in their cause.

It is natural to infer from these circumstances that the retention of Scinde will be no easy task; that it must be long before the country settles down into tranquillity under a Government, which will necessarily deprive the Belochee chieftain of his authority, and the soldier of his profession. A spirit of the most determined hostility to us is combined with great military resources and courage, in those whom our administration will reduce to insignificance and want. A large force must therefore be maintained in Scinde; an untiring vigilance must mark our administration, for the least reverse sustained even by a small detachment would bring a swarm of determined warriors into the field. We have now however gone too far to recede. For good or for evil, we must retain the country. Scinde is an integral part of India within the Indus, and the general feelings of our own subjects and allies will be far more affected by the current of events in that country, than it was by our discomfiture in Affghanistan. Our positions must be strengthened along the banks of the Indus, at all hazards; a large army must be maintained, and an uninterrupted communication kept up between Hydrabad and Bombay by means of steam. These arrangements will involve a large expenditure—though not to the extent the Bombay Times predicates; but this expenditure must be borne in spite of the Finance Committees.

Viewing the success which has attended the British arms under Sir Charles Napier, in connection with the melancholy narrative of our discomfiture and disgrace given in Captain Eyre's volume, it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that if he had commanded the troops at Cabul when the outbreak occurred, its course would have been brief enough. He would at once have adopted the most energetic measures, and strangled the insurrection in its cradle. There would have been no loss of moments, far less of days; no temporizing with the crisis; no ill-devised, faint hearted plans of resistance. He would not have allowed mistrust to overcome the natural courage of the soldiers, till it ended in the entire demoralization, in a military sense, of that force. He would have inspired them with confidence in his arrangements, and breathed into them his own soul of fire. Had it fallen to the lot of Napier in that hour of emergency to exclaim, "44th, Advance,"—as in the battle of Hydrabad, he called out to the 22d—the winter of 1841 would not have furnished the most gloomy record in our Indian annals.

English Pleadings in the Sudder Court.—Some year or two ago an application was made to the Sudder Court for leave to employ a barrister of the Supreme Court in the management of a suit; but it was refused except on the condition that he should plead in Oordoo, with which he was known to be unacquainted. The ground of objection to English pleadings, urged at the time, was just. It was said that to admit of pleadings on one side which the advocate of the opposite party could not comprehend, would be anomalous; that to give one party the advantage of pleadings in the language of the Judge, which his opponent was too poor to secure, would be unfair; and that it would compromise the character of the Court for impartiality. It was evident that no decision passed under such circumstances could command the confidence of suitors; that if the Judge decided in favour of the party, who employed an English advocate to plead in English, he would be supposed to lean to his own countrymen; if he decided against the party who enjoyed this advantage, it would in all probability be attributed to zid—a word for which our own language furnishes no adequate term;—and it would have been surmized that the Judges had taken this mode of shewing their anxiety to exclude English pleaders from the bar.

It is now stated, that a wealthy native has petitioned the Court for permission to employ Mr. Prinsep, one of the Barristers of the Supreme Court and the Company's Standing Counsel, to plead his cause in English. The Court has taken a favourable view of the petition, and is said to have recommended that the Barristers of the Queen's Court shall be considered pleaders in their own Court; and of course that they shall be at liberty to employ their own language in pleading for their clients. There are many considerations in favour of this innovation, and but one apparently opposed to it. It must be evident that a suitor who employs a well trained English advocate, must enjoy a great advantage over an opponent who may employ an ordinary native pleader. To render such an arrangement just, therefore, it will be necessary to provide that it shall be admitted only in cases in which the opposite party may agree to it. This he will not do, when he is too poor to purchase the same benefit of advocacy. English Barristers will thus be engaged only in those large cases in which both parties are sufficiently rich to obtain their assistance; and a wealthy suitor will in no case be permitted to employ a European advocate to crush his indigent opponent. The remuneration given for this legal advice will, we suppose, exceed in almost every instance the established rate of fees; but the party cast will, according to the rules of the Court, be called upon to pay no fees in excess of that scale.

Many advantages appear likely to spring from the admission of the Barristers of the Supreme Court to the bar of the Sudder. The personal benefit to the Barristers themselves of opening a new scene of professional exertion, at a time when business in the Supreme Court is dull, will not be among the least satisfactory results of the arrangement. It is upon the interests of the country, however, that the benefit of this change will tell most decisively. The confidence of the public in the Sudder Court will be augmented by the introduction of men possessed of such intelligence and independence of character, as English Barristers. Their legal acumen will tend to facilitate the administration of justice. The judges may be expected to derive as much advantage as the suitors from the employment of so superior a class of advocates; and the arrangement will give a new and improved character to the proceedings of this Court. It will also tend to facilitate and hasten the very desirable amalgamation of the two Courts, the Supreme Court and the Sudder.

The operation of this rule is likely to be equally beneficial in reference to the subordinate Courts throughout the country. No suits are now admitted into the Sudder Court, but in appeal from those tribunals. It will be no small advantage to the cause of justice in the interior that their decisions should be subjected to the keen and fearless scrutiny of men possessed of such high legal attainments, as the Barristers of the Supreme Court. In their hands the merits of the decrees passed in the Courts below, will receive perhaps a closer investigation than the Judges, with their multifarious engagements, could bestow on them. Whatever irregularities may have been committed, will be detected and exposed. We can scarcely fancy a more effective check on abuses in the subordinate Courts than the submission of their decisions to the examination of an accomplished English Barrister. As soon as this plan begins to work, a more urgent necessity will be created for improving the construction of those Courts, and raising the character of its Judges. Government will be constrained moreover, to recast the Covenanted judicial service, and to establish means for training up men to a knowledge of the Civil Law. The unfortunate Judge, who, without having done a day's duty in a Civil Court, perhaps without having opened a book on Civil Law for eight or ten years, is suddenly called up from a Criminal or a Fiscal Court, to preside over the legal arrangements of a large district, and to hear appeals from men far better versed than himself in the rules and practise of the law, finds himself even at present in a position by no means enviable. How much more awkward will that position be rendered, when his crude decisions, which have excited the surprise of his subordinates, come to be dissected by the practised hand of an English lawyer.

THE LANDHOLDER'S SOCIETY.—The Hurkaru thinks us captious and hypercritical in our remark that the Landholder's Society had travelled out of its own province to advocate a permanent settlement in the Western Provinces. He considers it inconsistent that we should censure that body for taking this settlement question in hand, while at the same time we blame it for having neglected to bestow its advise on Government when the abolition of slavery was on the tapis. The settlement in the West however is a matter in which the Landholder's Society of Bengal can have only a constructive interest. The question of slavery involves its personal interests. The number of slaves in the Bengal division of this Presidency is stated at a hundred thousand; and they are held in bondage in many instances by the individuals whom this Society claims to represent. The emancipation of so large a body from slavery, was surely an occasion on which we should naturally have expected to see the Landholder's Society at the post it had chosen.

The subject of the settlement in the North West Provinces is not very accurately represented in the Hurkaru. He speaks of those provinces as being unsettled, and affirms that a settlement had been promised to them "through a long series of years by successive Governors General." The fact is that the country is settled, though not permanently so. The ablest servants of Government have been employed for more than eight years in investigating the capacities of the land, in fixing the boundaries of estates, and determining the right of proprietorship. Upon these investigations a settlement has been concluded, in every instance for twenty, and in some, for thirty years. The settlement added little to the revenues of Government, but is generally understood to have given satisfaction to the people, to have diminished the evils of litigation, and to have imparted a fresh impulse to agricultural improvement. At any rate, there is no monument of our Government since we took possession of the country, more deserving of public approbation, whether we regard purity of motive or extent of labour, than the settlement usually called Mr. Bird's Settlement of the Western Provinces. Neither did successive Governors General promise a permanent settlement through a long series of years. Such a settlement was prematurely and unadvisedly promised by the present Lord Cowley, then Mr. Henry Wellesley, who had been sent to take charge of the administration of the country by his brother, the Governor General, when it first came into our possession. That promise was subsequently renewed subject to the confirmation of the Court of Directors. The Directors refused to confirm it, and ordered settlements to be made for limited periods, whereby agriculture was discouraged and the people impoverished. The determination of the Court of Directors to sanction no settlement of an unalterable nature, and for an indefinite period, has been a sufficient reason with every Governor General since the days of Lord Wellesley, for abstaining from any such unconditional promises.

The Hurkaru thinks it rather strange that 'the disinterestedness of the Society's efforts'—in thus taking the Western Settlement under its fostering wing—"should be considered a feature in its character worthy of censure." We are aware that some of our readers will be disposed to smile at the 'disinterestedness' of this tour in the Western Provinces, into Lord Ellenborough's own country; but we are anxious to treat the motives of others with the same respect which we claim for our own. We do not censure either this charitable tour, or its motives; only we think it injudicious. If the representations which the Mookerjee Baboo and the Old Hindoo have given of the sins of our Government, at all approach the truth, there are grievances enough in Bengal to occupy the Society till the next Charter—when the European and Native functionaries are expected to change places, and the administration to be made over to the alumni of the Hindoo College. The memorials of the Land-holder's Society moreover will naturally carry more weight with Government, when they refer to grievances under which the memorialists themselves labour, and of which they can speak from personal experience. They are more likely to obtain redress, when they can shew that the shoe pinches them and their connections, than that it pinches their countrymen a thousand miles off. In common with the Hurkaru we wish that the Society should be "prosperous and effective," but to secure this end it must not undertake too much at once; it must confine the sphere of its exertions to the province of Bengal, even at the risk of prescribing limits to its disinterestedness. The Western Provinces are scarcely more its neighbours, by geographical position, than the Presidency of Madras. Madras still groans under a far greater grievance than any to be found in those Provinces. The settlement they have obtained is a good one, and the period of its currency sufficient to encourage agricultural enterprise. At Madras the heavy "curse" of the inland duties still continues to repress the national energies and to retard improvement. Now, though it would be very disinterested in the Landholder's Society to invite information with a view to petition Government for their abolition, it would be any thing but wise. It would give its enemies occasion to hold up its proceedings to ridicule, by representing it as a Universal Grievance Society, whose object was not so much the relief of its own members from evils that were acknowledged and felt, as a general intermeddling with the affairs of India. We tender the Society our 'disinterested' advise to drop the Settlement question. It will only serve to weaken their influence in matters connected with their own peculiar interests. The Settlement will not be modified upon their representations, neither will Government be censured for not altering it at their bidding. It has been the result of long, patient and enlightened efforts. Apparently, it works well. It would be unstatesmanlike to disturb the landed tenures of twenty millions of men; at least until sufficient time has elapsed for testing the result of arrangements which have been made by the highest talent and zeal which Government could command.

THE BELL AND THE GATES.—The Hurkaru takes us to task for objecting to the employment of the Ningpo Bell in the new Cathedral, and as the March mail has not yet arrived, we take advantage of the moment to offer a final remark on this interesting subject. If our contemporary will reperuse our article, he will find that we have not objected to its being suspended in the belfry of the edifice, on the score of its being a Heathen bell, adorned with heathen hyroglyphics, and heretofore used in heathen worship. We ventured to question the propriety of its being employed in a Christian Church, on the ground that it was an article of plunder, captured in a war of aggression upon an innocent people; and that it had been already offered to the Prize Committee, and refused, as of little worth. We object to the association of Christianity with war in any other shape than to mitigate its evils. In our apprehension there are many and serious objections to the suspension even of those trophies of victory which have been honourably gained on the field of battle in edifices consecrated to a religion whose weapons are spiritual and not carnal. They may find a more appropriate destination in the Armoury, the Museum, and the royal Palaces. But there is a still higher objection to the acceptance of any article which should give even the bitterest enemies of Christian truth a handle for saying that a Christian Church had become the receptacle of stolen goods.

The Hurkaru has thrown out a hint to Lord Ellenborough to bestow the Somnath Gates on the New Cathedral in Calcutta, to form the basis of the pulpit. The idea is quite original; and demands much consideration. We have carefully weighed all the arguments which we think might be adduced and for against such a termination of their inauspicious journey; but we must confess that in our humble judgment it does not appear to be altogether feasible. The objections which are likely to be raised both by the Bishop and the Governor General, will be fatal to the scheme. The objections of the Bishop would of course be of a religious—those of Lord Ellenborough, of a political character. It is true that in the opinion of a large portion of Europe articles which have desecrated by connection with idolatry and false religion, may be conse-ceded to the use of the Christian Church. Thus the idolatrous obelisk, notwithstanding its Pagan and Egyptian associations, now forms the chief ornament in the square of St. Peter's at Rome. The Baldaquin which adorns the high altar at the base of which burn the hundred lamps around the tomb of the Apostle, was torn from a temple dedicated to Heathen rites; and even the Chair of St. Peter is said to be but a relic of Mahomedanism, of which the inscription is concealed; though the tradition rests upon uncertain authority. The Bishop of Calcutta however will not consider the practise of Romanism a model for Protestants, or seek to distinguish St. Peter's in Calcutta by trophies similar to those which adorn St. Peter's in Rome.

But Lord Ellenborough must also be consulted on the occasion; and though his Lordship may have a personal as well as hereditary partiality for Cathedrals, yet the Gates have been already destined for the restored Temple of Somnath, and given to the Hindoo chiefs of Rajwara and Sirhind, and cannot be reclaimed. That which has once been given away, cannot, according to the Hindoo legislators, be given again. So thoroughly has this idea gained possession of the popular mind, that it is considered the strongest argument against the marriage of a widow, who having been once given away in marriage cannot become the object of a second gift. Lord Ellenborough will not disregard, in this instance, the force of popular prejudice, or mar his own efforts to gain popularity in the Hindoo community. On the whole, therefore, we are inclined to think that the proposal of our contemporary, to turn the Gates of Somnath into a pulpit for the Cathedral, while the Ningpo bell adorns the belfry, is not likely to be carried. The objections alike of the giver and the receiver are too serious to be overcome even by the force of his reasoning. The upshot will probably be, that Mr. Mears will be shocked to find his sweet-toned Christian bells, in such pagan company; that the old crumbling Sandal wood gates, if they do not go down to the sea at Somnath, will remain in the Dewanee Aam at Agra, and that Bishop Wilson will procure a more substantial and elegant pulpit than any which could be manufactured out of them.

Abolition of Slavery.—The Act for the abolition of Slavery passed Council on the 7th of April, the anniversary of the day on which the siege of Jellalabad was raised by its illustrious garrison; and every slave from Cape Comorin to the Himalaya, among one eighth of the human race, has been legally set free. That which two years ago appeared hopeless, owing to the want of moral courage in those who ruled the empire, has been accomplished without noise or parade, but finally and effectually. America can no longer taunt us with hypocrisy in taking credit to ourselves for emancipating a million of slaves in the West Indies while we continued to hold another million, as it was said, in slavery in the East. Fully and honourably have we redeemed the pledge we offered to the Christian world ten years since, of making personal freedom co-extensive with the British dominions. We may now at length enjoy without qualification, the gratifying boast that wherever the British standard waves, it waves over freemen; and that slaves can no more breathe in our colonies, than they can breathe in our native land. We are now exulting over our successes in Affghanistan, in China, in Scinde. Six times during the last twelve months have victories the most signal been announced by royal salutes. Almost every mail has brought out fresh rewards for the heroes who have maintained the military reputation of their country. Yet amidst all these trophies, the great victory we have gained in the cause of humanity over our own prejudices and lukewarmness, is perhaps—if our heroes will forgive the expression—a greater and more lasting object of national exultation. But it would be ungracious to institute any comparison between those noble exertions which have contributed to defend and consolidate the empire, and those less dazzing efforts which have restored liberty to the slave. Rather let us make it a matter of mutual congratulation that while some have been engaged in maintaining the honour of their country in the field, others have been no less diligently striving in the cabinet to secure for the subjects of this empire, that blessing of personal freedom which is at length identified with our political institutions; and that the period at which we stood highest in the estimation of Asia, was that in which we declared universal freedom to every slave in India.

When the draft of this Act was first published, one of our contemporaries urged the necessity of completing the work, by attaching penalties to a breach of the law of emancipation. His reasoning on the subject was sound, and his suggestion highly judicious. Without penalties for infringing the act, its benevolent provisions may become a dead letter. Still, considering the circumstances under which the Act was framed, and the strong repugnance which was so recently manifested in high quarters to the immediate and unconditional extinction of slavery, it may have been a matter of prudence to confine the first act of legislation on this subject to a simple declaration that personal slavery should no longer exist legally in India. To have attempted more might have aroused opposition to the measure, not only on the part of the natives, but still more, among our own influential countrymen which would have been fatal to success. A great point has been gained by the decisive blow which has thus been inflicted on the institution of slavery. Some time must elapse before slavery itself will become entirely extinct in a country in which it has existed from time immemorial, and has been legalized by two successive dynasties of conquerors. To hasten this consummation it will be necessary to carry out the intentions of the legislature, by more stringent regulations, and to punish with severe penalties those who may attempt to evade them. That these regulations will not be withheld, as the necessity for them becomes more and more apparent, it would be unreasonable to doubt. When we compare the national agitation and the united efforts which were found necessary to effect the abolition of West India slavery, with the comparative absence of any pressure from without, in reference to its abolition in the east, the present measure has all the grace of a spontaneous movement in the cause of humanity. We may therefore look with greater confidence for the enactment of whatever laws may yet be necessary to complete the good work.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, APRIL 13.

— The scraps of intelligence received from Scinde both by way of Delhi and Bombay only serve to increase our anxiety for Sir Charles Napier and his brave army. The same game which was played by the Beloochees when our army was advancing to Candahar has been played now. They have intercepted our posts. The Delhi Gazette last received says, that there has been no communication between Upper and Lower Scinde for fifteen days. There is no addition as yet to the intelligence brought by the Semiramis Steamer to Bombay. It is certain that a battle has been fought in which we have been victorious, but the scene of it is as yet unknown. Only the report of General Napier's death appears to be contradicted on good grounds. Letters are said to have been received from him after the battle; and one of these letters was in the hands of the commander of the Nimrod.

— A requisition, with a large number of very respectable Native signatures, with a small sprinkling of European names, has been presented to the Sheriff of Calcutta, requesting him to convene a meeting at the Town Hall on Tuesday next, with the view of forwarding to Mr. John Sullivan, an expression of the approbation and gratitude of the Native Inhabitants of Calcutta for his efforts to give them the benefit of the 87th Clause of the present Charter, and to adopt a petition to the Court of Proprietors on the same subject.

— Mr. J. W. Alexander, the official Assignee of the Insolvent Court, has obtained two years leave of absence to visit England, leaving Mr. O'Dowda as his substitute. This is, as the Star observes, the first instance in which an officer of the Supreme Court has been permitted to visit England without vacating his appointment. The officers on the Company's establishment, invariably lose office by going beyond the Cape. The voyage to England may now be performed in less time than a trip to the Cape, and it is possible that the Company's servants may be allowed to hold office while at home; but in this case it is far from improbable that their allowances will be subjected to a farther reduction. It is partly in consideration of the long exile to which the members of the Civil Service were subjected, that their allowances were fixed at so high a scale; and there is reason to apprehend that since the facilities for visiting England have been thus multiplied, the banishment salaries may be curtailed.

— The last accounts from Burmah state, that the King has turned his attention to the growth of tea, and that he claims to himself a monopoly of the export. This royal competitor however will do little injury to the prospects of the Assam Tea Company. It is from the reduction in the price of tea which must necessarily arise from the export of the article from the ports of the district in which it is grown in China, that the most formidable obstacles to the rising manufacture of Assam is to be expected.

FRIDAY, APRIL 14.

— Good Friday. The passengers of the Hindostan were ordered to be punctually on board, two hours after midnight this morning; but an advertisement published yesterday, announced that in consequence of some injury which a part of the machinery had sustained, the departure of the vessel was postponed to to-morrow morning. The piously disposed passengers had thus an opportunity of hearing the Archdeacon's last lent lecture. It has been rumoured that the Directors of the Oriental and Peninsular Company have it in contemplation to appoint a chaplain to each of their vessels.

— The Hindostan steamer takes home Capt. David Lister Richardson, who has for several years filled the office of Principal of the Hindoo College, with much credit to himself and advantage to the pupils. We regret to hear that the cause of his departure is ill health. The students who have benefited by his labours, have addressed a very appropriate letter to him, and requested his acceptance of a small token of their esteem. We are happy to perceive this return of kindly feeling towards one who has laboured so sedulously for their good. For some time after his honest but injudicious interference to prevent meetings at the College in which the Government was assailed, he was exposed to a storm of abuse; but his departure for England appears to have created a revulsion of feeling in his favour. We hope he will find his health completely restored by the voyage.

— The papers of this morning give us no farther intelligence from Scinde.

— A groom, who had been paid up his wages by Dr. Woodford and dismissed, brought an action against him in the Court of Requests for subsequent wages, which were not due. The case broke down under the evidence of the plaintiff's witness. Dr. W. expressed his surprize at the man's ingratitude, and the Commissioner delivered these words from the bench: "You must be a new comer, otherwise you would not be surprized at the ingratitude of native servants. Never expect gratitude from them. If it were possible that you could feed them with diamonds, still they would be ungrateful."

— The Mail dispatched from Bombay on the 1st of April, took 42,285 covers; viz. 32,030 letters and 10,255 covers. The Calcutta regular dawk of the 23d was in time for it.

— A meeting has been held at Agra, at which it was resolved to establish an Agricultural and Horticultural Society for the North West Provinces. The motions which were made on the occasion will be found in another column.

— The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette has afforded amusement to his brother Editors at that Presidency by the following remarks:

"To plant our foot firmly in the Mofussil is one of our main and most choice objects. Only let the Mofussil become our fulcrum, and we will move all India. We will bring wonderful things to light. Therefore let the gentlemen in the Mofussil support the Gentleman's Gazette. In Bombay, we have as large a circulation as the Bombay Times." Surely this is not language to attract five thousand suose ibers.

SATURDAY, APRIL 15.

— Early yesterday morning intelligence reached Calcutta of a glorious victory achieved by Sir Charles Napier after a severe struggle of three hours over an army of 22,000 Belochees. For particulars, see our extracts.

— The Bombay papers state, that the Semiramis Steamer, in her next trip will bring up the treasure found at Hydrabad, together with the Ameers,—to be separated from that treasure for ever.

— The community of Bombay has split on the subject of a monument to preserve the memory of those who fell in Affghanistan and Scinde. The original proposal was for the erection of a monument. It was afterwards proposed to erect a Church at Colaba, and the Bishop of Calcutta, who happened to be there at the time of the meeting, gave his vote for the Church and subscribed largely to it. Those who originally intended to erect a monument, being outvoted, have convened a meeting for the purpose of carrying out their design, viz. that of erecting, in some conspicuous part of the Island of Bombay, on the Esplanade, if possible, a pillar, obelisk, or other monument of a similar character. A committee has been appointed to carry the resolution into effect; and it is not improbable that Bombay may have both the obelisk and the Church.

MONDAY, APRIL 17.

— We have placed among our selections the plan proposed to the meeting of rate payers by Mr. Remfrey. There is little reason however to expect that they will be carried, or if carried, that the plan will maintain its ground. The meeting has none of the stamina necessary for a Municipal Committee, still less for one which has a new system to organize. The report of the meeting published in the journals winds up with saying, "Here various resolutions and amendments were proposed, discussed and abandoned, and so it would be merely waste of time and trouble to say more about them." To this we say, "ditto."

— A correspondent of the Englishman states, in a letter published in this day's paper, that private individuals are now carrying out the production of Tea at about 30 per cent. less than the Company. We learn from the same sourpe, that the Committee have adopted the London plan of paying its members for every attendance at a meeting, Sixteen Rupees. We hope this sum will come from the fines of absent members.

— The Criminal Sessions of the Supreme Court opened on Saturday. There were only eleven cases on the Calendar, of which four had stood over from the last Sessions. There was but one Native on the Grand Jury, and the address of Sir Henry Seton was brief.

—The Bombay papers last received, give a very interesting account of the capture of Kerbela, by the Pasha of Bagdad, which will be read with much interest. The defilement of the tomb of Abbas has roused the fanatic inhabitants of Persia to vengeance. The Shah of Persia is said to be making preparations for invading the Pashalic of Bagdad, and proclaiming war against the Sublime Port. It is suspected that the religious differences which separate the Sheeah Persians from the Soonee Turks, will, if war breaks out, give rise to the most revolting cruelties.

— We have copied an article from the Hurkaru in reply to the remarks of the Bombay Times on the performance of the Hindoostan Steamer. Our Calcutta contemporary demonstrates by a reference to the ascertained speed of this noble vessel, that supposing the Bombay Steamers to be of the same power, still we should in fair weather, receive all our letters and newspapers by the Steamer at once and at a lower price, at the same time at which we receive the Express from Bombay, and that during the season in which the Bombay express is ten days on the route, the Hindoostan, and her sister ships will bring our letters sooner than the express.

—The Star has furnished his readers with a very valuable Tabular Statement respecting the number of Coolies despatched to the Mauritius between the 24th of December 1842 and the 11th of April 1843, of which the following is an abstract:

|---|---|
| The number of vessels employed has been, .. ... .. ... .. | 21 |
| The aggregate tonnage ... ... .. | 11,808 |
| The Number of Male Coolies, .. | 3,937 |
| " of Females, ... ... | 478 |
| " of Children, ... ... | 133 |

The emigrants have been sent in the following proportions by the Houses in Calcutta.

|---|---|
| Mr. C. Jourdain, .. .. ... .. | 1178 |
| Messrs. Saunders, May, Sarkies and Co. .. .. ... ... .. | 881 |
| Mr. C. Aviraguet, ... ... .. ... | 681 |
| Messrs. Gillanders and Co. .. ... | 625 |
| Messrs. Langlois and Co. ... ... | 479 |
| Messrs. Adam, Scott and Co.... .. | 347 |

TUESDAY, APRIL 18.

— 3135 chests of Opium were sold yesterday at the Exchange and realized 37,80,400 Rs. If each chest stands Government in 300 Rupees, the profits on this sale amount to more than 26 lakhs of Rupees.

— A meeting of the rate payers in Calcutta was held on Saturday last. The object was to frame rules for taking over the municipal administration of the town from Government in conformity with an act passed two years ago. Several meetings had been previously held at which nothing was done. The present meeting was equally barren of any result. The affair has from the beginning been almost exclusively in the hands of natives, and the European part of the community has kept aloof. Mr. Remfrey, of the house of Hamilton and Co. is the only European who appears to have taken any interest in the matter.

— The Bombay Times received this morning, holds out a distant hope that Col. Stoddart and Capt. Conolly may yet be living. A Jew at Loodiana has heard from a brother of his at Bokhara, that a Greek interpreter and slave, who had been for months confined in the same well with them, were taken out and executed, and that the populace were made to believe that they were Col. Stoddart and Capt. Conolly. The mind would eagerly embrace the slightest hope that our unfortunate countrymen were yet alive; but intelligence of their death has been received from so many quarters, and from sources so independent of each other, that we cannot indulge any hope of their existence.

— The Star has, in his number of this morning, exposed in just and severe terms the injustice which has been inflicted on Major Mackeson, who was Assistant to the Political Agent at Loodiana long before the expedition to Affghanistan. His name is associated with the earliest efforts to open the navigation of the Indus. He has rendered important services to the state in his political capacity at Peshawur;—but he was one of Lord 'Auckland's politicals,' and he is now remanded to his corps, while another officer, brave it is true, but of recent fame, has been appointed Assistant to Mr. Clerk.

— At the last meeting of the Agricultural Society, of which a report is given elsewhere, a prospectus of Floricultural Society was put round. It appears in the Hurkaru of this day. From all we can gather, it comes out under the auspices of Mr. Speede.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 19.

— An Extra Delhi Gazette received yesterday evening, informs us that intelligence of Sir Charles Napier's victory had at length reached that station and Agra. The only addition we acquire to our intelligence is that the Ameer previously to attacking the General, sent an Envoy to ask him to retire, taking six annas of the plunder of Hydrabad and leaving the other ten annas for him. It appears that the message was delivered just as the evening gun fired, and Sir Charles is said to have exclaimed, Take that as my reply.

Singular Meteoric Appearance.—A letter from Sibsagar, dated April 7, says, "A very singular meteoric appearance was observed here a few evenings since. It occurred a little before 9 o'clock on the evening of the 8th. A very brilliant light suddenly illuminated the whole atmosphere, and on looking up, a large cluster of falling stars was seen rapidly descending towards the earth in an oblique direction. These disappeared in a few seconds, and about a minute afterwards a loud report was heard resembling that of a cannon, resulting doubtless from the explosion of the luminous mass. The report was heard also at Jaipur. Last evening at half past 8, we had several very severe shocks of an earthquake. The vibrations lasted for about five minutes. Another slight shock was felt at a quarter past one o'clock this morning.

The Comet was not seen here until the 7th of March on account of cloudy weather. We were not able to discover the nucleus.

Every thing is quiet on the frontier now—the Singpho disturbances are considered to be at an end, and the parties sent into the hills have returned."

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

ANOTHER GLORIOUS VICTORY NEAR HYDRABAD.

Times Office, 3 p. m. April 5.

The Indus steamer, which came into harbour this morning, brings particulars of the victory gained by Sir Charles Napier over the Belochees on the 24th of March, the first rumour of which reached us on the 1st instant. The General had marched out with the whole of his army, 6,000 strong with eighteen guns, to attack the enemy, commanded by Shere Mahomed of Meerpore. The enemy's force, 20,000 strong, after a severe action, were broken and completely dispersed. The whole of their guns, 11 in number, were captured, together with several of their standards. Shere Mahomed has escaped into the desert with a body of horse. From this it is supposed he will speedily require to return for want of water. He was hotly pursued by the Irregular Horse. We have no time to give details. Our loss amounts to 39 killed, and 228 wounded. The brunt of the battle fell on Her Majesty's 22d, and Leslie's Troop horse artillery.

Killed.—Lieut. Smith, 1st Troop By. H. Artillery; and Captain Garrett, 9th Bengal Cavalry.

Wounded.—Lieut. Pawnal, Bombay H. A.; and Lieut. Tait, Poonah Horse,—slightly.

Lieuts. Chute, Coote, Greames, Evan, Burns, and Pennefather, H. M. 22nd Regt.

Lieuts. Wilkinson, (slightly), and Burr, (severely)—21st N. I.

Lieut. McMurdo, H. M. 22d, Staff, severely.

We subjoin the extra just issued by our contemporary the Courier, received as we were going to press:—

COURIER OFFICE, 1½ P. M.

We have just received intelligence from Hydrabad, which we hasten to lay before our readers—we have no time for comment.

Four miles from Hydrabad, 25th March.

The report that the enemy were coming to meet us proved correct, for after the arrival of the 8th Regt. and 3d Cavalry on the 23d instant, we marched on the following day, and after we had passed the Town of Hyderabad about 2 miles, their guns were heard opening upon our advanced guard, and in an hour from that time we were all drawn up in front of the enemy.

The Artillery had all the fighting for the first hour and a half, and then we advanced in Echelons of Battalions in line, H. M. 22d first, then the 21st N. I., 12th, 8th, and 1st Grenadiers last of all.—The 8th and Grenadiers were not engaged, and the brunt of the action lay in a village on the right of the Enemy's position, and a deep Nullah running from it. The Cavalry turned the position in beautiful style on their right, whilst we advanced in front. They did not stand very long in the Nullah and Village, but we lost an awful number of men, for we received orders not to fire until we came close to the Nullah; when however we opened our fire and charged, they began to bolt excepting a few who gallantly charged us and were killed in our ranks.

We have lost 214 killed and wounded, but we have not been able to ascertain correctly the amount of the enemy's loss. In one Nullah we counted no less than 221 dead bodies, and the dead and dying are scattered all over the country. It is said that the enemy have dispersed, but we are nevertheless to march upon Meerpore by forced marches. We expect to meet some slight opposition there, but it will not be long as the Beloochees are all disheartened.

Excuse this hurried chit; we have just heard that the General is going to send off a Tappal.

Fort Hydrabad, 26th March.

We have had another fight about six miles from this and gained a Victory. The Enemy have dispersed and the Army gone on to Meerpore to destroy the place, after which they are to return here. Our loss has been heavy again, especially H. M.'s 22d Regt., the left wing of which was much cut up taking a village which formed the right of the Enemy's position, but I have not learnt many particulars as I left the Camp as soon as the Battle was over. Captain Garrett of the 9th Bengal Cavalry, and Lieutenant Smith of the Horse Artillery were killed, and several Officers wounded, some dangerously.—Bombay Times Extra.

[FROM THE BOMBAY COURIER EXTRA.]

Courier Office, 5½ P. M.

We issued an extra early in the day, containing Extracts from two letters just received—since then a communication has been made to us from a highly informed quarter, which induced our immediate recal of the Extra, which we hope has been in time to prevent its general circulation; if not, this must be our apology, that we lose no time in correcting an error, when discovered. Our information was incorrect, it appears, respecting the gallant Grenadiers, who were stated by our correspondent not to have been engaged at all. We believe the fact to be, that the 1st Grenadiers was originally intended to be the first in action—but the General in consequence of the movements of the enemy, saw reason to change his plan on the field of battle, whereby the first necessarily became last, and the last first. The Grenadier Regiment was however in the action, and their conduct and their Commander's has been most favourably mentioned. This gives us great gratification, as many of our friends in that gallant Regt. will readily believe.

The following extract from a letter just received, dated the 25th ult., will be read with mingled pain and pleasure—our loss has been severe, but the victory of incalculable honour to our General and his brave army.

"Yesterday the 24th we gained a splendid victory. We marched from Hydrabad yesterday morning and had not advanced more than two miles and a half before the enemy were discovered 1½ mile in advance of us, drawn up in a tremendously strong position, we advanced to within 1200, or 1300 yards, when the troops were drawn up in order of Battle as follows, the enemy firing round shot at us all the time.

| Poona Horse, 9th Bengal Cavalry, H. M. 22nd, Hutts's Battery, 2 Eight In. Howitzers, 25th N. I. | 21st, 12th, N. I., 9 Pr. Battery, 8th N. I., 1st Grenadiers, Horse Artillery 3rd Bombay Cavy., Scinde Horse. |

The above was our 1st position, and when formed up W. and myself and B. rode forward and examined the enemy's position which we saw was very strong especially in their right which rested on a village and dry bed of the river.

We three galloped along their whole line at about the distance of 300 yards and received the fire of their guns and matchlocks by which means we found out their strength. W. made his report to Sir CHARLES, and immediately he advanced about 400 yards when he halted and ordered the Horse Artillery to move from the right of the Grenadiers to the left of H. M. 22nd and then about 9 o'clock, after having sustained the enemy's fire for two hours our guns opened and made the enemy very soon abandon their guns, the line then advanced to the assault and a devil of a fight took place which lasted for two hours and then we had gained the whole of their positions—while the struggle was going on the whole of the artillery took up their position and fired grape and shell into the village and drove the enemy out with considerable slaughter. While in our second position the enemy's horse thought proper to retreat and our 3d Cavalry, charged splendidly over nullahs, &c. and cut up a great many, the Scinde horse did the same. When we had captured the whole of the enemy's position and advanced beyond the village the Poona Horse and 9th Bengal Cavalry were ordered to charge. W. and self went with them and followed them in the nullahs for upwards of two miles slaying a great many, the 9th Bengal Cavalry followed us when the Poona Horse had cleared the way. I believe they got an Officer killed and some men wounded from Matchlockmen in the Village, and thus ended a Splendid fight, in which our loss has necessarily been very severe, about 200 killed and wounded, out of which the gallant 22nd have lost 145 including 5 or 6 Officers, they had to assault the strongest part far, and they did it right well. I was by Sir Charles' side the whole time until I went with the Poona Horse. He rode in among the 22nd and waved his hat calling out at the same time "22nd, charge," we found a ramp in the nullahs by which we are enabled to cross on horseback, the Belloochees fighting all the time desperately. We then came right shoulders forward and brought a flanking fire on them and slew them in hundreds. I was nearly blown up by one of the enemy's Magazines, however, I fortunately escaped with a slight burning. Sir Charles is a splendid General and exposed himself the whole of the fight where the shot were flying thickest. The enemy's force amounted to about 22,000 men and eleven guns—their position was so strong we couldn't expect to slay many of them, however 600 dead bodies lay in and about the Nullahs this morning, and I suppose three or four hundred in other places, and about 1800 or 2000 wounded. Our force amounted to about 5,000 men of all arms. We took all their guns and standards. In their Camp there was little besides Gunpowder.

We are now pitched on the field of battle, and this morning I went to look in the Nullahs and found the dead lying in heaps as we left them yesterday except that they were all burning. You cannot fancy a more horrible sight. At four o'clock yesterday afternoon we got our breakfast and then the worst part of all took place, the burial of the poor fellows who so gallantly fell. The 22nd buried 21 and last night two more died of their wounds and several more mortally wounded. Two officers killed on the field, Garrett, of the 9th Cavalry and Smith, H. A. Several others wounded, among these Burr and Pennefather severely. It is terrific work for troops storming such places, and requires a great General and great steadiness in troops. I dont think Engineers could possibly construct stronger works. The greater portion of the enemy escaped to their right.

Altogether the general is justly proud of the result of the Battle, but of course much regrets the loss of the poor unfortunate but gallant 22nd, who certainly sustained the brunt of the battle. Not and Belloch was spared, the soldiers shot and bayoneted them in such a manner as is seldom witnessed. The General's Dispatch goes this afternoon.

The enemy are said to have dispersed and the Ameer SHAIR MAHOMED fled to Meerpoor, and we march after him to-morrow, in order of battle and shall be at him three days hence, if he does'nt meet us before. He hangs the Bellochees up to the eyes which makes them so desperate.—Bombay Courier Extra.

Ferozepore, 8th April.

"My Dear Sir,—Letters in from Hyderabad, today and yesterday mention that Sir Charles has gained another pitched battle over the Ameers. From what I can learn, the Ameer of Meerpore quietly sent a Vakeel to Sir Charles to say that he would repair to the Residency at Hyderabad, and receive a British Resident there, provided Sir Charles's Force was withdrawn to Sukkur; the Vakeel made his proposal just before the evening gun fired, and Sir Charles's reply was "I will answer the Ameer by THAT," pointing to the gun.

A fight accordingly took place near Hyderabad, and we are said to have lost 300 in killed and wounded, three Officers killed, one of them a Lieut.-Colonel, the enemy are said to have left 1,700 dead on the field. Bravissimo! this has opened the communication with Sukkur..

The names of the officers killed are mentioned, with the exception of the Lieut.-Colonel. The enemy said to have been 17,000 strong.

The four eighteen pounders, and two heavy siege Howitzers for Scinde, arrived at the station this morning."—Delhi Gazette Extraordinary, April 11.

COLONEL STODDART AND CAPTAIN CONOLLY SUPPOSED YET TO BE ALIVE.

We subjoin an extract from a Loodianah letter received on Thursday, which holds out a hope that the two persecuted officers, whose names we have mentioned, may be yet alive. We would willingly cling to the last ray of hope ; but we must confess the present appears dim and feeble. It is true that the uniformity of the statements which have reached us from Bokhara direct through Affghanistan, or from Germany through Georgia, and by the Caspian, may be accounted for by what is stated in our correspondent's letter. But we have hoped so long against all hope, that the heart sickens and despairs at last. It does seem most extraordinary that Government should have appeared so indifferent to the fate of two distinguished officers, the first of whom went on mission to the Bokharian court. In July 1840, the King of Bokhara was frightened into a promise to release Dost Mahomed, by the threat of the petty Khan of Kookan, that he would make war on him if he persisted in his misdeeds. Surely were we ourselves indisposed to send more troops into central Asia, our Persian allies could be induced to march on Bokhara either by a bribe, or a threat of our descending on Bushire. Why not at once appeal to the Kookan chief himself ? He commenced hostilities out of mere friendship for Dost Mahomed,—wherefore not try him with the more substantial inducement of British gold ? The Seikhs need but the hint to provide the Ameer with the contingent of 12,000 or 20,000 men, which he desires, to enable him to attack Bokhara. Surely our means could not be more laudably employed than in endeavouring to obtain the release of poor Stoddart and Conolly ; or the chastisement of the inhuman monster who has so gratuitously and barbarously heaped cruelties on British subjects, which it makes us shudder to think of. There is much plausibility in the conjecture that such a wretch as even the Bokhara chief would avoid shedding blood gratuitously, and for which a fearful reckoning might be exacted. He has seen the penalties the Affghans paid for their misconduct.

"LOODIANAH, March 23d, 1843.

"The report last month was, that Colonel Stoddart and Captain Conolly had been murdered, but there is a Jew here who declares that they are still alive, and that he heard from a brother of his at Bokhara, who told him that a Greek interpreter and a slave, who had been for months confined in the same well with them, were taken out and executed, and the populace made to believe that they were Colonel Stoddart and Captain Conolly. The man has very good testimonials of character, and has offered (without reward) to convey a chit to them, and bring back an answer in the course of five months."—Bombay Times, April 8.

BAGDAD.

We have been favored with the perusal of a letter from Bagdad, dated 12th Feb. last, containing some very interesting details of late warlike proceedings against the Sheeahs, who compose, we believe, the entire population of Kerbela. From the character, position, and opportunities of the writer of the letter in question, we can entirely rely upon its authenticity. It would appear, that for years past, Kerbela has been a city of refuge for fraudulent debtors, run-a-ways, the disaffected, and the rebellious, from Bagdad and the parts adjacent—and that former Pachas, amongst whom were Daoud Pacha and Ali Pacha, made efforts to reduce the place to subjection to the Sultan, and deliver up the refugees to justice. It is said, that on more occasions than one, the wealth of Kerbela has been found potent enough to buy off the invaders, and that after making a demonstration before the walls, Daoud and Ali, successively yielded to the soft persuasion of tempting gold—and for a consideration, retired from before the town, and granted its inhabitants a new lease of immunity from punishment. This state of things was too good to last long, and Nejjid Pacha, the successor of Ali Pacha, either by imperative commands from the Sultan, which he dared not disobey, or from the impossibility of inducing the Kerbelites to comply with his demands, set to work vigorously to possess himself of this stronghold of the Sheeahs.

It is said that he invested the place with an army of 12,000 men, and after, in vain, trying all the stratagems and wiles of Eastern policy, eventually stormed Kerbela, whose inhabitants took refuge in the Tomb of Abbas, a place holy alike to Soonees and Sheeahs—but its sanctity was of no avail—in the mosque itself, and before the very tomb, the victors shot down or put to the sword, all whom those edifices contained, and ceased not so long as a Sheeah could be found within their precincts.

It would appear that religious rancour exasperated the feelings of the invading army, and drove them to the desecration of the Tomb of Abbas, described as one of the richest and most venerated in the East. Few Europeans ever succeeded in gaining admission into this holy spot—and such was the anxiety to witness its wonders, that on its late capture, Europeans and Asiatics from all parts, flocked to Kerbela, to avail themselves of the permission given by Nejjid Pacha, to explore the place in every quarter. Nejjid Pacha is a Soonee, and is said to have taken in hand, and to have accomplished the reduction of Kerbela, with the utmost satisfaction. He received European visitors with attention, and afforded them every protection and facility, whilst exploring the hitherto unknown wonders of this stronghold of the antagonist sect. Bagdad was brilliantly illuminated in honour of this auspicious event—and the Pacha declares he will restore that city to all its pristine glory, power and importance. His expressed intentions are, to encourage and promote trade in all its branches—and to procure Steamers from England, for the navigation of the Tigris. His residence at Constantinople is said to have enlarged his mind, and suggested to him the advantage of adopting and importing European improvements. He meditates supplying all the principal Mosques with clocks from England to be put up outside, facing the four cardinal points, for the public accommodation. In fine, if he only performs half what he promises, he will be a true benefactor to his country, by the establishment of useful works, and the dissemination of useful knowledge.

From the exasperation of the Sheeahs, great evil is apprehended—people already begin to prophecy a deadly war between the Turks and Persians, as one of the results. We have little doubt of their inclination to fight, but every doubt of their ability to furnish the sinews of war. It requires a flourishing Exchequer.—Bombay Courier, April 7.

MAURITIUS COOLIES.

The Friend of India suggested that we should obtain particulars of the shipment of Coolies from this port to Mauritius. He will see that we have done so. The tabular statement we give in another part of our paper is complete and satisfactory, but we should have been glad to have seen the proportion of the sexes a little more equalized : the males appear as about 8 to 1. The 4th Sect. of the Act provides that the emigrants shall not exceed the proportion of one person for every two tons of the Registered burthen of the vessel, and it will be seen the numbers in each vessel have been considerably within this provision ; but the same clause also declares that 'whatever may be the tonnage of the ship or vessel, no greater number of passengers shall be taken on board of such ship or vessel than shall be after the rate of one such person for every twelve superficial feet of the lower deck or platfrom, unoccupied by goods or stores, not being the personal luggage of such persons.' It is to this wholesome provision the inspecting officer should especially direct his attention both here and on the ship's arrival at her destination. We may observe that two children under the age of 10 years are to reckon as one person only.—Cal: Star, April 17.

TO CAPT. D. L. RICHARDSON,
Principal of the Hindu College.

SIR,—Upon the occasion of your departure for Europe, I am directed by the Council of Education to express to you their high sense of the industry and ability with which you have during a period of four years filled the Office of Principal of the Hindu College, and of the conciliatory manner by which you have made your Lectures attractive and your authority respected by the Students of that Institution.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your most obedient humble Servant,
H. V. BAYLEY, Secretary.

ADDRESS FROM THE STUDENTS OF THE HINDOO COLLEGE TO THEIR LATE PRINCIPAL.

To CAPT. D. L. RICHARDSON,
Principal of the Hindoo College.

SIR,—We beg leave with great submission to express our deep sense of the unwearied zeal with which your talents have been exerted in promoting our mental and moral improvement, for the kind manner in which your instruction has been imparted, and for the lively interest you have ever manifested in the progress of our studies and in our general welfare. It is perhaps presumptuous on our part to express in this way an opinion upon the conduct of a Superior whose lectures we have been proud to attend with silent respect, and whose orders it has been our duty to obey with cheerful and unquestioning alacrity ; but now that we are about to be deprived of your invaluable tuition and wholesome advise, we cannot wholly restrain the expression of our sentiments of fervid gratitude and respectful admiration, and we even venture to hope that however slight may be our testimony to your great merits, you will yet give us credit for the deep and sincere feeling with which it is offered. In your father land, Sir, to which you are now about to return, so unfortunately for those whom you leave behind, we trust that you will remember us with that kind and generous feeling which you have uniformly evinced towards us since we have been so fortunate as to enjoy the advantage of your instruction.

We venture therefore, to request your kind acceptance of a slight token of our esteem, which as often as it meet your eye will remind you that young Hindoos, whatever may be their other deficiencies, know how to appreciate the kindness of an enlightened foreigner and to cherish a lasting gratitude towards those who confer on them the most inestimable of all earthly obligations—that of an education calculated to expand their minds and raise them in the scale of intellectual beings. We deeply lament that your departure from our shores is occasioned by the shattered state of your health, but we sincerely pray that you may speedily recover and return to us with renewed health and spirits, to resume the task of imparting to us those valuable lectures by which we have endeavoured to profit and which we have at least learned to appreciate. But should you find other and more advantageous occupation for the talents by which you are distinguished, however we may lament our misfortune in losing so gifted an instructor, you will still live in our hearts and we shall never cease to pray for your happiness. Wishing you a safe and pleasant voyage.

We remain,
With every sentiment of respect and esteem,
Your most obdt. Pupils,
(Here follow the Signatures of the Students.)

The above address was read by Baboo Raj Narain Bose, after which Capt. Richardson rose and spoke nearly as follows:—

MY FRIENDS AND PUPILS,—I am sure you will give me credit for feeling as I ought on this occasion, though I am quite unable to express myself as I ought. The very presentation of your warm hearted address and elegant gift implies that you deem me worthy of it; and I certainly should not be worthy of your gratitude and good will, if I did not thoroughly reciprocate those feelings. If you are grateful and cordial—so also am I. The task of instruction has been to me a truly agreeable one, for never had a teacher in any country more earnest, more attentive and more able students. In Europe the teacher too often looks with an angry eye on disobedient pupils—the pupils too often see nothing but a tyrant in the teacher. It is very different here. Soon after I joined the College, the students instead of asking me to lessen their labours and my own, very earnestly solicited that I would double the hours of literary study. I was surprised and gratified. Such an unquenchable thirst for knowledge I have never met with in the youth of any other country, neither have I any where else ever seen so clear and cordial an understanding between the teacher and the taught. A teacher's task therefore when he has Hindoo pupils is a peculiarly light and pleasant one, for they are always willing and respectful. It is only necessary for us to point out the road to knowledge—you need never be driven. Entertaining these opinions you may believe me when I say that I part from you all with the most sincere regret, and in the land to which I am going I shall continue to think of the Hindoo College Students, with the deepest interest. Your present will serve in my native land as a morning and evening remembrancer of the kind young friends, I have left upon these shores. I shall always be delighted to hear of the prosperity of this College, and of all who have received an education, within its walls.

I wish you heartily and affectionately farewell.—Cal. Star, April 14.

THE CHARAK PUJA.

For some years past we have watched the movements connected with the Charak Pujá, and are happy to report that the attendance has been annually diminishing, this year the devotees were fewer than at any previous festival within our recollection; though even now by no means inconsiderable. But though fewer in number, it would appear that the unfortunate sufferers have been urged to endure all the tortures of the larger assemblies of former years, for never have we witnessed a greater amount of frightful lacerations inflicted on the bodies of the misguided followers of Shib. Conscious of the decay of their influence, the conductors of the orgies appeared to incite their remaining victims to increased acts of cruelty, in proof of the continuance of that zeal in the remnant which formerly existed in the masses. We write of Calcutta; in the Mofussil it is to be feared but little improvement has taken place, nay that the Charak in all its fiendish barbarity, is still vigorous within a very short distance of Calcutta. As yet it has scarcely been impinged upon save in our city. Can nothing be done to wipe away so foul a blot from the human family? We believe there can, and we hope it will be done ere another year rolls away. One word from the Government, and the Charak would take its place with Sáti and Infanticide—not a murmur would be heard save from a few interested and ignorant bigots. We would be amongst the last to advocate the interference of Government in matters of religion; but in this case religion is not concerned; the Charak has no sanction in the shástras. Moreover, it is opposed to the most grovelling ideas of decency and humanity. Here is a field in which the young men who are anxious to benefit their country might labour with honor to themselves as men, and with real benefit to their country both in the removal of that from the practices of its people which is not only a disgrace to the country, but an offence to every conception of the character of the one living and true God, and of the rites and ceremonies ordained by Him, and well pleasing in His sight. In such an effort they would secure the ready co-operation of every right-thinking man, and would prove that they entertained sentiments and dared to indulge in acts which qualified them for the most responsible offices, nor should such an opportunity of manifesting feelings of real patriotism be lost by the whole body of the native community, who are seeking to fill important official situations,—for in our estimation men who can deliberately by their wealth and presence sanction such cruelties as those practised at the Charak, are disqualified to a great extent for the right administration of any of those offices which affect the real happiness of the people. To see any number, however small, of the native community coming forward in such a cause would be indeed refreshing. We speak of the native community, because should they move in the matter the Government might be inclined to lend a more attentive ear to their solicitations; but should they not attempt anything, or unite in any effort, if begun by others, to effect the abolition of the cruelties of the Charak, then at all events and under any circumstances, we call upon our Christian friends to move in this matter—bringing to their recollection their success in the cause of Sati, Infanticide and the Government connection with Idolatry.—The Cal. Christian Advocate.

AGRICULTURAL AND HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The usual Monthly Meeting of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society, took place yesterday. The Hon'ble President not being present, the chair was taken by the Vice President, Mr. C. K. Robison.

The Secretary read the minutes of the last meeting, which were confirmed.

A letter was read, which had been addressed to the Government by the President of the Society, pointing out the great loss that would be sustained by the Society, by the withdrawal of the privilege of free postage, which was formerly allowed. The reply from Government to this letter was also read, and contained a loconic refusal of the request.

Another Government letter was read containing an extract from a recent despatch of the Court of Directors, in which the usefulness of the Society is favourably noticed, and a promise made of future assistance, with regard to the transmission of seeds to the Society from England.

A Communication was read, containing favorable accounts of the prosperous condition of the Lucknow Garden.

There were a great number of presentations and samples on the table, and these were in the usual manner disposed of. They will be noticed at large in the Honorary Secretary's report.

The report of the Cattle Committee, on the expediency of discontinuing the premiums hithe to granted by the Society for improving the breed of Cattle, was brought forward and read to the Society. The Committee were of opinion, that these premiums should not continue, on the ground that the results were not sufficiently important to render such outlay necessary. They farther suggested, that a year hence would be the best time for withdrawing such permiums, as the Society's existing engagements extend to that time.

The report drew the attention of the members to another subject of importance; namely, granting perminms for improving the wool produced in this country. The subject was referred back to the Committee for them to furnish a schedule and scale of the premiums they propose, together with the different qualities of wool for which competition ought to be encouraged.

The next was a question of very considerable importance. It was the motion relating to the proposed increase of subscription.

Mr. Speede formally resumed the motion, and thought that though the meeting was thinly attended, the question should be determined upon, as it had been standing over for a long time, and it seemed to excite little interest at present.

Mr. Hume, the Secretary, remarked that the reason for which an increased rate of subscriptions had been called for, has since been obviated by the Committee of papers undertaking the management of the new Journal. When it becomes necessary at some future period to employ the services of a paid Editor, it may also be necessary to carry out the proposed augmentation of subscription, but at present no such reason existed, and he therefore thought that no increase ought to be called for. He further remarked, that notwithstanding so much had been made of the question when originally mooted, that it would strike at the very root of the Society, &c. &c., it was strange that so little interest was now excited by the subject, and although the motion had stood over so long, so few had attended at the different meetings to determine upon the question. He seconded the resolution, moved by Mr. Speede, which was carried with some modification.

The motion as adopted stood, as follows, and it may be added, that besides the Vice Presidents, Secretaries, and Members of the Finance Committee, there was only one other member present when it was carried:—

"That the funds of the society not appearing to require at present the increased subscriptions eight rupees annually, proposed for the support of the Monthly Journal, that being met by the arrangement so kindly made by the committee of papers, without expence, the former rate of subscriptions of two gold mohurs be reverted to."

The second meeting of the Fruit and Kitchen Garden Committee having been held, the result of their proceedings was brought forward for consideration. This was a schedule enumerating the fruits for which premiums are proposed to be held out, the amount and distribution of those premiums, and other details to carry out the proposed object. As this proposition made by the Fruit and Kitchen Garden Committee, involved a money question, it was determined to refer the subject for the Finance Committee's Report and determine upon it at the next month's meeting.

Before the meeting broke up, the Prospectus of a Floricultural Society was handed round to those present, a reprint of which will be found in another place. In reference to this subject Mr. Speede gave notice of a motion to be disposed of at the next meeting, to the effect that the Agricultural Society, should encourage the project of a Floricultural Society, by aiding it in its infancy.—Beng. Hurk. April 18.

The town of Calcutta shall be in divisions, as notified by Government, 27th May, 1842, with the exception of the 4th, or Lower South division; division A therein sh ll be divided, and Wellesley-street to form the line of separation. A becomes A and B; old B to be denominated C division, in all twelve divisions in the town.

1. The municipal duties of Calcutta shall be those of ordering and superintending of matters which tend to the convenience and health of the inhabitants; those of repairing, cleaning, watering, and improving public thoroughfares, superintending, cleaning, and improving of drains and common sewers; removing of nuisances which are obnoxious to the health of the public; and to improve, ventilate and guard the highway.

For which purpose, all persons who are rate-payers shall have the privilege of determining on outlays, and on improvements, with the assessment defrays, of appointing officers for management, and of collecting municipal monies for the general benefit.

2. The assessment in no part of Calcutta shall exceed (5) five per cent. of the rent of an annual value of property assessable, unless approved by Government, and recommended by a General Municipal Council, and then never to be increased beyond ($7\frac{1}{2}$) seven and half per cent. in any case whatever.

3. Before any increase beyond 5 per cent. shall be levied, Government shall apply what means may be properly apportioned to municipal matters, viz. fines and surplus fees, lottery profits, and local stamp duties, and no "remissions" allowed.

4. In each division there shall be a central, convenient place or house for meeting, where the rate-payers shall meet annually for the election of municipal officers, notice whereof to be given fifteen days previously, with the names for candidate for officers.

5. The qualification for voting for such offices shall be simply the production of the assessency receipt for the previous quarter's assessment, either personally by the rate-payers, or by his or her proxy, which proxy shall be an inhabitant of that division, and the receipt shall be proved by the Collector's books then and there.

6. In each division shall be elected annually, three rate-payers. (by ballot) who shall each have paid at least (50) fifty rupees per annum assessment, in that division, for the property or house occupied by them, one as a Commissioner for improvements in thoroughfares, of sewers "and" Conservancy of public health in that division; one as commissioner of repairing and cleaning the roads; and one as commissioner of watering and lighting thoroughfares

7. All officers shall be elected for one year, but after expiration of that time, may be re-elected and continue in office.

8. Divisional Committees shall meet once a week, where rate-payers or their proxies, may attend and make suggestions, and if not adopted, any six of them may call a meeting of the whole rate-payers of the division to decide thereon, within five days; nevertheless the Committee may appeal to the General Municipal Committee, if public convenience, expence, or health is concerned.

9. Each of the Commissioners, or Divisional Committee men, shall be vested with the powers of a special Constable, for authority in the exercise of his commission, or in aid of the public peace; and in the absence of any of the Police Magistrates, his authority shall be obeyed by Tharadars, Chowkedars and Constables, but responsibility shall attach to the authority nevertheless.

10. A Town Council, or General Municipal Committee corporate shall be formed, as soon as three-fourths of Divisions have elected Committees: one member from each division shall be chosen by ballot of rate-payers as each common councilman, and from amongst themselves the Councilmen shall elect a chief or Mayor, but in case or equality of votes, the Governor-General in Council shall have the casting vote.

The Town Council shall meet once every month.

1st. To supervise assessment votes, to receive reports of divisions, and to examine and approve their accounts.

2d. To advise on matters tending to the common welfare of the city, and to carry out them at the common cost.

3d. To remove or dismiss any officer employed for Municipal purposes, upon proof of official incapacity or impropriety of conduct, and to appoint others, if the rate-prayers of the division neglect to appoint within reasonable time.

4th. To communicate with Government and the police authorities, and the Chief Councilmen or Mayor, when any three Common Councilmen may demand audience of the Governor-in-Council, upon giving three days notice thereof at any time.

5th. The Common Councilmen and Mayor shall be ex officio Magistrates of Police for the time being; and the Mayor to hold Her Majesty's Commission Justice of the Peace.

The Town Hall may be the place of meetings for General Municipal purposes.

11. Until the full General Council is formed, Divisional Committees shall act in conjunction, with the present establishment of Conservancy Magistrates, with whom their authority shall be received, to represent their proportion of divisions and of value of assessment.

12. The General Council shall appoint a Collector of Assessment, a Superintendent of Roads, and a Town Clerk or Recorder for the Town, each of whom shall be approved by Government, each shall have efficient assistants to manage the assessing and collecting assessments, repairing roads; and keeping public accounts and records.

Here one or two gentleman expressed their acquiescence to the reason advanced by Mr. Remfry, to leave out the clause of a voter's qualification.

Some desultory talk ensued, at the end of which Baboo Pearychand Mittre proposed a resolution, which was seconded and carried, to the effect, that the meeting should re-adjourn, that the committee should be strengthened by other gentlemen possessing information relating to municipal matters, being added to their number, that the original plan should be reconsidered along with Mr. Remfry's suggestions, and that a more matured and perfect scheme should be prepared and brought forward, at a future meeting, for adoption.

At a late hour in the evening, the meeting separated with the usual vote of thanks to the chair. —Hurk. April 17.

ENGLISH PLEADINGS IN THE SUDDER COURT.

Prannath Chowdree, and others, suitors in the Sudder, have presented a petition to the Deputy Governor, against the exclusion of their special Mookhtar, Mr. C. R. Prinsep, from pleading in English, and have prayed not only for redress in their case, but have also submitted the question of allowing pleadings to be conducted in English in all cases, the merits of which, may depend on English law and equity, and in which parties may mutually consent, to have their case argued in that language.

The petition has been referred to the Sudder for reply, and in taking up the general question as therein referred to, the Court state that the provisions of Reg. XII. 1833 has been detrimental to the respectability of their bar, and that it has given rise to the practice of under selling each other among the Vakeels, which they consider to be a practical evil inasmuch as parties are induced thereby to intrust their cases to ignorant and inefficient pleaders, and further that it has tended to exclude respectable practitioners from their bar.

They agree, provided that Regulation be rescinded, to permit pleadings to be conducted in English, and to consider admission to the bar of the Supreme Court, as ipso facto a qualification of admission to that of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut.—Englishman, April 12.

HINDOOSTAN STEAMER.

The Hindoostan Steamer arrived at Calcutta on the 23d, just twenty-four hours before the Bombay express with the first of the mails of the Atalanta: which, on this occasion, had travelled more tardily than usual. The latest papers received here on Saturday afternoon were those of the 23d, and though intimation of the Hindoostan's arrival was sent home, no answer to the letters of the Feb. packet could be returned. Our Calcutta brethren are delighted, as they well may, with the performances of the Hindoostan; and above measure gratified that she should have beat the express from Bombay. All this is quite natural, and we find no fault with their giving expression to their feelings on the occasion; but we do quarrel with the inferences they draw from it, and their rather hasty conclusion that the superior advantages of the direct communication, in conveying their mails more quickly than via Bombay, are thereby proved! A little reflection, however, might have shewn our Calcutta contemporaries that the only conclusion they are entitled to draw from the Hindoostan's voyage is, that she is a powerful and efficient steamer, and that the Bombay ones are not; for it proves nothing more; and this we would have been quite willing to concede to them without the proofs afforded. The Hindoostan beat the Atalanta two days from Suez to Aden; and assuming that she maintained the same superiority throughout the whole voyage, it follows that she must have gained five days on the latter steamer altogether! Hence, if the Atalanta had equalled the Hindoostan in speed, she would have been here five days earlier, and our Calcutta friends would have received their letters on the 18th, instead of the 23d. So much for the proofs in vindication of the direct communication scheme afforded by the Hindoostan's voyage.—The Hindoostan's speed throughout the voyage, is set down at 9.4 miles; it may not be amiss to recollect, that the speed of the Victoria, on her first voyage, was 9.25.—Bombay Times, April 5.

The Bombay Times has an article, which we copy elsewhere, in which, referring to the priority of arrival of the Hindostan, in respect to the express from Bombay, it is made to appear that, if the Mail had been carried to Bombay at the same speed as the Hindostan came to Calcutta, "our Calcutta friends would have received their letters on the 18th instead of the 23d" as per Hindostan.

Here our cotemporary, after the usual manner of Bombay, identifies the "express" with the "Mail." A reference to our paper of the 3d will shew, that even if right in his calculation as to time—only 341 letters out of 8,210 would have come on the 18th, or rather it should be the 19th, (for take 5 from 24, the day the Express came and there remain 19,) and that the last batch of 1,121 letters would not have arrived in Calcutta till the 25th!! But our cotemporary does not appear to have been aware that the Hindostan lost two days between Ceylon and Madras, and at Madras owing to an accident to the machinery.

But the probable actual future result, when the plan shall be perfected by the conveyance of the Mails equally quick to Bombay, is one of calculation. Thus the distance from Aden to Bombay is 1,641 miles, that to Calcutta 3,325 miles. The Mail for each place leaving Aden at the same time, that for Bombay at 8½ miles per hour will arrive in 8 days, 2 hours; and that for Calcutta at the Sandheads in 14 days, 14 hours: and allowing a stoppage of 12 hours at Galle and Madras, and one day from the Sandheads to Calcutta, and the Mail would reach that place from Aden in 16 days, 14 hours, giving 8 days and two hours for the Express to come from Bombay. So that, during the fair season, it may generally be expected that the Steamer and Express will arrive about the same time, and, during the four months of the S. W. Monsoon, that the Steamer will have the start of the Express two or three days. But the division of the Calcutta Mail at Bombay, its despatch piece-meal and the commencement of the arrival of the general Mail two days after the Express are never noticed by our friends on the other side, nor the additional advantage of having, beside our letters, all our packages and parcels. They confine their remarks to the letters, and, as before observed, identify the delivery of those by the express with the delivery of the whole Mail; but in addition to what we pointed out on the 3d instant it cannot be doubted, that when the Mails do come direct to Calcutta the correspondence itself will INCREASE. But there is one remark on the Bombay article, which we cannot avoid making—What we ask, has become of the merits of the old question, "Complete the line to Bombay first, and all the rest will follow." Why, by our cotemporary's own shewing, the line, so far as speed, a most material element is concerned, is now more complete to Calcutta than to Bombay!!—Hurk.

EDUCATION IN THE NORTH WEST PROVINCES.

The Friend of India has published a paper on Education on the North West Provinces to which we have given a place in our columns, being always desirous to circulate as much information as possible on that important subject. We fully agree with the writer as to the facility with which crores of rupees are lavished by the Government on useless wars, whilst a trifle can only with the greatest difficulty be wrung from the hard hands of our rulers for any public improvement. In the principal proposal of the plan before us, we do not concur, for we do not see the necessity of appointing a minister of Education for the North West Provinces. One Minister or Board of Education we should consider enough for all India, and more likely to establish a uniform and sound system of education, than a number of distinct authorities. Superintendants or inspectors might be appointed in any required number, and no doubt many well qualified persons might be found in almost every part of India. With regard to the plan of instruction proposed we agree with the writer that elementary instruction ought to be in the vernacular language. If a boy can only spare a short time for school he will be much more beneficially employed in learning the correct use of his own language, than in acquiring a smattering of ours, which he will utterly forget in a short time, unless it happen to become practically useful to him.

A suitable provision of books for such schools is a most important object, and can only be effectually performed by the aid of Government. When elementary books have once been chosen and approved they might be stereotyped, and the expence of reprinting consequently reduced to little more than the paper. A general supervision of all the primary schools undertaken by teachers on their own account would not be by any means difficult, and the encouragement proposed to be given to them in the plan before us, would undoubtedly raise their character and make them more extensively useful.

With regard to the Zillah schools, the plan embraces, we think, rather too much. A common school education ought to furnish the keys of knowledge, not knowledge itself. Where more is attempted, the danger of failure is very great: nothing can be well taught, when too much is attempted, and if a Schoolmaster is required to give instruction in things that he does not understand, he will probably be obliged to neglect those that he does. The course proposed on the plan, including Natural History, Chemistry, Physiology, Botany, Astronomy, Political Economy, Civil Engineering, Law and Jurisprudence would suffice to employ a complete circle of Professors in a regular College, but would be wholly beyond the capacity of such persons as could in general be procured to fill the laborious and not over well paid office of a Schoolmaster. The object of such schools should be to ground the scholars firmly in a few of the elements of knowledge, so as to qualify them for the acquisition of any or all the sciences above enumerated, if they should happen to have the means, the leisure, and the inclination.

All this could we think be done at the proposed Central Normal College, (we would leave out the word normal), and the institution of scholarships to be competed for openly, would bring those fitted for superior instruction to that institution. The proposal of a provision for schoolmasters, we think, quite necessary to secure the services of competent teachers. Men who have confidence in their own abilities will not stay in a toilsome service, which offers neither honors nor rewards, though there is no public department which better deserves both.—Eng. April 17.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

EDUCATION AT MADRAS.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—I have lately met with the "First Annual Report from the Governors of the Madras University, 1842." It suggests many painful considerations at the lamentably low state of Government education in that Presidency. While in the most despotic states of Europe, Austria, Russia, Prussia, Public Instruction is viewed as one of the most important departments of Government duty, it seems an opposite view prevails at Madras. I send you a brief notice of the state of things in that "benighted Presidency." The Madras University owes its origin to Lord Elphinstone. Its Governors are composed of Natives and Europeans. In 1841 the Government proposed establishing Provincial High Schools at Trinchinopoly, Masulipatam, Bellary and Calicut. It resolved also in accordance with the proposition of Lord Elphinstone to promote the spread of education among the higher class of Natives by directing that in every practicable instance the minors who are the wards of the Board of Revenue, should be educated at Institutions supported by the Government. The Governors of the Madras University are desirous of forming a department of Civil engineering. Their duties divide themselves into four departments.

1. The Madras University. This was established in April 1841 for imparting instruction in the higher branches of literature, Philosophy and Science. No pupils are admissible but such as are able to read and write the English language intelligibly. The management is under Governors, seven of whom shall be Native Hindoos or Moosulmans; the appointment of the rest is vested with the Governor in Council. Seven hours daily are spent in study. The monthly school fee is four Rupees. One great object is to attract youths from the more respectable families. The number of pupils amounts to one hundred. Many leave with their education imperfect for the purpose of obtaining situations in Government and other offices. The course of instruction comprises natural Philosophy, Moral Philosophy, Abstracts, Composition, Translation, &c. The rules respecting punishments are good. "The Head Master alone shall have authority to award corporal punishment—which is never to be inflicted on the same day that it is awarded and is to be confined to boys under 14 years of age." We are glad to find that one student passed an examination in the whole of Locke on the Human Understanding. It is satisfactory to find that the Mathematical mania, which actuates the system of instruction in Bengal, has not spread to Madras. At the express recommendation of Lord Elphinstone a Medical College and College of Engineers have been established in connection with the University. The example and success of the Calcutta Medical College has emboldened them, though the peculiarly low state of intellectual cultivation throughout the Native community of Madras is a discouragement. The qualifications for matriculation are not high, being a knowledge of English, Geography and the Elements of Natural Philosophy. It professes to found a Medical School of the same quality in principle, as the Medical Colleges in Europe, although with inferior means. A College of Civil Engineers is also proposed to be instituted. Benefits are expected to flow from it "with reference to the general and necessary use of artificial irrigation, the introduction and improvements in arts and manufactures, the stagnation of the fiscal resources of the country, from inability successfully to carry out public works through the want of Native proficients." The nature of the climate renders Natives, when educated, the best agents in this work, as they can endure exposure to all weathers. There is no deficiency of talent or ability in the Native character. In the present state of India Engineering studies are of vital importance. The branches to be taught are, the pure Mathematics, Surveying, Drawing, Geology. In filling up vacancies in public situations in the Surveying, Engineering or Building departments, a preference is to be given, ceteris paribus, to the students of this College. The Committee also propose founding a class for Jurisprudence and the study of Law, in order to qualify Natives for hereafter exercising judicial functions. The study of law as a science would thus improve the administration of justice generally. The measure has been advocated by Lord Auckland.

2. The Formation of Branch Provincial Institutions. These are to be connected with the Madras University; they are designed to provide education for the superior classes of the Provincial community. Considerable zeal has been awakened among influential members of the Native community in the provinces to encourage and support establishments of this kind. Societies have been formed for this purpose at several principal towns, and particularly at Masulipatam, at Bellary and at Cuddalore. The Government purpose organizing four. Instructions to be imparted in the English and Vernacular languages. The Government covenanted servants at the station along with five Natives are to constitute the Local Committee, to meet monthly, but the Master of the Institution is not a Member; we hope this will be altered. The Judge of the Provincial Court is to be the special visitor.

3. Education tests. The Board have unanimously decided upon "the expediency of requiring all Natives and others to pass an educational examination before they are admitted into the public service." By this they conceive essential service will be rendered to the Government by securing qualified agents and that a stimulus will also be held out to the Natives for diligence in study. Integrity of character and aptitude for business will be also taken into account; at the present it will only be applied as a right of preference, ceteris paribus. No favour will be shewn to the alumni of Government institutions above others. In the present condition of the Natives, self-interest will be the chief prompter to the acquisition of knowledge. A board of Examiners is to be constituted for conducting the proposed test examinations. Abercrombie on the Moral Feelings, Blackstone's Commentaries and the New Testament for Christians form part of the subjects.

4. Vernacular Class Books. The Board does not quite accord with the recommendations of Lord Auckland respecting the early preparation of Vernacular Class books, by means of translations. They consider that these translations assume the existence of much more knowledge than Natives can be supposed to possess—that the Vernacular languages are deficient in corresponding terms for abstract and scientific words—that, as in the higher departments of Literature and Science, instruction is imparted through the medium of the English language, few translations need be compiled for the use of the students of this grade, who would have access to the whole range of English knowledge. The Board give their opinion that "only those works which deal in simple narrative in which little occasion arises for the use of abstract terms—which relate palpable occurrences, sometimes surprising, sometimes interesting to the feelings—appear to admit of efficient translation. It has been testified on credible authority, that a translation by two European gentlemen (of familiar learning in Maharatta) and one Native Mahratta scholar, of Lord Brougham's tract on the objects, advantages, and pleasures of Science, is not only unintelligible to Mahratta readers, but that it actually became so, after five or six years, to the Mahratta Translator himself!" It has appeared to the Board that the course to be encouraged is that of a full and free exposition, rather than a translation, of all the subject matter contained in any English work, by the assistance of, or entirely by, such Natives as have attained a full comprehension of that subject matter, and also a proficiency in the English language. Whatever can be accomplished through paraphrase and through explanatory notes, to remedy deficiencies in the Vernacular language, should be attempted.

From a consideration of this Report it appears, how little has been effected by the Madras Government towards the promotion of Education; the grant by Government for educational purposes in 1841 amounted to 35,000 Rupees! less than the salary of a single Civilian! In 1832 the Company derived a revenue of four and a half millions Sterling from this Presidency and they expend about the 1-1400th part in education! Thus since Madras was finally secured to the English in 1758 by the expulsion of Count Lally, has education progressed! Madras well deserves the epithet of the "benighted Presidency." Let Mr. Thompson point the attention of the Natives to the defective state of their education, and he will render essential service to the community.

Believe me,

Yours, X. Y.

THE ONE OBJECT ON WHICH THE FRIENDS OF INDIA SHOULD CONCENTRATE THEIR EXERTIONS.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—I observe that the Indian Association seems to think that it is from England that justice to India is mainly to be expected: but I fear that a country will not generally take an effectual interest in the welfare of a remote people whose interests are not rather closely coincident with its own; nor does the past experience of the relations between India and England seem to encourage a better hope: for let it be remarked, that the moral constitution of the English is not so entirely different from what it was when the British Parliament sanctioned even the worst measures of Warren Hastings, and even the sordid and cold blooded plunder and slaughter of the Rohillas; nor is much hope of that public indignation which is sought for to be derived from a consideration of the manner in which public writers even now comment on those cruel and sordid Acts of Policy as evincing "fertility of resource," and from their ascribing the worst crimes not to the criminals, but to the circumstances of their times; a modern mode of judging which threatens to confound all distinction between rectitude and the utmost criminality of conduct.

The truth is, that England is precisely in that state of civilization wherein intellectual excitement is substituted for moral excitement, and wherein the spirit of compromise neutralizes whatever better spirit there may be.

I altogether think that the Association is looking to the wrong quarter: and to one where everything is carried on by compromise and influence derived from interest—by that influence which prevents even the boldest denouncers of the wrongs they allege from denouncing the doers of the wrong, and from blaming any one but the public—which is tantamount to blaming no one whatever.

Against an influence which can produce such mawkish forbearance in even the denouncers of the system, no association can prevail; and therefore the only hope for India seems to consist in transferring some of the influence to those whose interest it will be to apply and promote the proper remedies; and the only mode of doing this seems to consist in including the interested party—namely, the people of India with their consequent influence—in the now one-sided administration.

To this one object I would therefore wish to see the undivided energy of the association and their organ applied. It is the object which can be conceded with most grace and which can be urged with least danger of turbulence, for it is one in which the populace are not likely to take an active part: it is also an object of good—which seems to include all others; and lastly, it is an object the advocates of which are unlikely to be opposed by voluminous papers and other means of mystification.

If the Native influence acts through the administration, it will act gradually—steadily—and constitutionally; and the advancement of national right will be a national developement instead of a mere metropolitan irruption or a Mud Volcano—which latter will I fear be the result if the association continue to advocate special and metropolitan interests instead of concentrating all their energy on the one national object of obtaining for the Natives a legitimate influence in the administration.

I believe that until this be done, every law or order will as far as makes against the favoured caste be perverted or evaded as are the law declaring natives eligible to high* office and the order requiring due qualification in languages for the European who is to assume office. I, in short fully believe that no substantial and national good will be effected till we have nationalized the administration—and in so doing placed influence where it will be used—not only for the good of a dominant caste, but for the good of the people.

Your's,

CASSANDRA.

* The defence urged before the Court of Proprietors on this subject is, that the Natives are trusted with the highest judicial cases: but if they are trusted highly what pretext have we for not promoting them highly.

EUROPE.

RELIGIOUS.

Lausanne, Nov. 1, 1842.—The Rev. A. F. Lacroix has lately held six public lectures in this town, which have presented a highly interesting picture of Bengal and its Missions, whilst the various details entered into were of the most attractive description. On every occasion that Mr. L. lectured, crowds, increasingly dense, flocked to the "Oratoire," to hear the man of God speak of his labours, difficulties, success, and hopes. There were present persons of all classes and all opinions, and among them many who had hitherto been strangers to the Gospel and to Missions. Whilst gaining friends to the sacred cause he advocated, the Missionary, through the Divine blessing, has been, we doubt not, also the means of rekindling the drooping zeal of numbers amongst us, and of removing the prejudices of many more, so that he has, even in his native land, not ceased to be a true Missionary of Jesus Christ. We assure him that he carries with him the sympathy, the affection, and esteem of all those who enjoyed the privilege of hearing him.—From the Religieuse du Canton de Vaud.

Neuchatel, Nov. 8, 1842.—The Rev. A. F. Lacroix, Missionary in Bengal, has held in our town, as he had previously done at Geneva and Lausanne, a course of public lectures on the work to which he has for more than twenty years devoted his life. The interest which he had excited among our neighbours of the cantons of Geneva and Vaud, has been reproduced at Neuchatel, in all its force; nay, the circumstance of Mr. Lacroix being our own countryman, and that there are still amongst us many of the friends of his youth, gave an additional impulse to public curiosity on his behalf. The first two lectures were delivered in the "Oratoire des Bercles;" but the crowded auditory soon rendered it necessary to select a more spacious building. The Great Concert-hall was fixed upon, but even that soon proved too small likewise, and the last lecture was held in our largest church, which had been placed at Mr. Lacroix's disposal by the public authorities. Each of the meetings lasted upwards of two hours, and they were attended by persons of every age and every rank. After having described the religion and religious practices of the Hindus, the means employed for their conversion, and the obstacles to the spread of the Gospel peculiar to India, the Missionary dwelt at length on the prospects which that country affords, and which he considered as most cheering and encouraging. Mr. Lacroix is labouring in connexion with the London Missionary Society, which distinguishes itself from the Episcopal and other British Societies, inasmuch as it has nothing sectarian in its constitution, but aims solely at the propagation of the pure Gospel of Jesus Christ. The largeness and catholicity of Mr. Lacroix's own views seem to correspond with the character of that noble Society, and his sympathy with it in this respect, no doubt, was that which prompted him to join it. The extensive information which his discourses display,—the acuteness and sometimes the depth of his remarks,—the life and natural simplicity of his narratives,—the curious and entertaining details with which they are interspersed,—his perfect sincerity, which does not hide from view any discouraging circumstances that may exist,—his vigorous manner which indicates the energy of his character,—and, above all, his firm reliance on Him in whose name he has gone forth to preach, and who alone is able to crown his efforts with success. All these qualifications united in one man, truly are well calculated to create interest; and accordingly, the liveliest and most general interest was excited among us by this devoted Missionary. May the good impressions produced be permanent!—From the Constitutionel Neuchatelois.

Burning of Bibles by Hundreds.—A letter from a gentleman in Chazy, Clinton county, New York, dated 28th Nov., says:—"We had a sort of auto-de-fe at the Carbo, (a village in the township of Champlain,) a short time since. The Roman Catholics had a protracted meeting, and during its progress they called in all the Protestant Bibles which had been distributed and purchased among them (except some few who would not give them up) and made a public bonfire of them. It was said by those who witnessed it, that the number thus burned was beween two and three hundred. Efforts were made to purchase them, but to no effect. We have had public meetings both here and in Champlain, to give some expression of sentiment in regard to the wicked toutrage.—New York Journal of Commerce.

Ecclesiastical Provision of the Metropolis.—The January Number of the London City Mission Magazine contains a Summary, in a Tabular form, of the Population of every Parish in and near the Metropolis, and of the number of Sittings in every Place of Worship; the result, evidently, of considerable labour, and deserving of the most serious attention from all who feel interested in either the temporal or the eternal welfare of the two millions of individuals concentrated within the Metropolitan Circle. The general result is as follows:—

| | Parishes. | Population. | Est. Ch. | Sittings. | Other. Denom. | Sittings. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| City of London within the walls | 98 | 54,626 | 60 | 32,346 | 21 | 18,610 |
| City, without the walls.... | 10 | 70,449 | 13 | 15,317 | 20 | 10,400 |
| Southwark | 6 | 98,668 | 15 | 12,700 | 26 | 14,360 |
| Westminster...... | 10 | 222,043 | 36 | 39,982 | 35 | 20,708 |
| Out parishes within the Bills of Mortality | 22 | 905,538 | 100 | 119,212 | 187 | 110,280 |
| Out-parishes not included ...... | 5 | 360,113 | 46 | 58,255 | 53 | 31,242 |
| Parishes added to Metropolitan Registration Districts .. | 10 | 153,907 | 25 | 29,240 | 46 | 26,632 |
| Additional within eight Miles of St. Paul's.... | 29 | 182,041 | 55 | 44,153 | 59 | 17,996 |
| | 190 | 2,022,384 | 350 | 351,290 | 447 | 250,228 |

The Establishment, it will be seen, has provided 350 churches and chapels; but so ill are these distributed, that while, in the City, there is accommodation in the churches for more than half the population, in other districts there are not sittings for more than an eighth. The 447 non-established places of worship not only out-number those of the Establishment by nearly a hundred, but are much more equally distributed in reference to the population: they are less spacious, indeed, but, with fewer sittings, they have generally more attendants. Together, the sittings in the 797 places of worship, are 601,518. "At the lowest calculation," the writer says, "one-half of the population ought to be provided with church room." This is not quite correct; for the calculation generally adopted is two-fifths. This would make the number of sittings required for a population of two millions, 800,000; and the deficiency of actual church room, would then be 200,000. In other words, there is a want of ecclesiastical provision for half a million, or one-fourth of the population. But this comes very short of the fact; for, taking into account the location of the existing places of worship, and their unequal distribution, there would be found no available provision, probably, for much more than half the population. This is certainly the case in some parts of the Metropolitan Circle. The contiguous parishes of Bethnal Green, Shoreditch, Stepney, Limehouse, Shadwell, St. George Whitechapel, Spitalfields and Wapping, contain an aggregate population of 372,713, for which the Established Church has provided only 42,075 sittings and the non-established churches, 42.970; together, 85.045. But, for two-fifths of the population, there would be required 149,084, leaving a deficiency of above 64,000 unprovided for; so that sixty new churches and chapels, each containing 1,000 sittings, would not accommodate the whole of those who ought to be found within the places of worship on the Lord's-day.

But are the present places filled, or would new ones be occupied? "Educated and intelligent persons," it is remarked by the writer of a sensible paper on Domiciliary Visitation in the same Number, "in respectable neighbourhoods, needing a church and chapel, will attend as soon as the place is opened; but it is not so with the illiterate and neglected poor." In proof of this, he adduces the following striking facts in reference to the new churches in Bethnal Green:—

"On the morning of November 27, 1842, at St. Peter's church, which will seat 1,200 pesons, there were present 194 adults, 149 children, and four teachers. At St. James-the-Less, which also provides 1,200 sittings, there were 97 adults, 162 children, and six teachers. Both these churches are well situated. The first is in the Hackney-road, and the other at the intended entrance to the Victoria Park, and the population is not of that poor or debased character which is so difficult to work upon by new churches. In St. Philip's church, on the morning of November 20, 1842, there were present 26 adults, 1[illegible] children, with five teachers; and in St. Andrew's there were 40 adults, 138 children, and five teachers. Each of these churches have about 1.200 sittings. The last church has been opened about twelve months, and the attendance was larger than usual. One Sabbath morning in September there were only seven adults present. These are FACTS, and plainly show, that some additional agency is required, and of another class, in order to interest the people."

The actual attendance at churches and chapels of all denominations, is much smaller than is generally supposed, even by those who have paid attention to the subject. The writer expresses his conviction that, of the 600,000 sittings provided, not two-thirds are occupied on the Lord's-day at either the morning or evening service; so that, instead of there being an attendance of two-fifths of the population, the attendance is short of one-fifth. A large proportion of the population of the Metropolis leave their homes on the Sunday on excursions by steamers, railways, or coaches. On the 4th of September, 1842, according to calculations carefully made, nearly 20,000 went up the river by steamers to Chelsea, Putney, and Richmond, and 50,000 down the river to Greenwich, Woolwich, and Gravesend. Taking the number conveyed by railway trains and pleasure vans at 20,000 more, we shall have a total of 100,000, who, when the weather permits, and absent from London during the hours that its churches and chapels are open on the Lord's-day.

Under these circumstances, without denying that, in many localities, places of worship are wanted, and that, if built, congregations might be attracted by an effective Ministry, we must contend, that to identify Church-extension with Church-building, is either a grievous mistake or a dishonest fraud. It is not for want of church-room that the poorer classes are found neglecting public worship. Free sittings will not tempt the poor into the churches, nor will the abolition of pews lead to crowded benches. It is evident that the Missionary is wanted, before the Pastor can gather them to listen to his pulpit instructions. The stated performances of the preacher or the priest may be indefinitely multiplied, and still, the mass of the population will not by such means be rescued from heathenism. With the onerous pastoral and ecclesiastical duties already devolving upon Christian Ministers, little can be expected from them in the way of domiciliary visitation or missionary work. "The Christian Instruction Society," and "City Mission," are maintaining an invaluable species of agency, the importance of which cannot be too highly estimated, unless it is supposed to be adequate to the extent and nature of the demand. Neither State craft nor Priestcraft can provide the requisite machinery, or create the motive power that must give it efficiency. Nothing short of a Heaven-taught benevolence,—a love of souls for whom Christ died, can furnish an adequate motive. Experience proves, however, that only working men can gain access to working men,—only poor men can effectively gain the poor. The Apostle Paul tells us, that "to the weak he became as weak, that he might gain the weak;" he was made "all things to all men, that he might by all means save some." The Romish Church, in her missionaries and her mendicant orders, has acted out this principle with success worthy of a better cause. Protestants have been slow to learn this lesson: Prelacy frowns upon such humble instrumentality; Presbyterianism does not favour it. Methodism alone has, in its primitive form, come down to the level of those whom it has sought to save. But the intelligence, scepticism, and irreligion of the artisans of the present day require to be dealed with by robust minds of their own order in the way of a closer intercourse than that of the ostensible teacher with his congregation. As the heathen world must be evangelized by native teachers, so, we are deeply persuaded, must our home population be re-Christianised, or reclaimed to Christianity, by a popular instrumentality, not raised above, but springing from and blending with the people, and becoming "all things to all men," that it may save all.—Pat.

Proposed Union of the Sees of St. Asaph and Bangor.—On Thursday last, in pursuance of an appointment by the Archdeacon of Ely, in compliance with a requisition, an assembly of the clergy took place at the vestry in St. Michael's Church, Cambridge, and from thence adjourned to the Combination room of Caius College, where a petition against the proposed union of the above sees was unanimously adopted, and received the signatures of all present, to the number of between 40 and 50. A petition in favour of Church extension was also submitted to the meeting, which designated the Church as "The Protestant Reformed Episcopal Church." An amendment was moved by the Rev. J. Warren, of Graneley, and seconded by the Rev. — Collison, Fellow of St. Peter's College, that the words "Protestant Reformed" be omitted. After one or two observations (discussion on the subject being deprecated by the majority of those present), the amendment was put and lost, six hands only being held up in its favour. The second petition was adopted, and the meeting separated.—Ibid.

Lectures in Switzerland on Christian Missions in India, by the Rev. A. F. Lacroix.—The Rev. A. F. Lacroix, agreeably to an announcement, has delivered his lectures on India and Indian Missions, which have attracted a daily increasing concourse of hearers. Mr. L. interspersed his highly instructive statements with a number of entertaining anecdotes, and thus contributed to the pleasure, as well as to the edification of the large assemblies, who listened to him. A very gratifying effect of his exertions has been the bringing together of Christians of various denominations, of which the last meeting, especially, offered a most affecting specimen. Mr. Lacroix terminated his labours by a powerful appeal to his hearers, in which he forcibly urged them to take an active share in the eminently Christian work of Missions. The last lecture was delivered in the spacious church of "La Madelaine," which on that occasion was more crowded than it perhaps had ever been before. It is calculated that upwards of three thousand persons were present. The anxiety thus exhibited by our population to attend meetings of this nature is a truly pleasing omen, and leads one to expect the happiest fruits for the future. Mr. Lacroix's taking leave was peculiarly solemn and affecting; and the numerous auditors, by the evident tokens of sensibility they manifested, showed the high value they placed on the instructions they had been privileged to receive from the Missionary, as well as their unfeigned regret at hearing him for the last time. The president of the Committee of Missions then rose, and publicly thanked Mr. Lacroix, in the name of the clergy and people of Geneva, for the good he had been the means of effecting among them. In doing this, his faltering voice, and the tears which nearly prevented his utterance, testified even more eloquently than his words how deeply he felt on this solemn occasion. We sincerely hope that the salutary impressions which Mr. Lacroix has left in the hearts of our population will prove a lasting blessing to Geneva.—From the Fédéral de Genève.

THE NON-INTRUSION QUESTION.—Do we then, it may be asked, mean to defend this principle of English law, which renders a Christian minister liable to penalties for the due and conscientious discharge of his spiritual functions, and which compels him to perform spiritual acts in obedience to secular authority? Because the Church of England is reduced to this state of inglorious bondage to the Civil Power, does that form any reason that the Kirk of Scotland, which acknowledges no earthly Head, should be deprived of her legislative independence and freedom of action in matters spiritual?

Our reply shall be frank and explicit. It is our deliberate conviction, that no Ecclesiastical Establishment can exist upon other conditions, without danger to the liberties of the subject, as well as to the public weal. Every subject of a free Government has a right to claim full and complete protection at the hands of the Civil Magistrate, against any wrong or injury done to him on any pretence whatever; and that protection would not be complete, were he liable to wrong or injury, as the consequence of the spiritual acts of the clergy,—those acts having been rendered by law necessary to his enjoyment of any civil rights. Unless civil consequences followed from the performance or non-performance of such spiritual acts, no wrong could be done, and no ground would then exist for the interposition of the State. But, as soon as the temporalities of an Establishment are mixed up with the spiritualities of a Church, a man becomes liable to loss or injury in his civil interests, upon grounds of which the law takes no cognizance; alleged offences against order or discipline, not punishable by law, and the punishment of which, therefore, must be contrary to law,—a wrong done, for which the State is bound to provide a remedy.

Let us put a case by way of illustration. Let it be supposed, for a moment, that the Ministers of Dissenting churches were employed and authorized by the State to perform certain acts which should be a prerequisite for the enjoyment of any civil rights appertaining to the members of their churches; that no Dissenter, for instance, could exercise the franchise, or obtain a place in the Custom-house, or succeed to a legacy, without a certificate of membership; or, that no minister chosen by a congregation as their pastor, could be admitted to the pulpit, or claim an interest in any endowment, unless he were first ordained by certain Reverend Gentlemen of his own denomination;—would we wish that Dissenting Ministers should be liable to an action for damages for refusing to certify or to ordain under such circumstances? Unequivocally, yes. The moment that Dissenting Ministers are invested with functions involving a delegated State authority or power, we will pray that their hands may be tied, and will claim protection against them.

Dissenting Ministers are fallible men, and Dissenting congregations are composed of fallible men; they may, therefore, in the conscientious discharge of their religious duties, both err and do wrong. But it is the glory of the Voluntary Principle, upon which the apostolic churches of unendowed Protestantism are founded, that no member of them is liable to civil wrong, as the consequence of being dealt with as a spiritual offender. If denied the privilege of religious communion, he sustains thereby no civil injury. Excommunication inflicts upon him no civil penalty; and injustice exercised towards him carries with it its own remedy, by losing all its punitive force. He whose kingdom is not of this world, has committed to the hands of his ministers neither the sword nor the keys of jurisdictive power. "The princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion and authority over them; but it shall not be so among you." Nor is it so, where the primitive law of Christian institutions is adhered to; and Christianity is not answerable for those State Establishments which contravene the design of the ordinances of Christ.—Pat.

COMPARATIVE LIBERALITY OF AMERICAN CHURCHES.—The New York Evangelist gives the following as the result of an investigation of the amount given by the several religious denominations, for the spread of the Gospel. "The Baptists, now, in this country give about twenty-five cents a year; Methodists, thirty-five cents; Episcopalians, fifty cents; Presbyterians, seventy-five cents; Congregationalists, one dollar.—Baptist Record.

RELIGION IN AUSTRIA.—It appears, from a recent statistical return, that there are, in Austria and its dependencies, including its Italian territory, 25,500 000 Catholics, 3,500,000 members of the United Greek Church, 2,900,000 of the Non-United, 1,260,000 Lutherans, 2,240,000 of the Reformed Church, 45,000 Socinians, and 600,000 Jews. The number of religious houses for men amounts to 768, comprising 10,354 persons, and including 27 religious orders. The Brothers of Mercy possess 34 houses and 542 inmates; the Benedictines 37, and 1,093 inmates; and the Capuchins 93, and 1,293 inmates. There are 157 convents, containing 3,661 women.—Pat.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PITCAIRN'S ISLAND.—A letter in the Hampshire Telegraph gives a brief account of a late visit to this island, by H. M. frigate Curaçou. Most of the officers were enabled to land, and were received by its interesting inhabitants with that welcome which they are ever so ready to afford to those who have the opportunity of visiting them; indeed, the arrival of the Curaçou was most opportune, for they had been labouring under a severe epidemic, which the kind exertions of the Surgeon, together with a supply of medicines presented to them by Captain Jones, tended much to alleviate. On the second day, they were presented with the stores sent them by Her Majesty's Government, consisting of a supply of arms and ammunition, spades, iron kettles, &c., receiving, at the same time, an address from Captain Jones, in which, after giving them all the credit due for their hitherto exemplary conduct, he admonished them to continue in the same quiet and peaceable way, as any dereliction would withdraw from them the support of Her Majesty's Government. They have increased in number to 114; the oldest person on the island being the wife of Christian, the chief of the mutineers, and one of those Otaheitians, who sailed in the Bounty from Otaheite to Pitcairn's Island; she perfectly recollects the landing of Captain Cook at Otaheite.

OWHYHEE.—The Curaçou afterwards visited this island. It was here that Captain Cook lost his life, "and the only monument which marks the spot on which he fell, is the stump of an old cocoa-nut tree, with a sheet of copper nailed on it some years ago by H. M. S. Imogene. An old gray-headed native, who lived in a hut close to the spot, intimated to some of the officers that he was present at the tragical event, and actually went through a kind of pantomimic representation of the whole scene—the first attack with stones—the retreat of Cook to the boats—his death—the fear of the natives when the ship fired upon them, which he exemplified by falling down and creeping upon his belly behind the nearest bush, and then the roasting and eating of the body on a hill out of the reach of the shot. The representation was too perfect to admit of a doubt as to his having been an eye-witness, if not an actor in the business. A large party of the officers visited the famous volcano of Kiranea, situate about twenty miles from the anchorage, and deemed the largest and in the most active state of any in the known world—the circumference of the crater being about thirteen or fourteen miles; and its depth a thousand feet below the level of the surrounding plain, from which it appears to have at once sunk perpendicularly down. They descended, with a guide, into the great crater, and after walking over some miles of its uneven surface, arrived at a lake of red hot burning lava, of at least three miles in circumference; they returned on the seventh day to the ship, highly gratified with the excursion, and deeming themselves amply repaid for all the inconveniences and severe toil they had encountered on their journey.

AUTOMATON.—A mechanician of a little town in Bohemia, says the Constitutionnel, has constructed an automaton which imitates perfectly the human vice, particularly the soprano notes. It sings several difficult airs with the greatest accuracy. Shakes, runs, and chromatic scales are all executed with surprising precision. This automaton, in singing, even pronounces certain words, so as to be easily understood. —Athenæum.

STEAM BAKED BREAD, A LA VIENNA.—It has been known for some time at Vienna that if the hearth of an oven be cleaned with a moistened wisp of straw, bread baked therein immediately afterwards presents a much better appearance, the crust having a beautiful yellow tint. It was thence inferred that this peculiarity must be attributed to the vapour, which being condensed on the roof of the oven, fell back on the bread. At Paris, in order to secure with certainty so desirable an appearance, the following arrangement is practised:—The hearth of the oven is laid so as to form an inclined plane, with a rise of about 11 inches in three feet, and the arch roof is built lower at the end nearest the door, as compared with the furthest extremity. When the oven is charged, the entrance is closed with a wet bundle of straw. By this arrangement the steam is driven down on the bread, and a golden yellow crust is given to the bread, as if it had been previously covered with the yolk of an egg.—Annals of Chymistry.

DISAPPOINTED EXPECTANTS OF PEERAGES.—There are a section of Peel's majority, who have been clamouring for places and peerages, who have commenced declaring openly that they have got nothing by their support of him. Of two who thus speak I am well aware—they are Sir Francis Burdett and Sir Charles Coote, who demand, in reward for their treacherous abandonment of Liberal principles, the peerages which through political life they have both so urgently sought, and which the Whigs, while in office, refused to bestow upon them. There are several others in the same position; and although they will not directly support the Opposition, yet they say that they will not, as before, come to the rescue of Peel, should he be placed in a dilemma.—Hants Independent.

A MATERNAL RETREAT.—Captain Nowlan, a guardian of the South Dublin Union, states that a man, holding a high station in society, has allowed his mother to remain a pauper in the workhouse. He had lately called and paid for her support, but still left her there, with the intention of using the institution "as a cheap boarding-house for his old mother." It has been also ascertained, that the mothers of five other substantial citizens are in the house; and Captain Nowlan threatens to parade them all in an open carriage through the town, and leave them at the doors of their unfeeling children.—Pat.

THE DEAN OF PETERBOROUGH.—On Monday last in the forenoon, a young woman, residing in the parish of Milton, with a view to self-destruction, threw herself into the Northampton arm of the Grand Junction Canal, a little above Milton-bridge. Most providentially (as nobody else was at hand) the Dean of Peterborough (Dr. Butler,) who was riding from Gayton to Northampton, arrived at the spot just in time to witness her last struggles, and see her sink beneath the surface. He immediately sprang into the water, and was fortunate enough to rescue her, though in an insensible state, before life was extinct. After some time, having obtained assistance, he had her conveyed to the Navigation Inn, at no great distance from the spot, where, under the usual treatment, she was restored to animation, and is now doing well. We understand that the cause of her rash conduct was distress of mind, aggravated by some sharp words which had passed between her and an acquaintance of her own sex. We are happy to learn that the Dean, notwithstanding the severity of the cold and the length of time that he was in the water has suffered no inconvenience.—Northampton Herald.

PLYMOUTH, JAN. 15.—The wind having moderated and gone round to the north, the position of the stranded brigs is somewhat improved in reference to saving their cargoes. The cargo of the Seawitch is valued at about 35,000*l.* At the time of stranding she had on board several horses, two of which were safely landed yesterday. Her captain states, that when she went ashore on Friday her chains parted one after the other with a noise similar to the report of a double-barrelled gun. A small portion of the Southampton's cargo was brought ashore yesterday; the whole is valued at 15,000*l.* The General Brock is in a hopeless position; her loss is supposed to have been occasioned by the barque Euphrates driving against her when dragging her anchors. The barque was saved, the brig lost. The position of the Euphrates was at one time very perilous, and hatchets were kept ready to cut away her masts. This barque is bound to Calcutta, and it is stated that she has specie to the value of 150,000*l.* aboard, and 50 tons of Congreve rockets. —Pat.

"TIME IS MONEY," so Franklin said. It is very true, and some people take plenty of it to pay their debts.—Ibid.

LOUIS PHILIPPE.—Another liberal encouragement of English art has just been evinced by the King of the French. The artist, Mr. Thomas Shotter Boys, has been honoured by the present of an elegant watch and chain of the most superior French workmanship, in compliment to his recent views of "London as it is." A first work had been rewarded by the forwarding of a brilliant ring, composed of the cyphers of Louis Philippe, surmounted by the Royal crown; but which, then, from the similarity of names between the artist and publisher, was addressed to the latter.—Ibid.

COMMERCIAL WARFARE AGAINST ENGLAND. —A new weekly paper has just been established in the south of Germany, under the title of Das Zoll- vereinsblatt (the customs-union) with the avowed object of preaching a commercial warfare against England. It is edited by the well known German-American List,* who has been for some time engaged in stirring up a hostile spirit against this country through the medium of the German press, and the new periodical is published by the celebrated Baron Cotta, the wealthy proprietor of the Augsburg Gazette, and all the resources of the publisher, it seems, are to be put in force to push the political bantling into as wide a circulation as possible.—Chronicle.

FRANCE AND CHINA.—Count de Ratti-Menton, says the Constitutionnel, has been named Consul at Canton. He is to set out in a short time, charged to draw up a work on the commercial relations that France may have in future with the Chinese empire. —Pat.

THE PRESS IN PRUSSIA.—A young poet, of the name of Herwegh, a native of Switzerland, who had for some time been connected with a Leipzig newspaper, was about to undertake the management of a newspaper at Konigsberg. The democratical spirit of his writings had alarmed the Prussian Government. The King sent for Mr. Herwegh; endeavoured, it would appear, to conciliate him by professions of personal respect, and to intimidate him by declarations of professional relentlessness; and dismissed him with the chivalrous declaration, "We will be honourable enemies." On the same day that this interview took place, the Ministers of the King prohibited the publication of the Journal Mr. Herwegh was about to edite. The poet addressed a letter to the King, the contents of which he professed "are strictly betwixt ourselves," but which somehow or other found its way into the Leipsig Universal Journal, with which the writer is known to be connected. Mr. Herwegh has in consequence been ordered to withdraw from the Prussian dominions; and an ordinance has been issued forbidding the Prussian post-offices to transmit the Leipsig Universal Journal; in consequence of which, the proprietor says he must discontinue publishing it.—Ibid.

COLONEL WEBB, Editor of the New York Courier, who was sentenced to two years' imprisonment for fighting a duel, has been pardoned by Governor Seward; thus encouraging sin in one of its most fatal forms.—Ibid.

GOLD MINES IN RUSSIA.—At the sitting of the Academy of Sciences, Paris, on Monday week, a paper was read on the recent discovery of a mass of native gold, weighing 36 kilogrammes, (about 80 English pounds,) on the eastern side of the Oural. This enormous mass, which is double the size of any hitherto discovered, was found a few feet beneath the surface, under singular circumstances. The establishment formed at this part of the Oural, for the purpose of seeking for gold, had tried every part of the ground near it, and the speculation being deemed a hopeless one, it was abandoned, and the buildings which had been erected were demolished. It was precisely in the ground on which one of these buildings had stood that this mass of gold was found. M. de Humboldt, who made the communication to the Academy, added some interesting facts relative to the gold-mining industry of Russia. It appears, such is the prodigious increase of washed gold in Russia, and especially in Siberia, to the east of the southern chain of the Oural, that the total produce in the year 1842 amounted to 16,000 kilogrammes, of which Siberia alone furnishes 7,800 kilogrammes. This is the produce to the Russian Government; but we have reason to believe that the real amount of produce is larger, and that five per cent. in value is secreted by the agents who are employed to superintend the operations.—Galignani.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY IN TUNIS.—Advices from Tunis, of the 20th ult., published by the Journal des Debats, announce that the Bey had, of his own free will, proclaimed the freedom of the children of slaves hereafter born in the Regency. A fortuitous circumstance led to the adoption of that measure. A black family, doomed to be sold separately, had taken refuge in the house of M. de Lagau, the Consul General of France, and claimed his protection. The next morning M. de Lagau waited on the Bey, and His Highness was so moved by the painful picture which the Consul drew of the wretched fate which awaited that family, that, after interrogating the father and mother, he ordered his Minister to purchase them, and treat them with the greatest kindness, and then, turning to their child, he told him that he was free, and solemnly declared that all the children who should hereafter be born in the Regency should be free. This decision was immediately promulgated, and was to be strictly executed.—Pat.

No. 76 of 1843.—With the view of maintaining efficient in numbers the three Regiments of Native Infantry named in the margin, under orders for Scinde, the Honourable the President in Council is pleased to direct that the following measures shall have effect from the 1st instant.

9th Regiment N. I.
10th Regiment N. I.
55th Regiment N. I.

The Recruits belonging to the Corps above mentioned, amounting to about 350 men, to be formed into a Depot at Ferozepore.

For the charge and instruction of this body, one Officer on a Staff Salary of Rupees (200) Two Hundred per month, and an Adjutant will be nominated, together with a serjeant Major, a Drill Havildar, and the usual proportion of Drill Instructors from Corps at the Station.

The Depot to be formed into 3 Companies and an allowance of Rupees (25) Twenty-five per mensem for repairs of Arms, &c., to be granted for each.

A proportional Hospital and Quarter Master's Establishment is sanctioned.

The Pay of the Recruits will be drawn by the Officers Commanding the Depot, and their Accounts kept distinct from their Regiments.

It being deemed also expedient that the Corps in question should be maintained complete to the increased Establishment of 100 Privates per Company until their return from Scinde, the Honourable the President in Council is pleased, at the recommendation of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, to sanction the enlistment by the Officers Commanding at Seetapore and Sultanpore in Oude, and the Adjutant of the 43d Regiment N. I. at Futtehgurh of 120 Recruits each, for one of the three abovementioned Regiments.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MEMORIALS OF AFFGHANISTAN.

BY J. H. STOCQUELER.

ON the 15th of April, 1843, will be published, in one volume, the whole of the dispatches, narratives, state papers, &c. connected with the expedition to, and occupation of, Affghanistan, between the 1st of October, 1838, and the 1st October, 1842. These documents, arranged in chronological order, will be connected by a brief and succinct narrative of the operations in Affghanistan and Scinde, commencing with the assembly of the Army of the Indus at Ferozepore, and terminating with the evacuation of the former state after the restoration of the prisoners.

The object of this work is to present, at one view, the whole of the occurrences which have distinguished a most eventful period of British Indian History, and thus to facilitate the references of the student, the politician, and the soldier.

The work will be illustrated with sketches of remarkable places, striking incidents, portraits, costumes, &c. &c.

PRICE 20 RUPEES.

☞ Amongst the documents contained in this work will be found Lord Auckland's Proclamation, the despatches of Sir John Keane, General Wiltshire, General Sale, Sir Willoughby Cotton, General Pollock, General Nott, &c.; the narratives of Captain Outram's pursuit of Dost Mahomed: of Captain Gray's escape; of the destruction of the Goorkha Battalion; of Captain Ferris's escape from Pesh Bolak; of the disaster which befell Skinner's horse in the Bolan Pass; of Major Brown's defence of Kahun; of the defence of Kyelat-i-Ghilzie; of the rise and progress of the insurrection at Cabul; of the retreat from Cabul to Jellalabad, &c.; Lord Ellenborough's Proclamation, &c. &c.

AGENCY FOR THE RECEIPT AND TRANSMISSION OF PACKAGES BY THE MONTHLY STEAMERS TO AND FROM INDIA.

MR. THOMAS HILL, Agent at Southampton for the Oriental and Peninsular Steam Navigation Company, having opened an Office at that port for the purpose abovementioned, begs to submit to the Indian public the rates and conditions upon which packages are received and forwarded. Mr. HILL feels assured, from the advantages of his position, that he will be enabled to afford the highest satisfaction to those who may honour his Agency with their support.

Bombay, Ceylon, Madras, and Calcutta.—For each parcel 5*s.* with 5 per cent. on the value (Assurance, Guarantee, &c.) and further 1*s.* for every lb. to the extent of 12*lb.*; for every lb. beyond 12*lb.*, 10*d.* to the extent of 24*lb.*; for every lb. beyond 24*lb.*, 8*d.* to the extent of 36*lb.*; and for every lb. beyond 36*lb.* 6*d.* to the extent of 50*lb.*

Packages despatched by T. HILL are forwarded through Egypt with the Mails, and under ordinary circumstances reach Bombay in 35 days; Ceylon 40; Madras 45; and Calcutta 48 days.

Letters of advice to be sent to T. HILL, or his Agents when a package is sent off to their address, stating contents and value.

Payment of charges is required to be made by Post or otherwise immediately the sender is apprised of the amount, otherwise the Package will be registered as unpaid and charged double, which must be paid before it can be delivered up or forwarded.

Dues and Duties in England, as well as in Egypt, will be paid by T. H. out of the above rates.

Packing in Tin, being absolutely necessary for the protection of Jewellery, Apparel, Books and Medicines from the Sea air, &c. the same will be done at Southampton and Calcutta free of charge.

A Declaration of true value must be sent in the absence of which no package can be registered.

A Receipt will be forwarded to the Owner as soon as the package comes to hand, which Receipt need not be sent out or home to claim the property.

Damage or Loss occasioned by the Act of God, the Queen's Enemies, Vermin, or fire, afloat or on land, and all other dangers of the Seas, Rivers, Steam, and Navigation whatsoever, agreed to be borne and made good.—T. HILL takes upon himself this additional responsibility in consequence of the frequent loss of property from some of the abovenamed causes, and knowing that it is seldom an individual thinks it worth the trouble and expense of opening a Policy for a small amount.

CAUTION.—T. H. will not be responsible in any way for a package containing a Letter, Bill of Exchange, Money, or any Liquid or dangerous substances; but will hold the sender responsible for any evil consequences proceeding from the same.

Discussions in Parliament on the Affghan Campaign of last year.—The last mail has brought intelligence of the thanks voted by both Houses of Parliament to the Officers and troops who retrieved the honour of our arms in Affghanistan, and brought the war in China to a triumphant issue. Never were thanks more richly earned, or more cordially bestowed. They referred to a series of exertions which have raised our national credit to a pitch it had never yet reached in Asia, and extended our influence through the large countries of Eastern Asia, where it had never been felt before. The warm and grateful language which men of opposite sentiments vied with each other in adopting on this occasion, will not fail to impart an emotion of peculiar delight to those who were engaged in these arduous campaigns.

Thanks have also been voted—unanimously with one exception—to Lord Ellenborough, for the share which he bore in these transactions; for "the ability and judgement with which the resources of the British empire in India were applied in the support of the Military operations in Affghanistan." This vote of thanks was preceded by the publication of a Blue book, containing a portion of the public documents which refer to the last campaign; and it supplies us with evidence of certain important facts, our knowledge of which previously rested on imperfect authority. To these we shall presently revert. It has now been solemnly declared by the verdict of the two estates of Parliament, that Lord Ellenborough did apply the resources of the British empire in India, in support of those operations, and that they were applied with such judgement and ability, as to merit the highest praise which an Englishman can receive. The natural inference from this vote is, that these judicious and able exertions contributed to the success of that campaign. At the risk of incurring the censure of the Standard as a member of that "ill conditioned press whose calumnies no man can escape," we venture to question the truth of this assertion, and to affirm that the future historian, writing under the influence of truth, will find this vote of no other use than to shew the extent to which party spirit may successfully misrepresent facts even in the highest quarter. It is as well known in India, as that the sun set yesterday evening, that the troops, the provisions, and the cattle, with which General Nott advanced on Ghuzni and Cabul were supplied by the energy of Lord Auckland's Government, and not by that of his successor. The entire force under General Pollock which achieved these successes had also been despatched into Affghanistan by Lord Auckland; and not one additional soldier was sent by Lord Ellenborough. It is true that he did expedite the despatch of cattle, but those which were first sent were intended to bring back the troops, and not to support military operations in Affghanistan; those which were last sent did not arrive in time. Sir Robert Peel has quoted letters from Lord Ellenborough, which state that every possible effort had been made to supply General Pollock's force with carriage and to provide for the expected wants of General Nott's force when it joined the Army in the Cabul valley; and that not fewer than sixteen thousand head of cattle had been provided. But we are also informed that this provision was made during the ten weeks preceding the 8th of September, that is after the 4th of July, when Lord Ellenborough suddenly changed his mind, and gave General Nott permission to retire by way of Cabul on his own responsibility. If these supplies had been pushed on after the letter of the 15th of March was sent to the Commander-in-Chief, they would have arrived in time to assist the progress of General Pollock. But they were not despatched till after Lord Ellenborough had allowed three months of golden time to slip through his fingers, during which he did nothing but reiterate his orders to retire. The consequence was that General Pollock was obliged to march without any of the Sixteen thousand head of cattle,—excepting that portion which had been hired at Peshawur, and that when he did advance, he was so crippled in his means of transport as to be able to advance only a single brigade at a time. If his Lordship deserves the thanks of Parliament for such an application of the resources of India to the recovery of our honour in Affghanistan, how shall we estimate the debt of gratitude due to Lord Auckland who sent forward all the troops and four-fifths of the means of transport, by which that triumph was achieved.

Sir Robert Peel in the course of his speech is said to have drawn "a spirited parallel between the weak and miserable plight in which Lord Ellenborough at his landing in India found the resources of the country, and the triumphant state in which, by his energy and courage, those resources now existed." That the country must be in a more flourishing condition after the successful close of a war which drained its resources, than it was while that war existed, is of course self evident; but the question is in what respect that improvement can be traced to the individual energy and courage of Lord Ellenborough? This is a historical and not a party question, and may be discussed without personal reflections. When Lord Ellenborough landed in February last, he found that our armies had experienced a calamitous reverse in Affghanistan; that the Governor General had strained every nerve to push forward men, cattle and ammunition to the relief of the troops; that he had been for two months applying the resources of the British empire in India with ability, judgement, and unsurpassed vigor to the support of Military operations in Affghanistan. He found the Cabinet in Calcutta, including Lord Auckland, Mr. Bird, Sir W. Casement and Mr. Prinsep of opinion that the reasons which impelled our advance into Affghanistan no longer existed, and that all our efforts must now be directed to an honorable retirement from the country. If Lord Auckland had not been apprized that his successor was then on his way out, the troops he had collected would have been ordered to advance immediately; Cabul would have been recaptured in July instead of in September; by that month our troops would have recrossed the Sutlege, and we should have abandoned Affghanistan; the vast expense of collecting an Army of Reserve would have been saved, and the five per cent. loan would have closed three months sooner. Where is the display of that energy and courage on the part of his successor to which the triumphant state of our resources is to be attributed? Is it to be found in that caprice, or indecision which retarded this triumph for three whole months? Or is it to be sought for in the result of those labours which were imposed on the Finance Committees? All that they have been able to save by curtailing salaries, has been absorbed five times, ten times over by the costly pageantry of the army of Observation so long and so needlessly kept up at Ferozepore.

Of the Blue Book of Documents we have no copy, and our only acquaintance with its contents is derived from the notices in the English journals. They fully bear out the statements, published in this country on imperfect authority, of Lord Ellenborough's vacillation in reference to this war. It appears that his Lordship's first despatch to the Commander-in-Chief when he wrote in conjunction with the Council, on the 15th of March, was a document remarkable alike for the wisdom of its views and the truly English character of its sentiments. It fully deserved the high encomium passed on it by the Duke. It ran thus: "whatever course we may hereafter take must rest solely upon military considerations, and have, in the first instance, regard to the safety of the detached bodies of our troops at Jellalabad, at Ghuzni, at Khilat-i-Ghilzie and Candahar—to the security of our troops now in the field from all unnecessary risk—and finally, to the re-establishment of our military reputation by the infliction of some signal and decisive blow upon the Affghans, which may make it appear to them, to our own subjects, and to our allies, that we have the power of inflicting punishment upon those who commit atrocities and violate their faith, and that we withdraw ultimately from Affghanistan, not from any deficiency of means to maintain our position, but because we are satisfied that the king we have set up, has not, as we were erroneously led to imagine, the support of the nation over which he has been placed."

After having pledged himself to these views, Lord Ellenborough left his Council, and proceeded up the country, and immediately after ordered the troops to abandon Affghanistan and retire within the Indus and the Sutledge. The first order to this effect appears to have been issued about the middle of April. Sir Robert Peel says, that this order to abandon the country,—before we had done any thing to re-establish our military reputation, or recover our prisoners—arose from the check which Brigadiers England and Wild had received; and he defends it on this ground; unquestionably the very worst he could have chosen. Nothing could be more fatal to the character of a Governor General than to assert, that he was ready to give up a line of policy, on which the most important political results depended, upon the first transient reverse which our arms experienced. But we do not believe Lord Ellenborough to be so chicken hearted. We believe that the orders he issued immediately on being emancipated from the Council, had no reference to the check which the two Brigadiers experienced, and that they arose from a fixed determination to retire from the country, at all hazards. If the orders to retire had been dictated by fear, counter order to advance would have been given when those fears were removed by the successful advance of Brigadier England to Candahar, and General Pollock to Jellalabad. Yet we find that after the first orders to retreat had been issued, fresh orders to that effect were sent on the 29th April, with the full concurrence of the Commander-in-Chief! As though the salvation of British honour depended on the speed with which we could evacuate the country, these orders were reiterated to General Pollock on the 4th of May, and he was told that his favourable junction with Sir Robert Sale rendered it more easy for him to withdraw his troops. On the 13th of May, similar instructions were sent to General Nott, who was told that the improvement in his position did not appear to his Lordship to call for any variation in the orders to retreat by way of Sukkur which had been previously issued. Both Nott and Pollock remonstrated. The letter of the former is published; that of the latter has been omitted, accidentally we suppose. The Generals represented that the season was too far advanced for the retreat; and they were permitted to remain till October. These were the dispatches which raised such indignation in the two camps when their contents were generally known. On the 4th of July the Governor General again wrote to the Generals to say that no change had taken place in his views of the expediency of withdrawing the armies, at the earliest period. On that very same day, we are told, his Lordship determined to alter his policy, and instead of retreating while our national honour was still unvindicated, and the British prisoners were yet in captivity, resolved to advance to Cabul. It is no longer a matter of doubt that these conflicting opinions were entertained by the Governor General on this momentous subject in less than four months; and that on the last change of opinion, when he had resolved to advance, he did not order it on his own responsibility, but gave permission to General Nott to retire, by advancing on the capital. These facts are fully established on the authority of Parliamentary records. Every expression of thanks to Lord Ellenborough for having applied the resources of the British empire to the war in Affghanistan becomes the bitterest satire on the vacillation, which was displayed between the 15th of March and the 4th July. It is not for us to anticipate the labours of the historian; our contemporary position forbids it; but it requires no conjurer to foresee that the events of the past campaign, will appear in the page of history in a light diametrically the reverse of that in which they are represented by the votes of the Imperial Parliament.

THE LONDON MAIL of the 4th of March contains but little intelligence, with the exception of the debates in Parliament in reference to the campaigns in China and Affghanistan. The subject had been three times brought under the consideration of the House of Commons within a month. Mr. Roebuck's motion for an enquiry into the justice and expediency of the Affghan war has been lost by a large majority. Both Whigs and Tories voted against it. It appears as though there had been an understanding between the Ministry and their predecessors to the effect that if no opposition was offered to the vote of thanks which Sir Robert Peel intended to propose to Lord Ellenborough, the Ministry would withhold their support from Mr. Roebuck's motion. Sir Robert's arguments against that motion appear to be sound. He considered it improper for the existing Government to lend its majority to a vote of censure on the conduct of a preceding Ministry; and impolitic to rip open a by-gone dispute at a time when we were cultivating a closer connection with Russia. Thus ends the threatened Parliamentary enquiry into the origin and management of the Affghan war. The subject cannot be again introduced to the notice of Parliament; it is laid on the shelf for good.

The vote of thanks to the army of Affghanistan was introduced in a speech by Sir Robert Peel, which will be read by every soldier engaged in that memorable campaign with the liveliest satisfaction. The commemoration of individual gallantry by the Premier in the great Council of the nation, cannot fail to operate as a powerful stimulus to honourable exertion. His speech is said to have exhibited consummate skill. He avoided every topic which could have roused opposition; and by filling the minds of the members with delight at the triumphant result of the campaign, prepared them to accord their thanks, unanimously, to the Nobleman by whom its arrangements were said to have been made. Few military enterprizes have ever owed less to the presiding authority in India; and Sir Robert's praise is therefore great in proportion to the difficulty of the subject.

The Proclamation relative to the Somnath Gates was to be separately brought under the notice of Parliament in March. The Ministry have privately written to Lord Ellenborough to express their disapprobation of it, and in the two Houses have endeavored to palliate it, as far as it admitted of palliation. It is therefore certain that the Gates will not be taken out of the armory at Agra to be sent to their original destination. As in the case of Mr. Erskine, his Lordship has wisely anticipated the views of the public authorities at home.

The distress of the labouring classes is scarcely alluded to in the papers which have been received by this opportunity; and we may therefore conclude that it has been somewhat mitigated. At Paisley, where the sufferings of the poor were most severe, the means of employment and subsistence appear to have been afforded to the manufacturers to such an extent as to remove all necessity for charitable aid.—The trial of Feargus O'Connor and the other Chartists on the charge of having endeavoured to procure a change in the constitution by force had just commenced when the mail left. There is every appearance of their being acquitted, as a large number of the witnesses brought forward by the Crown deposed to their having used every endeavour to prevent violence. —The trial of Macnaghten, the assassin, had been postponed, and there is great probability of his being consigned to the mad house, instead of being sent to the gallows.—Government has resolved to repay from the funds obtained of the Emperor of China, the value of the opium which was delivered up to Capt. Elliott; but we have not been able to discover whether the exact amount to be thus refunded has transpired or not. It will probably fall below the expectations of the holders of the Scrip.

PETITION TO THE COURT OF PROPRIETORS BY THE NATIVES.—A meeting was held at the Town Hall, on Tuesday afternoon, to prepare an address of thanks to Mr. Sullivan for his endeavours to procure offices of larger emolument and trust for the Natives of India, and to petition the Court of Proprietors for higher appointments. The Hurkaru says, the meeting was "most numerously and respectably attended by about five hundred persons including several Europeans and East Indians." Of the two addresses, the most important is that to the Proprietors and we give it below. In the general object of this petition we fully concur. From the time when this journal was established we have strenuously advocated the necessity of rendering our administration national by incorporating the hopes and interests of the native community with it. We have endeavoured to shew from the example of the Roman empire how the conquerors and conquered might be amalgamated by a community of privileges. We have urged that it was impossible to carry on the government of India with any success upon the principle of excluding the children of the soil from all share in the higher departments of the administration; that it was our duty to educate the Natives so as to fit them for important offices under Government, and liberally to bestow those offices on them. We have endeavoured to meet the objections which have been raised against the employment of Native agency from individual failures, and to shew from a reference to our own history that official honesty has been a plant of slow growth in Europe; and that though it might be a plant of slower growth in Asia, where from time immemorial, high office has been invariably left to pay itself out of the pockets of the public, by turning power into money, this formed no reason for depriving a whole people of those motives to improvement which the prospects of a lawful ambition would supply. If therefore we offer some objections to the petition now sent home, it is not because we are adverse to its general object. The sentiments we have invariably expressed, relative to the judicious promotion of Natives to office, not only remain unchanged, but have gathered strength from observation.

The first paragraph of the petition is obscure. It states, that before we conquered the country, the administration of its civil affairs was wholly in the hands of the natives. What natives? If it be meant to include in this term all the Mahomedan Chiefs and Nabobs, and Amlas who directed the administration, it involves a truism which does not at all advance the object of the petition. It will be no argument with the Proprietors at home for employing natives in high office that the country was governed for seven centuries by Natives under the former dynasty. If the petitioners mean to include Hindoos alone in the term Natives, the assertion is incorrect. The Hindoos were entirely excluded from the administration of civil justice. No Hindoo appears to have sat on the bench in Bengal for five centuries and a half.

The second paragraph is also incorrect. "On the acquisition of the country by the British, the natives were removed from all places and employment of honour and emolument." The fact is that the administration was left in the hands of Natives for fifteen years after we had gained the country. It was they who were entrusted with the largest power, and rewarded with the highest pay. At the time when a member of Council was receiving about Three Hundred Rupees a month, Mahomed Reza Khan, who was a kind of Chief Justice in Bengal, had a salary of Nine lakhs of Rupees a year. As low down as 1772, the Native Fouzdar of Hooghly received 6000 Rupees a month. For the first sixteen or seventeen years after we had conquered Bengal, the Natives were overpaid; the Europeans underpaid. After that period, we passed into the opposite extreme, and raised the salaries of Europeans to a princely standard, and reduced those of the Natives to such a scale, that the highest native officer on the establishment received about as much as a Civilian usually spent on his hookah.

The 7th paragraph equally wants the support of truth. It states that since the new Charter was passed, which declared that no Native should be disabled from holding any place, or employment, by reason only of his religion, place of birth, descent or colour, there has been a considerable improvement in the treatment of the Natives. The petitioners, while seeking justice for themselves, ought not to be unjust to others. The improved treatment of Natives began before the Charter Act was passed, in the days of that enlightened statesman, Lord William Bentinck. It is to him and not to Parliament that they are indebted for that elevation of character and prospects which now emboldens them to look for a farther elevation. We question whether the Section of the Act which the Petitioners refer to, was not the result of the advice which the Governor General himself gave, and of the experiment he carried hrough.

The petition appears to us to be equally wide of the mark when it states, that the bestowal of certain offices in the Civil administration exclusively on Europeans, that is on the Covenanted service, has defeated the intentions of Parliament. It is still wider from the truth in asserting that it was the intention of the last Charter to abolish entirely the distinctions of the Covenanted service. It was the intention of the Act to perpetuate that service with all its immunities through the currency of the Charter. It was its design to leave the patronage of that covenanted service with the Directors, as their remuneration for governing India; and it was not its design to destroy the value of that patronage by taking away the exclusive privileges of the Civil service in India. This is doubtless a very anomalous mode of paying men for their official labours; but it is a fact that the Directors have been thus paid for half a century, and that Parliament intended this mode of compensation to continue till the year of Grace, 1854. And it will not be altered till that year comes round. To destroy the privileges of the service would render it necessary to devise some new plan for paying the Directors, which would involve an organic change in the construction of the Indian Government, and upon this extensive change Parliament will not enter before the period comes round in which the question of a new Charter will be forced on its consideration. It will then be open to Government to abolish the exclusive privileges of the Civil service, and to throw open the highest offices to native ambition, if the experiment originated by Lord William Bentinck is found to have been sufficiently successful. Meanwhile it will be the duty, as we know it will be the delight of the local government, gradually to open new and more important offices of trust and emolument to the Natives of the country. And of this we need no better proof than the fact that before the question of this meeting was mooted, Government had drafted a plan for employing native agency in the department of Police and Criminal justice.

The address of Baboo Ram Gopal Ghose at the meeting was, on the whole, characterized by good sense and good feeling. It is true that he talked a little nonsense about the Mahomedan Government, and affirmed that it was superior to the English administration; which is as true as that the present Parliament is no wiser than the Saxon Wittenagemote—but he has since, we see, been anxious to efface the remembrance of the mistake. When he flies in the face of known and acknowledged facts, he can injure no one but himself. He says truly, that the great deficiencies of the natives are their "want of integrity or want of knowledge of a superior order;" and while these deficiencies continue, it would scarcely be wise to entrust them with those higher offices which are coveted by many whose qualifications are in an inverse ratio to their desires. It is this want of integrity which has led the natives in the interior of the country to regard with any thing but satisfaction the elevation of their own countrymen to high office. Though Government may not have gone as far as the Native aspirants for office desire, it has gone farther in the employment of Native agency than the great bulk of the people approve of, and their opinions must not be despised. These defects will be removed in time, and Government may do much towards their removal by the bestowal of adequate salaries; by a gradual enlargement of the scale of qualifications for office, and by the promotion of those who have acquitted themselves honourably in subordinate posts.

The remarks of the Baboo on the system of patronage in Leadenhall Street, requires some modification. The patronage must be lodged somewhere; if it be given to the Ministry, it will be used for Parliamentary purposes, and India will be none the better for the change. If it were given to the Baboos of Calcutta, we fear they would likewise forget their patriotism and bestow the writerships on their own kindred and relatives. Indeed so very weak is human virtue that it is difficult to discover how this patronage may be disposed of so that it shall not be abused. The system to which the Baboo objects has, it must be confessed, imposed some irreclaimable dolts on the country, but it has produced a body of men who, taken as a whole, may stand a fair comparison with any other body of official functionaries in the world for integrity, intelligence and honourable feeling. The system will doubtless be modified at the next renewal of the Charter, and the patronage distributed in other channels. What share of these good things which shall then fall to the lot of the natives of India, must depend on their official exertions. If they are enabled by a display of "higher integrity and knowledge of a superior order" to shew themselves worthy of being entrusted with those higher responsibilities which are now monopolized by the covenanted service, their claims will doubtless receive every consideration, when the time comes round.

THE BOMBAY TIMES ON THE VOYAGE OF THE HINDOOSTAN.—Our Western contemporary is evidently somewhat disconcerted at the victory achieved by the Hindoostan Steamer in bringing a portion of the London Mail to Calcutta, earlier than the rest was received through Bombay. He repudiates the idea of having ever "cared two straws for the dignity of Bombay as the Steam port of India." Yet a reference to the journals of that Presidency during the last four years would abundantly shew that their object has been to establish the necessity of making Bombay the head quarters of the Red Sea steamers, and that the idea of our receiving communications direct from Suez, has been any thing but acceptable to their minds. Our anxiety to enjoy the advantages which had been monopolized by Bombay, our "natural desire to have our mails as speedily and economically as possible" has been treated as a "morbid feeling." Our importunity for an equality of privileges has been characterised as evincing a hostile feeling towards Bombay; and our remonstrances against the inconvenience which we suffered from the exclusive benefits given to Bombay have been described as 'breathing an arrogant tone.' Yet it is not the less a fact that we have pleaded for nothing which was not just; and have raised no objection but to real grievances. We feel it to be a grievance that while one port received all its letters and packets from England at once, and without charge, our letters and papers should be doled out to us in driblets, in seven or eight successive days, and at an enormous charge for inland postage. While our Bombay contemporaries have invariably asserted that the public funds should be expended solely in bringing all letters to its shop, to be distributed from thence to the rest of India, the journalists of Calcutta have advocated the plan of despatching the letters for Bombay and the places which can most conveniently be supplied from thence, directly to that port, and furnishing Ceylon, Madras and Calcutta, and the stations more immediately connected with them, with letters and papers by a direct communication. The efforts of the Bombay Press have, it is true, been exerted to secure the improvement of the road between it and the other Presidencies, but if this could have been accomplished at the same cost which would have been necessary for the establishment of steamers, it would still have left on us a grievous charge for postage.

The desire of the Bombay folks has been for such arrangements as would leave us dependent on that port for ever for our home communications. This state of dependance is unpleasant, not from any feeling of humiliation, but because it cannot be perpetuated without subjecting us to a loss both of time and money. We rejoice at the success of the Hindoostan, for no earthly reason than because the metropolis of British India, and Madras and Ceylon, will thereby be enabled to receive all their letters and communications at once, and comparatively without cost. It was quite as natural for the Press of Bombay to be satisfied with existing arrangements, and to "hold on the even tenor of their way," as for us at this Presidency to object to them. They gave the most solid advantages to that Presidency, and inflicted the most serious inconveniences on us. It is natural for those who suffer to complain, and for those who enjoyed a monopoly of privileges to be complacent. The difference of feeling at the two Presidencies stands thus; the organs of public opinion at Bombay advocated the exclusive preference of that port as the head quarters of the Steamers, with the full knowledge that under the most improved system, and after government had laid out sixty or eighty lakhs of Rupees, in forming a high road across the country, eleven hundred miles in length, Calcutta and Bombay could not be placed upon an equality of privileges, as it regards cost. We have advocated the establishment of a direct communication between Calcutta and Suez, with [illegible] understanding that it would not in the [illegible]

[illegible] interfere with the advantages now enjoyed by Bombay.

But the Times tells us he has frequently expressed the most cordial wishes that Calcutta might communicate with Suez direct, once a quarter, once a month, once a week, if it so pleased them—provided the revenue or community at large did not thereby suffer. Most admirable disinterestedness! We have not the least objection to your having a direct communication,—provided you pay for it out of your pockets; but we have the most serious objection to your enjoying this advantage from the public funds. Those funds ought to be sacredly employed in the support of Steamers to Bombay —and in giving us our letters free of cost. For our parts, we consider the empire as one and indivisible; its treasury a common treasury from which every Division is to be aided according to its exigencies, and not according to its individual contributions. The local fiscal divisions ceased when the Supreme Government was established over the whole territory. But if our Bombay contemporary will create invidious distinctions, and maintain that the public revenues ought to be devoted to the maintenance of Steam communication at one port and not at another, we must recur to the old divisions of the empire into separate Presidencies, with their separate receipts and disbursements, and tell our Bombay friends that the expense of the Steam flotilla which brings them papers and letters for nothing, is not drawn from the revenues of that Presidency—which till lately were unequal to its expenditure—but from the superabundant resources of this Presidency. If the Bombay community consider it necessary that restrictions should be imposed on the expenditure of the public funds, we must remind them that charity begins at home; and that Calcutta has the first claim to the establishment of a steam communication direct to Suez, when that communication is to be supported from its exchequer. We have not only an equal, but a prior right to the enjoyment of a direct intercourse with England, because all the assistance which the Supreme Government gives to that intercourse is drawn from our funds.—But we repudiate any idea of exclusive benefit to ourselves. A large portion of the community can be supplied with early and cheap letters from Europe through the channel of Bombay; let the funds of the Gangetic vale be liberally appropriated to the maintenance of steam at that port. The interests of another portion of the Indian community, in which are included the inhabitants of Madras and of the Metropolis, and of the circumjacent districts, will be best consulted by the establishment of a direct communication to these Presidencies. Let the public funds of Fort William be given as far as they are needed to the support of this direct communication, also and likewise.

Sir W. Macnaghten's Funeral.—On Saturday last the mortal remains of Sir William Macnaghten were interred in the new burial ground in Calcutta. The funeral was attended by a large body of civil and military officers, and by many of the private friends of the deceased, both European and Native. The scene had an impressive character, more especially to those who had personally witnessed the honourable career of Sir William, from the first developement of his talents in the College of Fort William, to the [illegible] when he had attained the highest honours [illegible] service, and stood appointed Governor of [illegible]. Just as the prize was within his grasp, and he seemed to have reached the zenith of human prosperity, he was cut down by a base assassin, amidst scenes of national humiliation, to which our History had hitherto been a stranger. The solemn interest of the scene was increased by the presence of the deceased Envoy's Military Secretary, Major Lawrence, who was with him on the fatal 23d of December, and now stood at the foot of the grave, absorbed in those painful recollections which crowded upon his mind.

It was hoped that a public funeral would have been accorded to the remains of one so eminent in station, and who fell in the discharge of his public duty. It was resolved otherwise. The arguments which have been advanced against it are, we must confess, any thing but satisfactory. But though these public honours have been denied him, his own relatives will find the omission more than compensated by the respect spontaneously offered to his memory by the large body of friends who assembled on Saturday around his grave.

Mortality in the Jails.—The Hurkaru hinted last week that the crowded state of our jails at this Presidency, and the increase of mortality had attracted the attention of the Court of Directors, and that some decisive change in the administration of criminal justice might shortly be expected. The subject is one of great importance, involving as it does not only the interests of the fifty thousand prisoners now in confinement, but the security of the community at large. The punishment awarded to criminals is intended partly as a retributive measure, partly as a check on the commission of crime, and the increase or diminution of crime must in some measure depend on the degree to which punishment serves to deter from the commission of it.

The increase of prisoners in our jails has arisen not so much from the increase of crime, as from the abolition of corporal punishment, and the substitution of protracted imprisonment in its stead; and one of the measures for reducing the number of prisoners which our contemporary states as being under consideration, is a return to the use of the Korah. To differ from so high an authority as Lord William Bentinck, on such a subject, might savor of presumption; but as he considered it impolitic to abolish corporal punishment in every instance, the propriety of its abolition must have appeared to him to rest on circumstances. The circumstances of the country recommend the use of the Korah. As a punishment it is perfectly in accordance with the habits and feelings of society in this country. The servile culprits who compose the vast majority of our prisoners, so far as punishment deters from crime, would be more deterred from its commission by the fear of the ratan than by the fear of imprisonment; and the interests of society would, we think, be benefited if the use of the cane was again resorted to. The mortality which prevails in jails when thus crowded by the unwise substitution of confinement for the whipping post, furnishes an additional argument for corporal punishment. It is more humane to subject a man to a dozen or two of strokes and dismiss him, than to keep him for two or three years in a crowded jail, where his life is endangered. If it be said, that the man who has been chastised with stripes remains for life a marked man, and that his return to a virtuous course is highly problematical; the same may be said in a great measure of the man who has been set to work in irons, the marks of which are generally ineffaceable. We believe the general experience of native society is against the efficacy of confinement, and in favor of that of corporal punishment, and that its voice is all but unanimous for its being restored.

The Court, it is said, propose also to diminish the mortality in jails, by thinning the population by means of emigration. They are desirous of transporting those who are sentenced to imprisonment for seven years and more. Transportation would certainly be more conducive to the health of the culprit than a residence in our suffocating jails; it would be advantageous also to the settlements to which the convict may be sent, where labour is scarce and dear; but it would be far more expensive to the state. It is chiefly on this ground that the objection to it rests. At the same time it must not be forgotten that the present number of convicts is barely sufficent to keep the public roads in repair, and unless Government is prepared to sanction a distinct outlay for this specific purpose, the abstraction of five or six thousand labourers will be severely felt. It is true, that no labour is so expensive as convict labour. Our roads might be repaired at a far less cost, on contract, than by the compulsory labour of prisoners. The wisest plan that could be adopted would be to compel the prisoners to earn their bread by some trade within the walls of the prison, and make their punishment consist in regular labour and close discipline; and to invite tenders for the repairs of the roads; but Government has no means and appliances for the establishment of trades in prisons, and no disposition to "mend its ways" by devoting public funds to the roads. Our roads are now kept in repair because Government is constrained to feed the convicts, and is anxious to obtain some return. When those convicts have been dispersed to other settlements, the roads will run rapidly to decay.

But one cause of the mortality in jails among the working class of convicts is to be found, if we are not much mistaken, in the inadequacy of the food allowed them. One meal of cooked food a day is barely sufficient to keep soul and body together in a convict who is sentenced to labour. An intermediate mouthful of julpan is a poor succedaneum. This assertion is supported by apparently strong evidence. In one return now before us, in a jail in which a single meal a day is allowed, the mortality among the labouring prisoners, in fifteen months, was one in eight; among the non-labouring prisoners, one in thirty-two; among the debtors only one in sixty-nine. How far this result of the single meal system may be borne out by the experience of other jails, we cannot say; perhaps this article may induce some of our friends in the interior to furnish us with jail statistics, but it is manifest from the vast difference of mortality between those who labour and those who do not, that the same quantum of food which suffices for the one will not answer for the other. From the evidence now before us, we are driven to the conclusion that if the convicts who are subjected to labour, had two meals a day, the mortality would be greatly diminished.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, APRIL 20.

— The Hoogly Steamer has arrived from Moulmein. Part of that town had been burnt. The Commissioner had, as one of his last acts, visited the southern province, with a view to effect a settlement of the southern boundary. There was a report that an embassador from China had arrived at Bamoo, with an escort of a thousand men, and that Tharawaddy had ordered him to reduce the number to forty. Is the brother of the sun and moon thus to receive the law, not only from the outside barbarians, but also from those he affects to regard as his own tributaries?

— It is an amusing coincidence, that just at the time when public attention has been drawn to the Ningpo Bell, we should receive an account—which we have given elsewhere—of the casting of a magnificent Bell at Rangoon, weighing 800 tons! Should our troops ever visit Rangoon as they visited Ningpo, this Bell also will fall into our possession; but we fear the Prize Committee will not refuse, as they did the Ningpo bell, a Bell which contains 617 lbs. avoirdupois of silver, and 180 lbs. of gold.

— Mr. H. V. Bayley, the Secretary to the Council of Education, has been sent, as the papers say, to Midnapore to officiate as a Special Deputy Collector. Dr. Mouat has been appointed to succeed him as Secretary to the Council of Education and Mr. T. R. Davidson is to do the duty of Secretary in the Education department. As both these gentlemen have quite as many other duties as they can well get through, the business of public instruction will as matter of course fall into abeyance, since nothing beyond the fragments of official leisure are to be bestowed on it.

— The papers from Bombay announce the arrival of the Sesostris Steamer from Kerachee, which she left on the 7th of April. So entirely had our enemies Beloched the dawks, that Sir Charles Napier's victory at Hydrabad had not been heard of there, twelve days after the event.

— Letters from Simlah state, that Lord Ellenborough, finding Agra too hot, has abandoned the experiment he was trying on his constitution, and has resolved upon retreating to the Hills.

FRIDAY, APRIL 21.

— A Delhi Gazette extra has just come in, announcing that the old Ranee of Kythul, one of the Seikh protected states, has declared war against Lord Ellenborough, and defeated a detachment of British troops to the number of two hundred. Khytul is the largest of the Protected states, and embraces 561 villages, which yield a revenue of more than Four lakhs of Rupees, forty thousand pounds sterling, by the year. The old incumbent who was a paralytic, recently died without issue, and according to treaty, this snug little estate escheated to the ruling power. The old Ranee however was determined not to give up her possessions. She is said to have sent her garter round to the heads of the villages to call on them to rally round her standard. They mustered six thousand horse and foot, and fell on the two companies stationed there, who made a brave resistance, and retreated to Kurnal, but not till after Capt. Whistler had been killed, Lieut. Farre wounded, and one fifth of the brave little band killed or disabled, and their camp burned. A large body of troops has been sent out to fight the old lady, and there can be no doubt of their success.

— Mr. P. O'Hanlon has been dismissed from the Magistracy by the Deputy Governor.

— The Bombay papers state, that some official persons have been to examine Butcher's Island, which is represented as the seat of malaria. It was reported to be the intention of Government to make it the prison of the Ameers of Scinde.

— Lord Ellenborough's proclamation on the receipt of Sir Charles Napier's second victory has just reached us; and we have placed it among our extracts. It exhibits a great improvement upon the previous manifestoes which have been issued from the same mint. If we had not been assured that his Lordship does not read the local papers—Mr. Huttmann's Gazette excepted—we should be inclined to flatter ourselves that the strictures of the press have not been without their use.

— Sir Charles Napier's despatch will also be found in another column. It is of the same energetic character as his battles. The style is chaste and dignified. We discover by a glance of the eye that it is the production of a brave soldier. It narrates a great victory in the simplest language. The General does ample justice to his brave companions in arms without allowing us to suppose that he thought for a moment of his own glory. There is one remarkable feature in this despatch, which deserves not only to be commended but to be reproduced in every other despatch. It mentions by name the soldiers and non-commissioned officers who distinguished themselves in the engagement in their personal conflict with the enemy and in capturing their standards. How cheaply might a new impulse be given to the soldiers, and elevated motives to exertion be infused into their minds, if this noble example of General Napier's was generally followed.

— Dost Mahomed is at one end of the Khybur and Akbar Khan at the other. He has come down to Jellalabad to meet his father. The Court of Lahore begins to tremble for the security of its possessions beyond the river. Five Regiments had previously been sent to reinforce Avitabile. On hearing of Akbar Khan's movement, two others were sent with five guns.

SATURDAY, APRIL 22.

— Sir George Pollock has arrived at Dinapore, of which Division he assumes the command.

— The Mail which arrived last year on the 17th, has not yet made its appearance. The last Bombay papers are totally at a loss to account for the delay.

— The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette states, that intelligence had been received to the effect, that the troops which had been sent on from Hydrabad had captured Omercote, which is on the verge of the Desert. But the intelligence wants confirmation. If Omercote has fallen, Meerpore, which lies half way between Hydrabad and that place, must have been previously captured, and the capture of so important a place would undoubtedly have been announced.

— The Bombay papers state, that Major Clibborne had demanded a Court Martial, in reference to the affair at Meanee, in which his corps was not engaged, owing, it was said, to a misunderstanding of the orders sent to it.

— Further particulars of the affair at Kythul appear in the papers of this morning. It is said that the two companies acknowledge to the loss of only thirty men, while the enemy lost five hundred; but as the enemy remained masters of the field, it is impossible that the retreating troops should have been able to form any estimate of the loss. They retreated in good order to Kurnal, which was thrown into a state of unusual commotion by the event. It was determined at length to send off a force sufficiently large to meet any emergency. One of the letters published in the Delhi Gazette states, that there is not a battery gun between that city and Ferozepore.

— The grounds upon which Mr. O'Hanlon has been relieved from the magistracy are, that "the transaction betrays on his part such serious defects of judgment and discretion, and unfortunately so wide a departure from some of those principles which are of importance to a due administration of justice, that Government cannot consistently with its duty to the public, permit him, after the exposure which has taken place, to retain his position as one of the Magistrates of Calcutta." It is said, that Mr. O'Hanlon intends to appeal to Lord Ellenborough.

— The Hurkaru states, that Government have purchased the Kidderpore docks for four lakhs of Rupees, and that a dock is to be prepared capable of accommodating steamers of the largest size.

— The Subscription for the Testimonial to Mr. Greenlaw has amounted to 10,689 Rs. of which 9396 Rs. have been collected. At a meeting of the subscribers held yesterday, it was resolved that the sum of 2200 Rs. be appropriated to a Marble bust, and the remainder to a service of plate with a suitable inscription.

— The Bengal British India Society was formed on Thursday last. The resolution regarding the loyalty of the new association has been considerably modified; but in our humble opinion it is altogether out of place. The more the Society talks of its loyalty, the more that loyalty is likely to be brought into suspicion. There are certain virtues, of the male as well as of the female character, the existence of which is always taken for granted, till it appears necessary to assert it.

MONDAY, APRIL 24.

— The London Mail of the 4th of March came in on Saturday morning, in forty-eight days. At this favourable season of the year it reached Bombay in forty days. The cause of the delay is traced to certain improvements in the machinery which retarded the progress of the steamer to the extent of three days.

— A correspondent of the Englishman, adverting to the petition which the Landholders are about to present to Government begging that a retrospective effect may be given to the rule which releases all parcels of ground under fifty bigahs from assessment, suggests that the Landholders themselves should be obliged to relinquish all the lands to that extent of which they have dispossessed their tenants. He affirms that the Resumption screw has done nothing in comparison with the Zemindaree screw.

— The Delhi Gazette publishes letters from Kurnal which contradict the report of Capt. Whistler's death, in the attack made by the troops belonging to the old Queen of Kythul. Mr. Clerk was busy superintending the arrangements for putting down this insurrection, and it is stated that General Fast was to take the command of the troops, who after all will probably find nothing to do. The mere report of their advance will be sufficient to disperse the rabble army, unless there should be other chiefs engaged in the plot.

— The intelligence from Agra is, that Lord Ellenborough intends to give a grand ball and supper on the approaching St. George's day in honour of Her Majesty's birth-day, and that he proposes to proceed to Hydrabad in Scinde. The former we can easily credit; the latter makes too great a demand on our credulity. No man who found Agra too hot, would jump out of the frying pan into the fire by going to Scinde.

— The Madras papers hold out a hope, that the transit duties at that Presidency are about to be abolished. It is time they should be. The 'curse' as Mr. Parker called these duties, has always been heavier at Madras than ever it was here; yet we were relieved of it seven years ago.

TUESDAY, APRIL 25.

— The period for the departure of the next Mail from Calcutta is the 8th of May, which is ten days earlier than usual. A similar anticipation of the regular period has been announced for the three succeeding months, to afford the Bombay Steamers sufficient time to reach Suez in the teeth of the monsoon.

— The Star remarks, that four of the officers recently removed from the Saugor and Nerbudda agency have been appointed Quarter Masters and Interpreters of their corps, viz. Lieutenants Doolan, Duncan, Hayes and Banks, and that these appointments must be satisfactory to their minds as shewing that their dismissal from civil employ has made no unfavourable impression on the Commander-in-Chief.

— The letter from the Landholder's Society to the Government of Bengal, regarding the operation of the new sale law, appears in the Englishman and Hurkaru of this day. It is too long for our limited space, but we hope to be able to discuss the grievances of which it complains next week.

— The Bhaskur states, that the dacoits have been more daring since the appointment of a separate Magistrate at Howrah opposite Calcutta; that if he proceeds to the south of the district, they break forth in the North; and that he is at a loss to know where to discover the rogues as he scours the districts. That paper states, that on Saturday night they committed an atrocious robbery, and mutilated the owner of the house they plundered. These facts only serve to shew the necessity of establishing a separate Magistracy in this populous district.

— There was a respectable assemblage of gentlemen yesterday morning at the house of Mr. Greenlaw to present him with a public address adopted at a meeting of the inhabitants of Calcutta, at the [illegible] of last January, which conveyed the thanks of the community for his long, arduous and persevering efforts in the cause of steam navigation. The address was read by Mr. Halliday. Mr. Greenway made a very appropriate reply, in which he recapitulated the exertions of those who had taken an active share in the Steam question, and paid a just tribute to the memory of two of its most indefatigable advocates, Lord William Bentinck and Sir William Macnaghten.

— In the furious North-wester of Sunday evening the Catholic Church at Boitakhana was struck by lightning. The fluid was attracted by the large iron cross on the highest point of the steeple and then proceeded down the building, shattering the windows and doors. No lives were lost.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

GENERAL ORDERS BY THE RIGHT HON'BLE THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA.

Agra, the 11th April, 1843.

The Governor General announces to the army, another and a most decisive victory gained by His Excellency Major General Sir Charles Napier, K. C. B., in the vicinity of Hyderabad, over 20,000 Beloochees, led by Meer Shere Mahomed, of Meerpoor, a chief, who, having no ground whatever of complaint against the British Government, preferred the chances of war to the security of peace, and has now no refuge but the desert.

The Major General directed his force with the same consummate ability which characterised his operations at Meeanee, and all the troops, worthy of being so commanded, executed their movements with a precision and steadiness which secured the victory to their impetuous valour.

The army of Scinde has twice beaten the bravest enemy in Asia, under circumstances which would equally have obtained for it the victory over the best troops of Europe.

The Governor General regards with delight the new proofs which the army has given of its pre-eminent qualities in the field, and of its desire to mitigate the necessary calamities of war by mercy to the vanquished.

The ordinary expression of thanks would ill convey the extent of the debt of gratitude which the Governor General feels to be due to His Excellency Major General Sir Charles Napier on the part of Government, the army, and the people of Hindoostan.

To have punished the treachery of protected princes; to have liberated a nation from its oppressors; to have added a province, fertile as Egypt, to the British empire, and to have effected these great objects by actions in war unsurpassed in brilliancy, whereof a grateful army assigns the success to the ability and valour of its General; these are not ordinary achievements, nor can the ordinary language of praise convey their reward.

The Governor General direct that the several corps which, by the General Order of the 5th ultimo, were permitted to bear the word "Hyderabad, 1843," upon their appointments, standards and colors, respectively, shall, in lieu thereof, bear the word "Meeanee."

The Governor General is pleased to authorise the 1st Troop Bombay Horse Artillery;

2d Company 1st B. Bombay Artillery;
2d Company 2d B. Bombay Artillery;
3d Company Golundauze do. do.; and
C. Company Madras Sappers and Miners, to bear upon their appointments, and the 3d Regiment of Bombay Light Cavalry, and the 9th Regiment of Bengal Light Cavalry, the Poonah Horse and the Scinde Horse, upon their standards and appointments, and the 1st Grenadiers, the 8th, 12th, 21st, and 25th Regiments of Bombay Native Infantry, upon their colors and appointments, the word "Hyderabad."

The Governor General having taken into consideration the peculiar merits of the 1st troop of the Bombay Horse Artillery under Major Leslie, [illegible] having participated in the distinguished operations of the army of Candahar, under His Excellency Major General Sir W. Nott, G. C. B., and having returned to India with the troops from Cabool, marched from the camp of Ferozepore early in January and joined the army of Scinde, in time to decide, in conjunction with H. M.'s 22d Regiment, the battle of Hyderabad, is pleased to direct, that the 1st troop of the Bombay Horse Artillery shall hereafter for ever be denominated the 1st, or "Leslie's" troop of Horse Artillery, and shall, in addition to all other decorations or inscriptions upon its appointments, bear the "Eagle."

The Governor General directs, that this General Order, and the substance of the despatch annexed, shall be explained to the troops at all the stations of the army, and that at all such stations a salute of 21 guns shall be fired in honour of the victory of Hyderabad.

By order of the Right Honourable the Governor General of India,

J. THOMASON,
Secy. to the Govt. of India,
with the Governor General.

From Major General Sir C. J. NAPIER, K. C. B.,
Commanding in Scinde and Beloochistan,
To the Right Honourable LORD ELLENBOROUGH,
Governor General of India,
&c. &c. &c.

Dubba, four miles from Hyderabad,
24th March, 1843.

MY LORD,—The forces under my command marched from Hyderabad this morning at daybreak. About half past 8 o'clock we discovered and attacked the army under the personal command of the Meer Shere Mahomed, consisting of twenty thousand men of all arms, strongly posted behind one of those large nullahs, by which this country is intersected in all directions. After a combat of about three hours, the enemy was wholly defeated with considerable slaughter, and the loss of all his standards and cannon.

His position was nearly a straight line, the nullah was formed by two deep parallel ditches, one 20 feet wide and 8 feet deep, the other 42 feet wide and 17 deep, which had been for a long distance freshly scarped, and a banquet made behind the bank expressly for the occasion.

To ascertain the extent of his line was extremely difficult, as his left did not appear to be satisfactorily defined, but he began moving to his right when he perceived that the British force outflanked him in that direction. Believing that this movement had drawn him from that part of the nullah which had been prepared for defence, I hoped to attack his right with less difficulty, and Major Leslie's troop of Horse Artillery was ordered to move forward and endeavour to rake the nullah. The 9th Light Cavalry and Poona Horse advancing in line, on the left of the artillery, which was supported on the right by H. M. 22d Regiment, the latter being, however, at first considerably retired to admit of the oblique fire of Leslie's troop. The whole of the artillery now opened upon the enemy's position, and the British line advanced in echellons from the left, H. M. 22d Regiment leading the attack.

The enemy was now perceived to move from his centre in considerable bodies to his left, apparently retreating, unable to sustain the cross-fire of the British Artillery; on seeing which Major Stack, at the head of the 3d Cavalry, under command of Captain Delamain, and the Scinde Horse, under command of Captain Jacob, made a brilliant charge upon the enemy's left flank, crossing the nullah and cutting down the retreating enemy for several miles. While this was passing on the right, H. M. 22d Regiment gallantly led by Major Poole, who commanded the brigade, and Captain George, who commanded the corps, attacked the nullah on the left with great gallantry, and I regret to add, with considerable loss. This brave battalion marched up to the nullah under a heavy fire of matchlocks, without returning a shot till within 40 paces of the entrenchment, and then stormed it like British soldiers. The intrepid Lieutenant Coote first mounted the rampart, seized one of the enemy's standards, and was severely wounded while waving it and cheering on his men. Meanwhile the Poona Horse, under Captain Tait, and the 9th Cavalry, under Major Story, turned the enemy's right flank, pursuing and cutting down the fugitive for several miles. H. M. 22d Regiment was well supported by the batteries commanded by Captains Willoughby and Hutt, which crossed their fire with that of Major Leslie. Then came the 2d Brigade under command of Major Woodburn, bearing down into action with excellent coolness. It consisted of the 25th, 21st and 12th Regiments under the command of Captains Jackson, Stevens and Fisher, respectively: these regiments were strongly sustained by the fire of Captain Whitley's battery on the right of which were the 8th and 1st Regiments, under Majors Browne and Clibborne; these two corps advanced with the regularity of a review up to the entrenchments, their commanders with considerable exertion, stopping their fire, on seeing that a portion of the Scinde Horse and 3d Cavalry in charging the enemy had got in front of the Brigade. The battle was decided by the troops of Horse Artillery and H. M. 22d Regiment.

To Lieutenant Colonel Pattle, as second in command, I am indebted for his zealous activity and readiness to execute any duties confided to his charge.

To my personal Staff, and to the general Staff of the division, my thanks are due for their zealous assistance.

I beg to recommend my acting Aid-de-camp, Lieut. Thompson, to your Lordship's protection.

The long experience of my Military Secretary, Major McPherson, was of much assistance to me in the field.

To my extra Aid-de-camp, Lieut. Brown, I have also to return my best thanks, especially for his assistance in examining the position of the enemy.

Capt. Tucker, Lieutenants Rathbourne, Hill, North and Battersby, all did good service in the fight.

To Lieutenant Pelly, acting Assistant Adjutant General, I am indebted for his zealous exertions in that department.

Of Lieutenant McMurdo's abilities, as acting Assistant Quarter Master General, I cannot speak too highly, and regret to say, he has received a sabre wound from a Beloochee, the third that he cut down in single combat during the day.

To Major Lloyd, who commanded the Artillery, the service is indebted for the arrangements made for that arm, ably seconded by Major Leslie, Captains Willoughby, Whitley and Hutt.

To the Commanders of Brigades and Regiments, and the Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers and Privates under their command, I have to return my thanks for their valiant bearing in the action.

Major Waddington rendered me the most important aid in examining the enemy's position, with that cool courage which he possesses in so eminent a degree; nor must I omit to mention the labours of Captain Henderson and Lieutenants Outlaw and Boileau, with their hardy little band of Sappers, whose labours enabled the heavy 8-inch howitzers to come up into action.

To Captain Blenkins, the service is indebted for the ablest arrangements in the Commissariat department.

The exertions of the officers of the Medical department under Inspecting Surgeon Bell, were very laudable.

Lieutenant Leeson well arranged the baggage close up to the line, and merits thanks, for the duty of a Baggage Master, with an Indian army, is Herculean.

I will not close the list of those to whom I am indebted, without mentioning that brave and indefatigable Arab gentleman Ally Ackbar, to whose ability and activity I am much indebted.

Many, my Lord, have been the acts of individual valour performed by Officers and Private Soldiers (both European and native), and the account of them shall hereafter be laid before your Lordship.

The Beloochee Infantry and Artillery fought well: their Cavalry made no stand, and 5,000 disciplined soldiers were not to be long resisted by a barbarian force, even though that force were nearly 5 to 1.

From the accounts which have come in since writing the above, there is reason to believe, that the loss of the enemy has been very great: about 500 bodies have been counted upon the field of battle, and it is said, that the neighbouring villages are filled with dead and wounded men. Eleven pieces of cannon were taken in position on the nullah, and seventeen standards.

It gives me great satisfaction to say, that some prisoners have been taken, and though the number is small, it is still some advance towards a civilized mode of warfare, for I cannot help thinking that the desperate resistances generally made by wounded Beloochees has arisen from their own system of warfare, which admits of no quarter being given in action.

We are at present employed in collecting the wounded Beloochees within our reach, in order to render them medical assistance.

I have deeply to regret the loss of the brave and excellent Captain Garrett, of the 9th Light Cavalry, who fell honourably in the battle, and also the fall of Lieutenant Smith, of the Bombay Artillery. With unsurpassed and desperate valour he galloped in front of his battery, and rode up upon the top of the nullah (filled with enemies) to see where his guns could bear with greatest effect. Here this hero fell. Many of the Scindian people (who are all in great delight at the destruction of their Beloochee oppressors) have come into camp from different parts, and bring assurances that the Beloochee force is wholly dispersed, and that Meer Shere Mahomed has fled into the desert with his family and about 40 followers; but, as Emaum Ghur has been destroyed, the heat will soon force him to quit this temporary refuge where there is no protection from the sun. He will therefore probably endeavour to reach Moultan. I have written to his Highness Ali Morad to arrest his progress in that direction, if possible, and to make him prisoner.

Three Beloochee chiefs fall in the action; one of them was the great promoter of the war, Hoche Mahomed Seedee, and I have every reason to believe that not another shot will be fired in Scinde.

I have, &c.

TO THE HONOURABLE THE COURT OF PROPRIETORS OF EAST INDIA STOCK, ASSEMBLING AT THE INDIA HOUSE, LONDON.

HONOURABLE SIRS,—We, the undersigned inhabitants of Calcutta, approach your Honourable Court with sentiments of humility and respect.

We beg to represent, that down to the period of the establishment of the British Government in India, the administration of the civil affairs of the country was wholly in the hands of the natives, whose talents were found fully adequate to the discharge of the duties appertaining to their several situations.

That on the acquisition of the country by the British, the natives were removed from almost all places and employment of honour and emolument, and their agency superseded by the introduction of covenanted European functionaries.

That from that time down to a recent period, the natives have been considered eligible only to such offices as were of a very subordinate character, and that to these, salaries were annexed on so low a scale, a scale as to render the parties filling them, liable to all the temptation which are inseparable from poverty, in situations where bribery and corruption are employed to ensure success on the part of suitors.

That for the above reason, the description of natives taken into the service of the Government, were of an inferior class, and the native character therefore suffered much injury from the notorious misconduct of ill-paid subordinate functionaries.

That by the 87th section of the last Charter Act, it was enacted, "That no native of the said territories, nor any natural born subject of his Majesty, resident therein, shall, by reason only of his religion, place of birth, descent, colour, or any of them, be disabled from holding any place, office or employment under the said Company."

That while your petitioners gratefully acknowledge, that since the period, when this Act took effect, there has been a considerable improvement in the treatment of the natives, in regard to the bestowment of offices; they nevertheless consider that the intention of the Imperial Parliament has not been carried out.

That your petitioners are of opinion that there exist in every party of the British dominions in India, natives of talent, respectability and probity; fully competent to the discharge of the duties of the situations connected with the civil administration of the country, which situations are exclusively and almost universally filled by Europeans, and that, therefore, the act has been inoperative in doing away with those distinctions, which it was its design entirely to abolish.

That, for these reasons, your petitioners pray your Honourable Court to reconsider, and to adopt the motion brought forward by Mr. John Sullivan, a Member of your Honourable Court, on the 21st of December last.

Resolved,—"That the thanks of this meeting be given to those members of the Court of Proprietors who supported Mr. Sullivan's motion, on the 21st of December, and that they be respectfully requested to sustain the prayer of the petition just adopted."

Resolved,—"That the following gentlemen [illegible] Committee, with power to add to their number, to superintend the signing of the address and petition, and their dispatch by the Overland Mail, and to carry into effect the intention of the 5th resolution of this meeting.

Baboos Ramgopaul Ghose, Tarachand Chuckerbuttee, Chunder Saikhar Deb Duckinarungun Moorkerjee and Pearychand Mitra."

THE GREAT BELL.

One of the subjects which it is said His Burmese Majesty purposed in his visit last year to Rangoon, has, we learn, been accomplished. A Bell, of enormous size and weight, has been cast as an offering to the great Shoey-de-gon pagoda. This royal work of religious merit was commenced on Sunday, the 19th ult. that day being announced by the Wise Men as being propitious to the undertaking. We are informed that 8,000 men were employed at the 500 forges or wind pumps, put in requisition on this occasion, that is, 16 persons to a pump and forge. Drest in their gayest attire, all the principal officers of town and chief men of the surrounding villages, having made their supplications, commenced operations at four forges constructed for their appropriate use, and then followed the active movements of the five hundred plebeian forges. A hundred and seventy visses of silver nearly 617 lbs. avoirdupois and one hundred and fifty of gold, nearly 543½ lbs. were added by the people to the metals which had been provided by the King, besides a vast number of gold and silver ornaments of which no account was taken. In four days and five nights the work was completed. The dimensions of the Bell are said to be seven cubits in diameter, twenty-one in circumference, eleven in height, and one or two inches thick. The weight of the metal of which an account was taken, was 333,333 visses or in avoirdupois weight, eight hundred tons. It was ordered that the Bell should rest in its mould for forty days, during which period, neither the sound of cannon, musket, nor even that of a rice-mortar should be heard in Rangoon, lest the concussion of the atmosphere should crack the mighty mass. Of course the sound of thunder was not subject to the royal fiat. We have not, as yet, obtained a copy of the inscription on the Bell. We hope, however, to succeed in this, on some future day, when we will give a translation of it to our readers, as the curious in such matters, cannot but wish to know what so great a King as Tharawaddee has recorded in indelible characters on so lasting a monument.

The above circumstance brings to our recollection a translation which we made, about twenty years ago, of the inscription on the Bell, which was afterwards taken from the Shoey-de-gon pagoda, by the command of Sir A. Campbell, during the war with Burmah. In the attempt to put it on board a vessel to convey it to Calcutta, it fell into the river. It was afterwards taken up and restored to its former position. The translation, if not instructive, may not be uninteresting to some of our readers, and we purpose inserting it in our columns next week.—Moulmein Chron. March 22.

EUROPE.

COURT AND FASHIONABLE LIFE.—There is nothing material to report respecting her Majesty and Prince Albert, who have enjoyed their usual rides and drives during the week at Windsor. It is now stated that the accouchement of our beloved Sovereign is not expected to take place before the commencement of April. Her Majesty will then be attended by the same professional gentlemen (Dr. Locock, Dr. Ferguson, Mr. Richard Blegden, surgeon-accoucheur, and Sir James Clark) who were in attendance upon the Sovereign upon the auspicious occasion of the birth of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent will leave Frogmore for town immediately after the departure of her Majesty.

We regret to annouce the death of Lord Abercromby, which took place at Airthrey Castle (Scotland), on Wednesday forenoon. His lordship, who was in his 74th year, had been for a long time in a very infirm state of health. He was eldest son of the celebrated General Sir Ralph Abercromby, and brother of Lord Dunfermline. Lord Abercromby has left one son, Colonel Abercromby, lord-lieutenant of Clackmannanshire, and late M. P. for the county of Stirling; and two daughters, the eldest of whom is married to the Right Hon. Fox Moule. By Lord Abercromby's death, the lord-lieutenancy of Stirlingshire becomes vacant.—The Atlas.

Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal children continue at Windsor in the enjoyment of good health.

We are happy in being able to announce that the Bishop of London has so far recovered from his late severe indisposition, as to be enabled to resume the functions of his high office, which he discharges so much to the advantage of the church.

Yesterday being the anniversary of the marriage of her Majesty with his Royal Highness Prince Albert, merry peals from the bells of St. George's chapel and the parish church of St. John, Windsor, were rung at intervals throughout the day. At noon royal salutes were fired from numerous pieces of ordnance in the immediate neighbourhood of the town and castle. Her Majesty gave a grand dinner party in the evening, in the oak room, covers being laid for twenty-seven.

MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE.—On Monday the marriage of the Rev. Lord John Beresford, nephew of the Lord Primate, to Miss Leslie, the beautiful and accomplished sister of Charles Powell Leslie, Esq. M.P., took place in Glaslough church. The ceremony was performed by the Lord Primate. Several distinguished individuals of the family circle were present, amongst others the Marquis and Marchioness of Waterford.

THE LATE MICHAEL J. QUIN, ESQ.—We regret to announce the death of this gentleman, which took place on Sunday last, at Boulogne-sur-Mer. Mr. Quin was well known to general readers as the author of Travels in Spain, and of A Steam Voyage down the Danube; and to a more limited circle he was known as an extensive contributor, to periodical publications. —Atlas.

DEATH OF SUTTON SHARPE, ESQ.—The death of this gentleman who was a Queen's counsel, took place at his chambers in Lincoln's-inn, on the 22d instant, in the forty-fifth year of his age. Mr. Sharpe, to great professional knowledge, added extensive information on most subjects. His death will create a great sensation at Paris, as well as in London, for there were few men in the French capital who, during the last twenty years, have been distinguished in science, literature, or politics, with whom he was not on relations of intimacy. In politics Mr. Sutton Sharpe was a decided liberal.

ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE A PRESBYTERIAN CLERGYMAN IN THE PULPIT.—Rathfriland, Feb. 27. —The most revolting and horrible outrage that has perhaps ever been committed in the north of Ireland was perpetrated at Rathfriland last night. The Rev. Jos. Dickie, one of the Presbyterian ministers of this place had an evening service, as usual, in his own church. Just at the conclusion, and whilst the rev. gentleman was engaged in the solemn exercise of prayer, some miscreant fired through one of the windows, and wounded him severely in both arms. It is hoped that by proper treatment the wounds will not prove fatal. No clue has been found as yet to the discovery of the author of this outrageous and horrid deed. Mr. Dickie, who was but lately married, is a most amiable and inoffensive man. No cause, therefore, can be assigned for so dastardly an attempt to deprive him of life. We understand that, immediately on its being seen that the shot had taken effect on their minister, several of the congregation ran in the direction whence the gun had been discharged; but the night was so dark that the culprit escaped detection. Mr. T. Scott, J. P., and the police scoured the neighbourhood immediately, but to no purpose. The tracks of a man's feet were traced from the spot where, it was evident, the gun had been discharged, in the direction of Lessie.

COLLISION ON THE MANCHESTER AND LEEDS RAILWAY.—On Wednesday a collision took place in the cutting at North Dean. On a luggage train, with two engines from Manchester, arriving at the Sowerby-bridge station, one of the engines was found to be out of repair, from the bursting of one of the pipes. It was detached from the train, and sent forwards to Brighouse; but it appears it was unable to proceed. The luggage train coming up, and the morning being exceedingly dark and foggy, it ran into the engine, whereby a collision took place. The tender was smashed to pieces, and one of the engines was seriously injured. Providentially no lives were lost. The two engineers were thrown out, and one of them dreadfully bruised.

SCOTLAND.—STATE OF TRADE AT PAISLEY.—Our trade still goes on improving, but we have had no official returns this week of the number on the supply list. It is said, however, that about 800 have gone off since the 17th ult., and that the number stands less than 5000.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.—The Duke of Wellington having intimated to Lord Campbell that he had no objection to produce the recent proclamation of Lord Ellenborough respecting the gates of the Temple of Somnauth, and the evacuation of Affghanistan; the noble and learned lord gave notice of a motion on the subject for the 9th of March, on the part of the Marquis of Clanricarde.—Atlas.

ARMY ESTIMATES.—Sir H. Hardinge (in committee of supply) stated the various reductions made in the army this year by the government. The reduction was to the extent of upwards of 5,700 men. He said this had been done, not by reducing the number of the regiments, but by refraining from filling up their complements when reduced by losses. It might be true that the home service did not require, for its own purposes the full amount of troops intended to be retained; but it was indispensable to have a surplus force at home, for the purpose of affording relief in turn to the regiments employed on foreign service. Of the three regiments now coming home from India, one had been there twenty years, and each of the two others rather more. Sir Henry, after comparing the increase and decrease under various heads, said there was a diminution, since 1821, of 920,000*l.* on three items alone—those of half-pay, retired officers and pensioners, besides diminutions on other items; and concluded by moving a vote for a force of 100,846 men, exclusive of the troops employed in the East Indies.—Atlas.

SUDDEN DEATH OF A BROTHER OF THE LATE SIR SYDNEY SMITH.—On Tuesday Mr. Wakley, M. P. held an inquest at the Coach and Horses, Welbeck-street, Cavendish-square, on the body of Courtney Smith, Esq., aged sixty-nine, of 7, Park-street, Grosvenor-square. The deceased was brother of the late gallant Sir Sydney Smith. Stephen Stanners, baker, No. 69, Hinde-street, Manchester-square, stated that the deceased, on Saturday afternoon last, about half-past two o'clock entered his shop, saying, "May I be allowed to rest for a few minutes?" Witness, who was behind the counter, said, "Certainly." and deceased sat down in a chair, immediately upon doing which he placed his right arm on the counter, and, resting his head in his hand, seemed to faint. Witness thereupon asked him if he felt unwell, but he was unable to answer, and merely shook his head. A surgeon being instantly sent for, deceased on his arrival was pronounced to be dead. The Right Hon. R. Vernon Smith, M. P. for Northampton, deposed that the deceased, who was a gentleman of independent fortune, was his uncle. Witness had not seen him for six months, but he had ascertained that deceased left home on Saturday, about one o'clock, being in the enjoyment of his usual good health. The jury returned a verdict of "Natural death."

DEATH OF MR. RICHARD CARLILE.—Mr. Richard Carlile died on Friday morning, at 20 minutes past four, at his residence, Bouverie street, Fleet-street. He was born at Ashburton, Devon, December 8, 1790.

A CLERGYMAN SHOT BY HIS STEP-SON.—On Monday morning a young man, about 18 years of age, of genteel appearance, was brought to the county gaol, Gloucester, charged with having intentionally shot the Rev. Hugh Percy Bennett, curate of Norton, a parish situated four miles from that city, on the road to Tewkesbury. A surgeon was sent for express on Sunday, and ascertained that the ball, after penetrating the throat, through the centre of the stock worn by the unfortunate gentleman, passed by the larynx, taking an oblique direction towards what is called the painter's muscle, and then descended downwards towards the shoulder. As may be supposed, the reverend gentleman remains in a very precarious state.

DEATH OF GEORGE BOYD, ESQ.—After a short interval, we are called on to announce another loss to the public profession, by the death of Mr. George Boyd, of the firm of Messrs. Oliver and Boyd. This house, of which Mr. Boyd was the managing partner, has, from its intimate, and in some respects exclusive, connexion with educational literature, been long familiar to the present generation.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THE AFFGHAN WAR—VOTE OF THANKS.—The Duke of Wellington introduced the promised resolutions of thanks to the Governor-General of India and the army. His grace took the same course as he did in reference to the Chinese war, by tracing the whole course of events from the commencement of the disturbances in Affghanistan to their happy termination. The public are so familiar with these transactions that it is only necessary to refer to a few points of the speech. His grace, after adverting to the murder of Sir Alexander Burnes, described the disorganization in the army which succeeded, and the attacks made by the mob of Cabool. Passing from this description, the noble Duke adverted to the exertions so successfully made to retrieve the disasters, and and dwelt upon the skilful operations of Generals Sale and Pollock. The noble Duke then gave a summary, to the following effect, of the result of the war:—

"The Governor-General issued instructions to General Nott, the officer in command of the troops at Candahar; which instructions, I must say, are some of the handsomest I have ever seen given by any authority to any officer whatever. (Hear, hear.) I have been employed on many occasions, and have, of course, received various instructions given under circumstances of difficulty; but I must say that I never saw any instructions more handsome and fair towards the individual who was to carry them into execution, than those written by Lord Ellenborough to General Nott. (Hear, hear.) I must also do General Nott the justice to say that he accepted the instructions most gallantly (cheers), and carried them into execution with equal decision and gallantry. (Cheers repeated.) General Nott, who had been twice engaged with the enemy at Candahar, and defeated him on each occasion, marched out on the 10th of August, and he again defeated the enemy, though greatly superior in force to his own army. The gallant general pursued the enemy to Ghuznee, where they posted themselves on the heights, under the protection of the fire of that fortress. On coming up with the enemy in this position, General Nott attacked and again defeated them. He then attacked the fortifications and citadel of Ghuznee, and obtained possession of them on the 8th of September. (Hear, hear.) In the meantime the Governor-General was in correspondence with General Pollock in the neighbourhood of Jellalabad. That general had been supplied with means for conveying his provision, ammunition, and everything he required to enable him to move forward. General Pollock, having sent detachments against some of the chiefs who occupied castles between Jellalabad and the Khyber Pass on the one side, and between Jellalabad and Cabool on the other, was enabled to advance on Cabool. He moved forward, and in that very valley in which our people had formerly been massacred on retiring from Cabool, he gained a victory over the enemy. He followed up his success, and continued his attacks upon the enemy day after day, until he arrived at Cabool, and hoisted his standard on the Bala Hissar on the 16th of September (hear, hear), where he was joined in a day or two by his brother general, Nott, who had marched on Cabool after having taken and destroyed the fortress of Ghuznee. (Hear, hear.) Thus did our victorious forces unite, in the middle of September, at the spot where our great previous disasters commenced."

The following are the resolutions read by his grace:—

"Resolved that the thanks of this House be given to the Right Hon. Lord Ellenborough, Governor-General of the British possessions in the East Indies, for the ability and judgment with which the resources of the British empire in India have been applied in the support of the military operations in Affghanistan.

"Resolved—That the thanks of this House be given to Major-General Sir George Pollock, Knight Grand Cross of the most honourable Military Order of the Bath; to Major-General Sir William Nott, G.C.B.; to Major-General Sir John M'Caskill, K.C.B.; to Major-General Sir Robert Henry Sale, G.C.B.; to Major-General Richard England, and the other officers of the army, both European and native, for the intrepidity, skill, and perseverance displayed by them in the military operations in Affghanistan, and for their indefatigable zeal and exertions throughout the late campaign.

"Resolved—That this House doth highly approve and acknowledge the valour and patient perseverance displayed by the non-commissioned officers and private soldiers, both European and native, employed in Affghanistan, and that the same be signified to them by the commanders of the several corps, who are desired to thank them for their gallant behaviour."

LORD AUCKLAND said he should not give any opinion upon the disasters of Cabool, but would only state that as the head of the government of India, he was advised that the force then at Cabool was more than sufficient for any emergency that could be looked for, and that he was even pressed to withdraw part of that force. Three or four months elapsed before intelligence of this outbreak reached Calcutta. When he received intelligence of these disasters, he should have been glad to be allowed to grapple with them; but his successor had then been appointed, and was on the sea, so that all he had to do was, that, under the circumstances of extreme difficulty by which the government was overtaken, the best means should be furnished that noble lord for dealing with them. The noble lord then did justice to the bravery of the troops, and while giving praise to the exertions of his successor, submitted that there had been nothing wanting on his own part to repair the disasters that had previously occurred. Lord Auckland also described the difficulties those disasters had entailed, particularly in regard to the means of carriage.

The Marquess of LANSDOWNE assented cheerfully to the resolutions, and concurred in the praises bestowed by the Duke of Wellington upon our troops, but considered that Lord Auckland was entitled to a share in the encomiums which had been bestowed, because he had done his best to ensure success, by the full, adequate, and well-considered preparations in which he was engaged up to the last moment of his tenure of office. (Cheers).

Lord VESEY AND FITZGERALD defended Lord Ellenborough from the charge of want of caution which Lord Lansdowne had hinted, and in the course of his speech mentioned a beautiful trait of Mrs. Dennie. The noble lord said—

"It had become his duty, within a very few days, in the name of the Governor-General of India, to transmit to the aged mother of Colonel Dennie the medal of honour which, had he survived, he would have been so well entitled to wear. In desiring him to communicate to Lord Ellenborough the expression of the deep feeling with reference to the tribute paid to her gallant son, the letter of Mrs. Dennie stated, 'that she received the medal with pleasure and with pride—that she had a right to feel a pride in her son's life, and also in his death' (hear, hear); expressions which, he was certain, would find a responsive chord in every breast." (Hear, hear.)

The Marquess of Clanricarde alluded to the voluminous papers recently presented to Parliament respecting the Affghan war, and argued that they did afford a very triumphant illustration of Lord Ellenborough's management.

Lord Brougham entered into a general defence of Lord Ellenborough's policy, and remarked upon the extent of the difficulties over which that noble lord had triumphed, describing the whole of the charge which had been brought against him in that House to amount only to "extreme caution." It was, he said, different elsewhere. His noble friends then spoke smoothly; his noble friends spoke softly on the subject. It might be said of them as it had been said by an inspired writer of others, that "the words of their mouths are as soft as butter, having war in their hearts. Their words are smoother than oil, yet be they very swords." (Loud laughter.) But it was not thus that elsewhere they dealt with the conduct of the Governor-General. There they retained the sharpness of the swords; there they showed the war that was raging in their hearts; there they brandished their swords, be they more or less sharp, be they more or less trenchant, and be the might that wielded them more or less powerful; but then they omitted the butter or the oil, and they endeavoured to inflict as much of, and as deep a wound as the strength of their arm or the sharpness of their weapons would enable them to do. In conclusion, Lord Brougham described the proclamation about the gates of Somnauth as a matter of "trifling import," and said the men who attacked Lord Ellenborough were like "superannuated vipers."

The Bishop of Salisbury and the Bishop of Chichester both protested against it being supposed that they concurred in the view taken by Lord Brougham of the proclamation respecting the gates of Somnauth.

Lord Brougham, in further explanation of his opinions about the proclamation, remarked—

"He wished to say a few words in answer to the attack of the right rev. prelate, and on this proclamation, about which so much clamour—or, he should rather say, such a clatter—had been raised. It implied no countenance shown to Hindooism by the Governor-General, than whom a more pious Christian did not exist. He never dreamt of showing a preference to Hindoo above Mahometanism, or to Mahometanism. He (Lord Brougham) had himself been led away by the clamour on the subject, till he looked to the words of the proclamation. But if the right rev. prelate chose to bring the matter before the House, he (Lord Brougham) would undertake to demonstrate, to the satisfaction of every charitable and calm disposition, that the words did not bear the construction which had been put upon them."

Lord Minto said he should vote for the resolution because it defined the services for which thanks were given to the Governor-General.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.—The Atlas.

The Vote of Thanks to the Governor General and Army of India.—Sir R. Peel proposed the resolutions on this subject to the effect similar to those agreed to by the House of Lords, and the precise terms of which we were enabled to give in our paper last week. The right hon. baronet, after giving an account of what had occurred in India and the position of affairs on the arrival of Lord Ellenborough, alluded to the first despatch of that noble lord, as containing the precise views of the new Governor-General. [This despatch appeared in the Atlas last week.] Sir R. Peel then said—

"It is quite obvious, from the passage I have quoted from the despatch of the 15th of March, 1842, that the main object of Lord Ellenborough's policy at that time was to relieve the garrison in Affghanistan, to rescue the prisoners, to re-establish our military supremacy, if only for a time, at Cabool, and in the whole province of Affghanistan; but that he did not contemplate the permanent occupation of the country. (Hear, hear.) Such being the intended course of policy, and such the object contemplated by the Governor-General, as indicated in the despatch of the 15th of March, I venture to say that that policy has been practically carried through, and that object fully accomplished." (Hear, hear.)

After adverting to various facts in support of this argument, Sir R. Peel denied the charge that Lord Ellenborough had offered an insult to Mr. Ames, an eminent lawyer. He then enlarged on the services of Generals Pollock, Nott, and Sale, and praised the heroism of Lady Sale and Lieutenant Sturt, who had behaved most gallantly while dying of his wounds. In another part of his speech the right hon. baronet took occasion to remark that, according to Quintus Curtius, Alexander had, 2,000 years ago, endeavoured to cheer the spirit of his troops under difficulties rather by providing for their comforts than by enforcing the strict rules of war. General Pollock had done the same.

"The Sepoys (said Sir Robert Peel) had been for some time depressed by the unexpected difficulties of the Khyber Pass. They declared their readiness to meet any enemy; they said, 'We will advance to the rescue of Sir R. Sale, but we tell you fairly that Cabool dwells on our spirit;' and I hope the house will not deal too harshly with those men who have since so nobly retrieved their character. (Cheers.) Sir, I was struck by the reflection—for if we want anything else to add to the interest of these scenes, it is their association with the ancient history of the world (cheers)—these were the very regions in which one of the greatest of conquerors, some 2,300 years since, was displaying his operations—encountering the very dangers which deterred our Sepoys; and I was struck by the account which the Roman historian gives of the Macedonian phalanx in these very passes, on these very rivers."

Lord J. Russell agreed to the vote, but defended the policy of his own government.

Mr. F. Bankes and Mr. Hutt spoke next.

Sir H. Hardinge expressed his entire disbelief of the inhumanity and excesses alleged to have been committed by our troops in their retreat from Affghanistan. The gallant general also stated that the India papers had circulated many calumnies in regard to the march upon Istaliff by General M'Caskill.

The further progress of the discussion was marked by little else worth notice. Sir R. Inglis repeated his objections to the Somnauth proclamation; and Mr. Hume moved an amendment to delay the vote of thanks till some further papers were produced. He, however, withdrew the amendment.

The resolutions were agreed to nem. con.—some hon. member crying out "No" at the name of Lord Ellenborough; and a resolution was agreed to, ordering the Speaker to communicate the resolution of the House to the Governor-General of India, and the generals and officers mentioned.

Friday.—Lord John Russell presented the petition of the Bombay merchants, for indemnification for the opium confiscated in China; and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in reply to a question, intimated that the settlement of these demands waited the exchange of the ratification of the Chinese treaty.—Atlas.

Her Majesty's Accouchement.—It is rumoured that the wet-nurse engaged to be in readiness to foster the forthcoming scion of royalty, will probably be selected from the rural neighbourhood of Banbury. The lady named as likely to succeed to the appointment is Mrs. Willifer, a farmer's daughter, one of a numerous family. Mrs. Willifer is a fine healthy young woman, the mother of two children, and having always lived in a retired country village, has been strongly recommended to Sir James Clarke and her Majesty's medical advisers, by Dr. S. Wise, of Banbury, as remarkably eligible for the office. The husband of Mrs. Willifer is a small farmer, and son of the bailiff of Mr. R. Cartwright, M. P., Aynhoe Park.—Ibid.

The Affghanistan War.—Mr. Roebuck, in a long and somewhat vituperative speech, introduced his motion for a select committee to inquire into the circumstances which led to the late hostilities in Affghanistan. Mr. Roebuck rested his proposal upon two grounds—that the war was an unjust and impolitic one, and that the evidence in support of it had been garbled:—

"I am about to ask of the House to come to a conclusion (said Mr. Roebuck,) to make an inquiry, which may involve much that reflects upon some, if not all, of the members of the late administration; for I shall be obliged, in the course of discharging the duty I have undertaken, to accuse those who formed that administration of rushing rashly, hastily, imprudently, into a war wholly unnecessary, impolitic, and unjust. (Hear, hear.) I shall be obliged to accuse them of doing all this without asking for the sanction of Parliament, which it was their duty to do, and in direct opposition to the well-known feeling of the East India Company. I shall be obliged, in the performance of this duty, to say that they have been guilty—I use the word advisedly—of dragging this nation into an impolitic and unjust war against the people of Affghanistan, without having the slightest recourse to those from whom it was their duty to seek advice and counsel, and that upon their own responsibility they have undertaken this extraordinary course. If, upon the evidence, I show that the war which has been undertaken has been both impolitic and unjust—that it has been undertaken without the due sanction which is required by Parliament, by the country, and the East India Company; and if, also, I make out—when these parties are called upon for their defence, for their justification before the country and this House, for their conduct, which has been thus extraordinary—that they have garbled and falsified the evidence which was requisite for this purpose—which was requisite to sanction their conduct—then I shall have brought home to them a responsibility from which they cannot escape,—from which the duty of this House will not allow them to escape. (Hear, hear.) For my charge against them is, that they have undertaken an unjust and impolitic war on their own responsibility, and that when called upon by Parliament to justify that responsibility, they have, in the most unworthy manner, garbled the evidence upon which their justification is to rest. This is the ground I am about to lay."

Mr. Roebuck accused Lord Palmerston not only of exciting war in the East, but said he was remarkable for mischievous activity in fomenting war generally. These are the terms in which he spoke of Lord Palmerston:—

"I may be unhappy, most unhappy, I may be singular in having the impression upon my mind; but I cannot help fancying that the noble lord (Viscount Palmerston) who so lately ruled the destinies of this country abroad has had a most pernicious influence upon our foreign policy. I cannot help fancying that if the name of England has been brought into bad odour with the world, the most active instrument in the production of that mischief has been the noble lord, the member for Tiverton (Viscount Palmerston.) (Hear, hear.) In fact, if I might, upon so serious a matter, bring forward an almost ludicrous illustration, I should say that the noble lord was best typified by a late production of modern science, which is called the lucifer match (Hear, and a laugh.) No sooner does he meet with an obstruction than a flame immediately bursts forth."

The hon. and learned member then reviewed the circumstances which preceded and followed the war in Affghanistan, and said that as it was foolishly conceived, so was it foolishly executed. We attempted to punish the poor and weak people at our feet—we thought it worthy of us to oppress them for the fault, if fault it were, of others. Mr. Roebuck, after asserting that the despatches of Sir Alexander Burnes had been garbled by the late government, contended that fear of Russia had caused us to attack Dost Mahomed. Mr. Roebuck thus expressed himself:—

"A noble lord, in another place, has said that he thought the interests of India were at stake—that he thought the siege of Herat was the first step to the introduction of Russian dominion. Dost Mahomed feared the capture of Herat, and feared the advance of Runjeet Singh, and at that moment he addressed Sir A. Burnes, told him his situation, explained to him that there was a Russian agent in his territory, and actually showed him that formidable being. Dost Mahomed offered, if Great Britain would protect him from Persia on the one hand, and from Runjeet Singh on the other, to drive away the Russian agent, and to be friends for ever with the Governor-General. Fearing, then, the domination of Russia, and the fall of Herat, what did we do? Did we attack Russia? No. Did we attack Persia? No. Kamram possessed himself of Herat, and did we make Dost Mahomed our friend? (Cheers.) I think I may lay it down as a proposition that a man had no right to knock down Richard because he is afraid of Thomas. (Hear, hear.) Here you are afraid of Russia—you fear Russia at Herat, and upon the Caspian—and you attack Dost Mahomed at Cabool. (Cheers and laughter.) You are afraid of the powerful, and therefore you generously and gallantly attack the weak. In the whole series of unjust wars, I defy you to show me anything so degrading as this to British honesty and honour. (Hear, hear.) Because we have a strong enemy, are we to do injustice to a weak friend? We fear Russia on the Caspian, and we crush Dost Mahomed in Cabool! Is this your honour, your candour, or even your fair dealing? Are you not rather a set of mercenary and cowardly marauders, turning upon your friends, because you dare not assail your enemies? I accuse you, in the face of the united world, as the basest of dastards, seeking your own commodity, and abandoning every principle of honour and honesty. Such was the government of the day: but I appeal with confidence to the character of my country, and to the justice of the House of Commons." (Cheers.) Mr. Roebuck, after some further strictures in this style, moved for "a select committee to inquire into the circumstances which led to the late hostilities in Affghanistan, to report the evidence and their observations thereon."

Mr. Hume seconded the motion.

Lord John Russell defended the policy of the late government. He said Mr. Roebuck had used extraordinary epithets—false, villainous, and so forth; reminding him of a remark made by the great Condé, who, in speaking of common accusations against public men, had said, these libellers impute to us the motives by which they themselves would, in our places, have been actuated. Never till now had he himself so distinctly felt the force of the Condé's remark. The mover had accused the late Ministers of garbling the evidence, and had read some passages by way of amplification; but nothing could be more unimportant than the passages so omitted; and the late ministers would have no objection to the printing of the whole, that the House might judge whether there had really bear any fraudulent supposition. He could not help thinking that Lord Palmerston and Sir John Hobhouse, with the information officially furnished to them, must have been somewhat better judges of the danger to be apprehended from Russia than the member for Bath.

After some remarks from Mr. D'Israeli and Mr. Escott,

Sir Robert Peel said, that although he did not approve of the policy which led to the war, he could not vote for the committee. Even if he coincided in the opinion that there was reason to apprehend danger from Russia, he considered subsequent events to have confirmed the suspicion he had originally expressed, that the expedition into Affghanistan would not be found justifiable. But he could not agree to lend the influence of government to the appointment of the proposed committee. It had not been the usage of this country that a party acceding to office should employ its powers to enforce vindictive measures against its predecessors. If he were disposed to yield to party feeling, he might agree to this motion as a retaliation upon the now threatened attack on Lord Ellenborough; but he would act on no such sentiment. He would rather act upon the consideration of that which was befitting the government and beneficial to the people.

Lord Palmerston asserted that the papers presented to Parliament fully justified the course taken by the late government. The noble lord said—

"I admit with those who take the other side of the question, that unless the war was a defensive war, it was an offensive one—a war of aggression—and, consequently, unjustifiable. (Hear.) Now, sir, I say that it was a defensive war. (Cheers.) We have been told that Russia was our foe; and we have been asked, if such was the case, why did we attack Affghanistan? Why did we not go to the Baltic, to the Black Sea, with an army and a fleet? But, sir, we did go to St. Petersburg, not with an army, not with a fleet, but with a demand for an explanation; and that was the course in reality consistent with the courtesy due to a foreign government; with those principles of relation which should subsist between friendly powers. (Hear, hear.) Sir, we stated to the Russian government the information we had received; we told them, 'Here are agents of yours furthering proceedings in Central Asia which alarm us, from the probability that they may have the effect of rousing neighbouring nations against us.' We said, 'Do you avow this conduct? Was it by your authority that it was pursued, or was it persisted in against your knowledge, and in opposition to your wishes?' Sir, we asked them this, and if Russia had openly avowed these hostile proceedings; if she said, 'What you have told us is true, and it is done by our direction, and we have an intention of disturbing your Indian possessions,'—why, then it would have been time for the government to have come down to Parliament to have told them of what had occurred, to have informed the country of the hostile proceedings which had taken place, and to have demanded those supplies which would have been required upon such an occasion. (Loud cheers.) But, sir, Russia made no such reply. Russia disavowed her agents"

Lord Palmerston then answered the personal taunt of Mr. Roebuck—

"The hon. and learned gentleman accused me of a 'mischievous restless activity' in the discharge of my official duties. Now, with regard to the term 'mischievous,' I must take the liberty of saying that the hon. and learned gentleman appears to me to have peculiar notions of what is, and what is not mischievous (loud cheers and laughter), and, therefore, he will pardon me for saying, that his opinion of my conduct having been mischievous will not disturb the conviction on my mind that it was of a contrary tendency. (Hear, hear.) That there was 'activity' the hon. and learned gentleman declares—we have his unequivocal testimony to the fact. I thank him for that compliment. He says that my 'restless activity encircled the globe.' Why, sir, the interests of England encircle the globe. (Cheers.) The sun never sets upon the interests of this country; and the individual whose duty it is to watch over the foreign relations of this country would not be worthy of his position if his activity were not commensurate with the great interests requiring his attention. That was my position; the honourable and learned gentleman admits my activity, and I thank him. With regard, then, to the Governor General, and with regard to the government itself, the honourable and learned gentleman, in his observations respecting our political conduct, and with reference to those transactions, has used very hard and very harsh expressions. But I can assure the hon. and learned gentleman that his vituperation does not affect myself or any of my colleagues. We well know that the use of such language as he has indulged in is derogatory only to the man who uses it (loud cheers); and I can assure him I do not condescend to reply to it in the same terms." (Hear, hear.)

The noble lord concluded his defence of the war in India by contending that the foreign policy of the late government generally was eminently successful, and that it had brought many important transactions to a happy conclusion. He was much cheered when he sat down.

Upon a division, the numbers were—for Mr. Roebuck's motion 75; against it, 189; majority, 114.

The House adjourned at twenty minutes after twelve.—Atlas.

EXPEDITION TO THE SOUTH POLE.—Lieutenant M'Murdo, of the "Terror," has arrived in town from this expedition, which he left at the Falkland Islands all well, and in the highest spirits possible, and states that Captain Ross had triumphantly accomplished every object for which the expedition was undertaken; and that the government at home, sensible of this, had left it entirely to Captain Ross's discretion as to whether he should return home at once, or remain out for a longer period, for the purpose of exploring other objects of interest in this hitherto perfectly known part of our globe; that Captain Ross had chosen the former, so that we may therefore expect him home early in May. Lieut. M'Murdo also states, that in consequence of the excellent discipline observed on board the "Erebus" and "Terror," and the great care and attention paid to the health of their respective crews, the "Terror" had not lost a single man since leaving England, and the "Erebus" only four—viz. one blown overboard in a gale at the Cape, another from some constitutional disease, and the other two from natural causes. Lieutenant M'Murdo is also the bearer of several valuable specimens of grasses and seeds, collected during the progress of the expedition in the southern hemisphere.

SPAIN.—The Duke de Victoria has issued a manifesto to the Spanish nation, in which he calls upon the people to assist him in maintaining order. After expressing his anxiety to maintain the rights and privileges of the Spanish people, the Regent says—

Often have I said and sworn it—as often do I now repeat and confirm it—to preserve and consolidate the freedom of our common country, to support unhurt the constitutional throne of Isabel II., and to resign at her feet the authority with which I am invested at the hour prescribed by the fundamental law of the state for this purpose Such are my duties, and so will they be fulfilled. These duties are clear, precise, defined, neither requiring explanation nor interpretation; less still for me than for any one else, and you may confide in me that they will be accomplished.

The manifesto is altogether in a conciliatory tone, but, nevertheless, it has been attacked by some of the Spanish journals.

TURKEY.—Letters from Constantinople of the 1st instant state that Nezib Pacha, of Bagdad, has conducted himself in a manner calculated to neutralise all attempts to bring the Persian Turkish question to an amicable arrangement. He has broken down the bridges on the Tigris, so as to cut off the communications of the Persian pilgrims with Kerbalah, and has invested that place. It appears that the Austrian steam question has not taken the favourable turn anticipated from the mediation of, and promises made to, our ambassador. The Syrian question is again brought forward, and is calculated to give rise to renewed interference.

GREECE.—According to the accounts from Athens of the 5th ult., the Greek government had demanded new succours from its allies. The returns of the receipts and expenditure for 1843, presented to the foreign ministers, were believed to be both exaggerated, the former in particular, which were set down at 17,000,000 drachmas, and were not expected to produce more than 14,000,000. The provincial council of Messenia, for daring to recommend a change of system and economy in the finances, had been suspended, and the majority threatened with prosecution as factious, whilst the four members of the minority were honoured with crosses of the Saviour.

DEATH OF THE MONTE VIDEAN ARMY.—The Danish schooner Randers, Captain Clausen, which has arrived at Falmouth from Monte Video, from whence she sailed on the 20th of December, brings intelligence of an action having been fought on the 11th, between the allied forces of the republic of Monte Video (under the command of General Rivera) and the army of Buenos Ayres, in which the former were defeated with considerable loss. Several decrees and proclamations have been issued by the Monte Videan government, and also a memorial from the Senate and Chamber of Representatives of the Oriental Republic of the Uruguay to the executive government for the immediate abolition of slavery.

GREECE.—A letter from Athens, dated Jan. 21, communicates the news of the bankruptcy of the Greek government. Soon after the departure of the last French steamer, it was remarked that there was great activity among the diplomatic body, and that there were frequent visits and conferences. It soon became known that the Greek government had, at last, officially notified to the representatives of the allies that the hour was come when it could no longer attempt to pay the interest of the guaranteed loan; and this announcement, it appears, was accompanied by a demand for further advances. It has also transpired that the Greek government, in thus notifying its inability to pay the allies, does not attempt to conceal the fact that it sees no prospect of being able to do so for years to come.—The Atlas.

POPULATION OF FRANCE AND ENGLAND.—If the rapid increase of population be a proof of the prosperity of a country, then has England reason to be satisfied with its progress. In 40 years, from 1801 to 1841, our numbers have grown, in England and Wales alone, from 8,872,980 to 15,911,725, being an increase of 7,038,754, or within a very small fraction of 2 per cent., annually calculated upon the population of 1801. During this time we have been sending forth emigrants by tens of thousands to our various colonies, where their presence conduces in fully as great a degree to increase the power of England as if they had stayed at home. This rate of increase is far greater than has been made in France during the same time, as will be perceived by the following table:

| | England and Wales. | France. | Inc. per cent. England. | Inc. per cent. France. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1801 .. | 8,872,980 .. | 27,349,003 | | |
| 1821 .. | 11,978,875 .. | 30,461,875 .. | 35.00 .. | 11.38 |
| 1831 .. | 13,897,187 .. | 32,569,223 .. | 16.01 .. | 6.91 |
| 1841 .. | 15,911,725 .. | 34,194,875 .. | 14.49 .. | 4.99 |

The progress in England, so great when compared with another European kingdom, assumes a different character when contrasted with the progress of the United States of America. There, the population in 1800, was 5,305,925, and in 1840, had reached 17,062,566, being an increase of 221½ per cent., more than 5½ per cent. per annum.—Athenæum.

BRIGHTON.—A curious experiment is now being made at the head of the chain pier—that of raising fresh water from below the ocean by means of an Artesian well. It is intended to bore to the extent of 70 feet, at which depth the chalk formation will, it is expected, be penetrated, and fresh water obtained, which will be applied as a jet d'eau.—Sun.

CHINA.—Wars and rumours of wars pass us by unheeded, but Peace often opens to literature and science sources of information from which nations benefit, though the channels are unseen, and the advantages unrecognized in treaties, and unthought of by negotiators and statesmen. In this way, good, we hope, will result from the peace now established with China; and which, under the special provisions of the treaty, opens to European energy and intelligence an unexplored country. Already the Horticultural Society, always active and enterprising, has resolved to send out to that country Mr. Fortune, the Superintendent of the Hothouse Department in the Society's Garden, and we have no doubt that so intelligent a botanist will soon reap a rich harvest—of fame for himself, and profit for his country.—Athenæum.

THE PRESS IN PRUSSIA.—In my last letter I mentioned that the King of Prussia had expressed his desire that George Herwegh, the poet, should be introduced to him during his late visit to Berlin, but neither myself nor any one else could foresee the consequences of that audience. The poet visited Konigsberg, the most liberal city in the kingdom of Prussia, where he was received with much enthusiasm, and from whence he addressed a letter to the King on the state of the press in his dominions, in which he observed, "'Let us be honest enemies,' were the words which your Majesty addressed to me, when I had the honour of conversing with you, and as such I consider it my duty to inform you of the little attention paid to your wishes of granting greater liberty to the press. Your ministers have prohibited the sale of my poems—have suspended a much respected teacher in consequence of his editing a newspaper in this city, which told the truth—and have seized even prints which had no letter-press, and which were published under the guarantee of your express order. Yet of my poems I am going to publish a fifth edition; Dr. Witte has obtained by voluntary subscription an annual sum exceeding the government salary; and the prohibited caricatures are in the hands of every one! thus are their objects defeated, and you are made answerable for their misdeeds." This letter appeared in the Allgemeine Zeitung, and thirty thousand copies were sold in a few days. Shortly after its appearance, the sale, purchase, and transit through Prussia of this newspaper was prohibited, and the poet, who happened to be on a visit to a friend at Stettin, was ordered to leave the country within four and twenty hours. I state these facts, which in relation to the history of the press are well worthy of being noticed in the Athenæum, and which will contribute towards a knowledge of the liberal feelings which prevail in a country which has taken the lead, it is said, in the march of intellect in Germany. [A Berlin letter, Dec. 30, in the Journal de Frankfort, says: "The Poet Herwegh arrived here yesterday by the railroad from Stettin. He was immediately arrested by the police, and compelled to depart by the first railway train for Dessau."]—Ibid.

FREDERICK THE GREAT'S ESTIMATE OF THE DESTRUCTION OF HUMAN LIFE IN THE SEVEN YEARS' WAR.—"The king calculates that the war cost him 180,000 soldiers and upwards of 1,500 officers; thirty-one generals and 161 staff-officers had either fallen in battle or died of their wounds. In the whole, the Prussian army lost during the war about 4,000 officers: for accidents and disease carried off about the same number as the sword. The Russians, who had fought four great battles, reckoned their total loss at 120,000 men. That power had not gained any extension of territory, but it had acquired a military reputation in the West, and, what was still more, it had established its authority in Poland. * * The Austrians, who had been engaged in ten battles, had sustained a total loss of 140,000 men, including the garrisons of Breslau and Schweidnitz. The French, by their own calculation, had lost 200,000; the allied English and Germans, 160,000; the Swedes, 25,000; the princes of the empire, 28,000. Thus, Frederick computed the loss of the belligerent powers at 853,000 dead."—Athenæum.

THE ECONOMIC LOSS.—"The specie of the country was quite exhausted; the silver plate in the palace of Potsdam, together with the diamond buttons and other decorations of Frederick I., were gone; and the whole kingdom, especially the margravate of Brandenburg, was dreadfully devastated. All the king's enemies had drained his dominions, and levied moreover contributions to the amount of 125 millions of dollars. The fields lay uncultivated for want of cattle and seed-corn, and partly also for want of hands to till them. * * Archenholtz, the historian of the war, and an eye-witness of the miseries which it inflicted, draws a picture so deplorable of the state in which it left Germany in general as almost to exceed belief. 'The sufferings of great part of Germany,' he says, 'had been immense. Whole provinces had been laid waste; and even in those that were not, internal commerce and industry were annihilated; and this too in spite of the large sums which France, England, Russia, and Sweden, had scattered over them, either through their armies or by means of subsidies. The amount of these sums is calculated at 500 million dollars. Great part of Pomerania and Brandenburg was converted into a desert. There were provinces in which scarcely any men were to be found, and where the women were therefore obliged to guide the plough. In others, women were as scarce as men. At every step appeared extensive tracts of uncultivated land, and the most fertile plains in Germany, on the banks of the Oder and the Wesel, looked like the wilds of the Ohio and Oronoko. An officer affirmed that he passed through seven villages in the Hessian dominions, and met with only a single individual—the Pastor of one of them.'"—Court and Times of Frederick the Great.

THE LOTTERY VICE.—The 'National,' the 'Sweeps,' and the 'Little-goes.'—As we foresaw, the toleration of these nuisances has led to their extension in every direction. From the Polytechnic, and its hundred thousand tickets at a shilling, it crept up to any number of tickets at 20s.—The 'National' forthwith speculated on the chance of 25,000 gulls, at 21s.—The 'Sweeps' tried tickling for 20*l.*—Then the pastrycooks baited with twelfth-cakes. Heretofore it has been all for 'love of art;' now 'love of literature' puts forth its claims, and DAGUERREOTYPES.—A patent has been granted to Mr. Beard for improvements in the means of taking likenesses. It consists in colouring the pictures, and the process is thus described in the Mechanics' Magazine. After a picture has been obtained, a tracing of it is made upon glass, and from this copy on glass as many other copies are taken in tracing-paper as there are different colours intended to be used. From the tracing appropriated to each colour those parts are cut out which are to be represented of that colour, so that, when superposed on the face of the picture, it covers all but those places where the colour is to be applied, (exactly in the same way as in stencilling.) The colours are applied in the state of an impalpable powder, mixed with just as much gum arabic or isinglass as suffices, when the colours are breathed upon, or otherwise gently heated, to fix the colours.—Ibid.

PARIS ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.—JAN. 2.—M. Elie de Beaumont laid before the Academy a specimen of quartz rock containing diamonds. This was wanting in geological collections; for hitherto the diamond had not been found in its natural bed, but detached from it, and in alluvial soils.—Athenæum.

CRAB-TAKING.—We soon perceived two men in a small craft, who seemed quite unconscious that was now almost upon them. Their little boat hung motionless on the then waveless mirror of the Bay, in about ten feet depth of water; and after for a minute or thereby holding their faces close upon the surface, they seemed suddenly to pull a long pole out of the water, with something adhering to its extremity We soon found that they were taking advantage of the glassy stillness of the water, to overlook the early walk of crabs. They no sooner saw these crusty crustaceans on the subaqueous sand, than they poked them behind with their long staves—the crabs turned round to revenge the indignity, and, like Russian gens-d'armes, seized upon the unsuspecting poles. These latter were slightly shaken by the fishermen, as if in pain or terror; the angry creatures clung all the closer, and were then rapidly hoisted into the boat. The moral we drew at the time, and have since maintained, was, that neither crab nor Christian should ever lose his temper."—Wilson.—Ibid.

ROMAN ANTIQUITIES.—There have lately been discovered near the town of Hyères, in the Var, the remains of an ancient Roman city. Excavations having been made to the extent of between 80 and 100 yards in a line from the sea-shore, there have been opened out a hypocaust of large dimensions, reservoirs, &c. and several walls faced with curious, paintings, one of which is semi-circular. These paintings were at first very fresh, but faded on exposure to the light and air. They are composed of arabesques figures of men and animals, flowers, and other ornaments, fantastically arranged, similar to the most beautiful of those found at Herculaneum and Pompeii. Pottery, vases, medals, coins, &c. have also been dug up.—Ibid.

ORGANIC REMAINS.—A quantity of bones of the bear, hyena, hippopotamus, rhinoceros, ox-deer, and elephant, have been discovered in a quarry on Durdham Down, Bristol; and the peculiarity of the circumstance is, that they were found in a fissure only, which, as far as can be ascertained, extends a very considerable depth lower than the workmen have yet gone.

TWO-HUMPED CAMEL, a species much employed by the Chinese, and designated by them as the "camel with feet of the wind," has just been added to the collection in the Zoological Gardens.—Ibid.

THE NILE.—According to Galignani an account has been laid before the Paris Academy of the second journey of M M. D'Arnaud and Sabatier to the sources of the Nile, in 1841 and 1843, by the western branch, or White Nile. "The voyage on the Nile from Cartoum was to a distance of 500 leagues. The travellers attained the 4th deg. 42 min. of latitude, almost under the meridian of Cairo, showing the error of accounts as to the direction of the White Nile. They saw no mountains, although what are called the Mountains of the Moon are traced on all the maps of the 5th to the 7th degree of latitude. The bifurcations found by these gentlemen are formed by islands only, and there are immense marshes. The inhabitants are reported to be very numerous, of a pacific character, varying in race, language, and physiognomy. Some are of a bronze colour, with soft hair. In one of the tribes the men are armed with lances of more than 12 feet in length, the iron heads forming nearly a fourth of this measure. In another tribe the moon is their deity; if engaged in combat, they leave off the moment that the moon rises. Messrs. D'Arnaud and Sabatier, when in the dominions of the King of the Behrs, found there various articles of the merchandise of India. This chief, they say, has his palace on the water, and it can only be approached by swimming. His guards are two battalions of women, armed with spears and bucklers. His ministers never enter the interior of the palace of their king, except at the moment when they have reason to suppose that he is attacked with mortal illness, and it is then their duty to strangle him, to prevent a natural death."—We presume that the expression "Voyage on the Nile," is ascribable to the haste of the translator, and that we are merely to understand by it the journey up the Nile. The Western Nile or White River ceases to be navigable a little above Al Ais in the same parallel with Sennar. The general character of this river,—divided into many channels through level marshes or over gravelly plains, was made known to us by the Turkish expedition of 1825, which explored the country to the extent of 15 days' journey above Al Ais: with respect to the water which is said to surround the dwelling of the King of the Behrs, it may be observed that the Galla in Abyssinia have some knowledge of a great sea or lake in the interior, which they say is so wide, that it takes a vulture three hours to fly over it. Of the Mountains of the Moon which seem to have absconded, we have much to say, but we shall reserve our observations on that and the other topics elucidated by MM. D'Arnaud and Sabatier, till a more ample account of the discoveries of those gentlemen shall be before us.—Athenæum.

ASIATIC SOCIETY.—Dec. 3.—Professor Wilson in the chair.—Major R. Wilbraham, and J. M. Macleod, Esq. were elected Resident Members.

A letter from Lieut. Cunningham, of the Bengal Engineers, to Colonel Sykes was read, giving an account of the discovery and identification of the ancient city of Sankasya, mentioned as the kingdom of Kusadhwaja, in the ancient poem of the Ramayana. This city is noticed by Fa Hian, the Chinese traveller of the fifth century, by the name of Seng-kiashi; and he professes to have seen there the ladder by which Buddha came down from heaven. The site of this city has hitherto been unknown. Rémusat, in the French translation of Fa Hian's travels, suggests that it is in the district of Farrakhabad, in the Doab; and Wilson agrees with him. Lieut. Cunningham, in an attempt to trace the route of the Chinese travellers, was so fortunate as to find the ruins of the lost capital, at a spot twelve kos from Farrakhabad, and twenty-five from Kanouj, on the north, or left bank of the Kali Nadi; (a kos is about two miles). A village of about sixty houses, standing on a mound which has once been a fort, in the midst of the ancient city, still retains the name of Samkassa, by which Samkasya is called in Pali writing; and this village is surrounded on all sides, within a circuit of six miles, by a succession of lofty ruined mounds of brick and earth, said to be the wrecks of the ancient city. The Múnshi, employed by Lieut. Cunningham, was struck with wonder at their extent; and exclaimed that they were larger than Kanouj. One of the ruined mounds was eighty feet in height, and was surmounted by a temple of Siva, erected two centuries ago by a Gosain, whose descendant still resides there. It is built of those old bricks of large size, which are found wherever Buddhistical remains exist. An interesting portion of the ruins is a small mound of bricks dedicated to the worship of the Nága, or snake, where the women of the village go in procession yearly, pray for rain, and make offerings of milk, which they pour on the spot. This is, without doubt, the dragon of Fa Hian, which appeared once a year, from whose favour the people of Seng-kia-shi obtained genial rains. It is said that Raja Jayachandra, of Kanouj, marched against Samkassa in 1183 A.D., rased it to the ground, and ploughed it up into fields at the instigation of the envious Brahmans. The tradition is countenanced by the fact that the whole is now ploughed up, the bricks piled up along the borders of the fields; that ancient coins are frequently found there; and that there are no vestiges whatever of Mohammedan occupation of any kind. Lieut. Cunningham describes, also, some ruins which he believes to be Buddistical at the old town of Maláwan, on the road from Mathura to Samkassa. They consist of squared kunker stones, piled upon solid foundations of large bricks. Several stone Buddhistical figures lie about the mounds; one is a seated figure with the hands laid flat in the lap; and is attended by a small erect figure on each side,—a Buddha and his Buddhisatwas. A red stone, of five feet long, has the two recumbent lions, which are the commonest ornaments of the pedestals of Buddistical figures. Several other remains of Buddhism, at Kanouj, and other places, were observed by Lieut. Cunningham, who remarks on the facility with which vast discoveries might be made in India by a person going leisurely about the country, instead of marching through it on duty, as was his case, without the possibility of a single halt; and concludes with an expression of his conviction of the importance and utility of making such discoveries.—Ibid.

TOTAL ECLIPSE OF THE SUN.—'Some Remarks on the Total Eclipse of the Sun, on July 8th, 1842.' By Francis Baily, Esq., Vice-President of this Society.

It is well known to many members of this Society that I proposed to proceed to the Continent, during the last summer, for the Express purpose of observing the total eclipse of the Sun which was to take place on the morning of July 8th, civil reckoning. This object has been accomplished; and I flatter myself that an account of that rare phenomenon, by an eye-witness, may be acceptable to this meeting. A statement of the principal observations that I made, was communicated by me, to one of the Vice-Presidents of this Society, in a letter written at Milan within 48 hours after the eclipse, whilst the circumstances were still fresh in my memory; and they do not differ from those that I am now about to relate more in detail, and which I am desirous here to place on record.

A total eclipse of the sun, in any particular portion of the globe, is an event of very rare occurrence, since only four or five of these remarkable phenomena are recorded as having been seen in Europe during the last century: to which we may add another that was fortunately seen at sea, by Don Ulloa. But, the accounts of these several eclipses are by no means satisfactory, since they are discordant in many particulons; which probably has arisen not only from the sudden and unexpected appearances that occurred, but also from the loose description that has been given of them, either by the observers themselves, or by those who drew up the accounts, and perhaps did not fully comprehend the intention and meaning of the authors. The difficulty also is very much increased from the want of drawings to represent the exact appearances seen; which are always more readily understood by this method, than by any verbal description. During the present century another eclipse of this kind has taken place in the United States of America, which was observed by Mr. Ferrer; and a minute account of the same, together with a drawing of its appearance, has been published in the sixth volume of the Transactions of the American Philosophical Society. These are the only cases of interest that are on record since the invention of the telescope, within which period we must necessarily limit our attempt to acquire any useful information relative to this remarkable phenomenon. But, I must proceed with my narrative.

My original intention was to have taken up my station, for observing the eclipse, at Digne, in the south of France; and I had proceeded on my way thither till I arrived near Lyons, when I found that I had a few days to spare: and, as I had proposed to visit Venice before my return home, I altered my route, and resolved to proceed in an easterly direction, along the line of the moon's shadow, till the day before the eclipse, when I proposed to halt at the most convenient place that might offer. I therefore turned off towards Chambery, and crossing the Alps at Mount Cenis, passed through Turin, Asti, and Alessandria, and arrived at Pavia about noon on July 7th. As this place was directly on the central line of the moon's shadow, I resolved at once to make it my head quarters. I had intended to apply to the director of the university there, for the use of a convenient place where I might observe the eclipse: but I was agreeably anticipated in this respect, by a visit from one of the Professors, who having heard of my arrival and my object, immediately and obligingly came to offer me the use of any one of the apartments in the university that might be considered most adapted for my purpose. On accompanying him to the university, with this object, I selected one of the upper rooms of the building, which was admirably adapted for making the observations that I had in view. He then very kindly expressed his readiness to furnish me with any instruments at the university, that I might require for my use. But, I had taken with me from London the same 3½-feet telescope by Dollond, that I had formerly used in the annular eclipse of May 15, 1836, as already described in the tenth volume of the Memoirs of the Society: and I therefore informed him that all I wanted was to be left alone during the whole time of the eclipse, being fully persuaded that nothing is so injurious to the making of accurate observations, as the intrusion of unnecessary company. Acting upon this hint, he immediately took the key from the outside of the door, and placed it in the inside, and told me that I might lock myself in: but there was no occasion for this precaution, for although I heard numerous foot-steps pass the door, in their way to an adjoining apartment, which was also used as an observatory on this occasion, no one attempted to enter the room in which I was located. At four o'clock in the morning of the eventful day I went to the university, in order to prepare for the observation: and at that early hour I found many of the students and official persons walking about. At sunrise a thin stratum of clouds was seen in the east near the horizon, but the sun soon got above this obstruction, and the remainder of the day was beautifully clear and serene: not a cloud was to be seen in any part of the heavens, visible from my window, during the whole time of the eclipse. It was as fine a day as that which I had fortunately witnessed in Scotland, at the annular eclipse of 1836. I had a very good observation of the commencement, and the end of the eclipse; but I did not pay any great attention to these secondary objects, and, as my chronometer was not adjusted to correct mean time, these observations can be of no use, except as indicating the duration of the eclipse, which, according to my reckoning, was 1h. 56m. 39s.6 mean time. As the moon advanced towards her central conjunction with the sun, I watched very carefully, and with much anxiety, the approach of the border of the moon towards the still illuminated portion of the sun, which was now rapidly assuming a fine crescent shape, the precursor of total obscuration. I used a red coloured glass, in order to observe the phenomenon, notwithstanding the remarks and advice to the contrary by an American observer: and the power of the eye glass was about 40. When the total obscuration took place, the coloured glass was removed. I at first looked out very narrowly for the black lines which were seen in the annular eclipse of 1836; as they would probably precede the string of beads. These lines however did not make their appearance; or, at least, they were not seen by me. But, the beads were distinctly visible; and on their first appearance I had noted down, on paper, the time of my chronometer, and was in the act of counting the seconds in order to ascertain the time of their duration, when I was astounded by a tremendous burst of applause from the streets below, and at the same moment was electrified at the sight of one of the most brilliant and splendid phenomena that can well be imagined. For, at that instant, the dark body of the moon was suddenly surrounded with a corona, or kind of bright glory, similar in shape and relative magnitude to that which painters draw round the heads of saints, and which by the French is designated an auréole.

Pavia contains many thousand inhabitants, the major part of whom were at this early hour, walking about the streets and squares, or looking out of windows, in order to witness this long talked of phenomenon: and when the total obscuration took place, which was instantaneous, there was an universal shout from every observer, which "made the welkin ring;" and, for the moment, withdrew my attention from the object with which I was immediately occupied. I had indeed anticipated the appearance of a luminous circle round the moon during the time of total obscurity: but I did not expect, from any of the accounts of preceding eclipses that I had read, to witness so magnificent an exhibition as that which took place. I had imagined (erroneously as it seems) that the corona, as to its brilliant or luminous appearance, would not be greater than that faint crepuscular light which sometimes takes place on a summer's evening, and that it would encircle the moon like a ring. I was therefore somewhat surprised and astonished at the splendid scene which now so suddenly burst upon my view. It rivetted my attention so effectually that I quite lost sight of the string of beads, which however were not completely closed when this phenomenon first appeared. I apprehend that only a few seconds of time (perhaps 3 or 4) were wanting to complete the perfect obscuration of the sun: but I cannot speak on this point with much certainty. I had previously noted down some of the principal objects to which I was desirous of directing my attention during the time of total obscuration, and which seem to have given rise to much discussion on former occasions. These, as far as the corona is concerned, had reference principally to its colour, its lustre or paleness, its magnitude and extent, its state of motion or repose, and its encircling the sun or the moon as its centre: then, as to the moon, whether any holes were discernible, or any coruscations of light on the dark side: next, as to the amount of darkness in the atmosphere, the change of colour in surrounding objects, and some other points not requisite here to enumerate further. The time however for making accurate observations of this kind is always so short in total eclipses (in the present case being less than 2½ minutes) that one individual can scarcely attend to all the objects that are requisite to be noticed; more especially if his attention is called away (as in this instance) by any new phenomenon which had not been previously observed, or even anticipated. It is therefore desirable, in any future occurrences of this nature, that a division of labour should be made between 2 or 3 observers at the same place: each attending solely to the part which he has selected for his particular object.

The breadth of the corona, measured from the circumference of the moon, appeared to me to be nearly equal to half the moon's diameter. It had the appearance of brilliant rays. The light was most dense (indeed, I may say quite dense) close to the border of the moon, and became gradually and uniformly more attenuate as its distance therefrom increased, assuming the form of diverging rays, in a rectilinear line, and at the extremity were more divided and of unequal length: so that in no part of the corona could I discover the regular and well defined shape of a ring at its outer margin. It appeared to me to have the sun for its centre, but I had no means of taking any accurate measures for determining this point. Its colour was quite white, not pearl colour, nor yellow, nor red; and the rays had a vivid and flickering appearance, somewhat like that which a gas-light illumination might be supposed to assume, if formed into a similar shape. I should think it not impossible to give a tolerable representation of this phenomenon by some artificial contrivance. I have seen something like it, in miniature, by the reflection of the sun's light from a piece of broken glass: and on a larger scale by viewing the sun through a grove of trees: but in both these cases it is necessary to obscure the central portion of the rays. The brilliancy of the corona was however quite as great as that which is produced by either of the methods here alluded to. I have annexed hereto a drawing of the corona, representing as nearly as I can preserve in my recollection, the appearance of its shape and extent, and the ramification of the rays, at the time of the middle of the total obscuration. I had no time or opportunity for ascertaining the deviation of the moon from the central position of the corona, at any other point of its progress.

Splendid and astonishing however as this remarkable phenomenon really was, and although it could not fail to call forth the admiration and applause of every beholder, yet I must confess that there was at the same time something in its singular and wonderful appearance that was appalling: and I can readily imagine that uncivilized nations may occasionally have become alarmed and terrified at such an object, more especially in times when the true cause of the occurrence may have been but faintly understood, and the phenomenon itself wholly unexpected. But the most remarkable circumstance attending this phenomenon (at least, that which most engaged my observation during the short interval of total obscuration, and drew my attention from other objects of interest) was the appearance of three large protuberances apparently emanating from the circumference of the moon, but evidently forming a portion of the corona. They had the appearance of mountains, of a prodigious elevation: their colour was red, tinged with lilac or purple; perhaps the colour of the peach blossom would more nearly represent it. They somewhat resembled the snowy tops of the Alpine mountains, when coloured by the rising or setting sun. They resembled the Alpine mountains also in another respect, inasmuch as their light was perfectly steady, and had none of that flickering or sparkling motion so visible in other parts of the corona. All the three projections were of the same roseate cast of colour, and very distinct from the brilliant vivid white light that formed the corona: but they differed from each other in magnitude. [Mr. Baily exhibited a drawing on which was represented the appearance of the shape, size, and position of these several protuberances.] The whole of these three protuberances were visible even to the last moment of total obscuration, at least, I never lost sight of them, when looking in that direction; and, when the first ray of light was admitted from the sun, they vanished with the corona altogether, and day-light was instantaneously restored. My attention was so constantly taken up by these remarkable and unexpected appearances, that I omitted to watch for the re-appearance of the beads, and therefore cannot add my testimony to the re-occurrence of that phenomenon.

The darkness, during the time of total obscuration, was not so great as I had anticipated. I had caused a lighted candle to be prepared, in order to be ready in case of need; but I eventually extinguished it: as I found I could read very small print, and note the time by my chronometer, without its assistance. Prior to the commencement of the eclipse I had observed a great number of swallows flying about; but towards the middle of the eclipse they had all vanished, and did not make their appearance again till a few minutes after the first ray of light emanated from the sun, when they were as active, and soon became as numerous, as ever. During the time of total obscuration, I examined carefully with the telescope the body of the moon, but could not discern any bright spot that might be mistaken for a hole; nor could I discover any coruscations issuing from the dark side of the moon. These, however, were only momentary observations. I was told that several stars were seen, but I could not spare the time to look about for them myself: every moment was occupied with more important matter. Having thus given a detail of all the principal circumstances that occurred, and precisely in the manner in which they presented themselves to my view, as far as my recollection (committed to paper, immediately after the event) will assist me, I had intended to have subjoined to this communication an account of the several phenomena that had been noted on former occasions of this kind, and to have compared the various descriptions with each other, in order to see how far any differences that were observed might be reconciled with present appearances. Or, in other words, to have presented a sort of historical view of the subject, somewhat similar to the plan which I adopted in my memoir relative to the annular eclipse in 1836. But, I fear that I may already have encroached too much on the time of the meeting: and I am moreover of opinion that a review of this kind can be taken with greater advantage at a more advanced period of time, when we may be in possession also of the several observations that have been made on the present eclipse, at different places on the Continent, and which might thus be introduced into the comparison. Should such a measure be thought desirable and useful to future observers, I may probably intrude again upon the time and attention of the Society.—Athenæum.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MEMORIALS OF AFFGHANISTAN.

BY J. H. STOCQUELER.

ON the 15th of April, 1843, will be published, in one volume, the whole of the dispatches, narratives, state papers, &c. connected with the expedition to, and occupation of, Affghanistan, between the 1st of October, 1838, and the 1st October, 1842. These documents, arranged in chronological order, will be connected by a brief and succinct narrative of the operations in Affghanistan and Scinde, commencing with the assembly of the Army of the Indus at Ferozepore, and terminating with the evacuation of the former state after the restoration of the prisoners.

The object of this work is to present, at one view, the whole of the occurrences which have distinguished a most eventful period of British Indian History, and thus to facilitate the references of the student, the politician, and the soldier.

The work will be illustrated with sketches of remarkable places, striking incidents, portraits, costumes, &c. &c.

PRICE 20 RUPEES.

☞ Amongst the documents contained in this work will be found Lord Auckland's Proclamation, the despatches of Sir John Keane, General Wiltshire, General Sale, Sir Willoughby Cotton, General Pollock, General Nott, &c.; the narratives of Captain Outram's pursuit of Dost Mahomed; of Captain Gray's escape; of the destruction of the Goorkha battalion; of Captain Ferris's escape from Peshbolak; of the disaster which befell Skinner's horse in the Bolan Pass; of Major Brown's defence of Kahun; of the defence of Kyelat-i-Ghilzie; of the rise and progress of the insurrection at Cabul; of the retreat from Cabul to Jellalabad, &c.; Lord Ellenborough's Proclamation, &c. &c.

AGENCY FOR THE RECEIPT AND TRANSMISSION OF PACKAGES BY THE MONTHLY STEAMERS TO AND FROM INDIA.

MR. THOMAS HILL, Agent at Southampton for the Oriental and Peninsular Steam Navigation Company, having opened an Office at that port for the purpose abovementioned, begs to submit to the Indian public the rates and conditions upon which packages are received and forwarded. Mr. HILL feels assured, from the advantages of his position, that he will be enabled to afford the highest satisfaction to those who may honour his Agency with their support.

Bombay, Ceylon, Madras, and Calcutta.—For each parcel 5s. with 5 per cent. on the value (Assurance, Guarantee, &c.) and further 1s. for every lb. to the extent of 12lb.; for every lb. beyond 12lb., 10d. to the extent of 24lb.; for every lb. beyond 24lb., 8d. to the extent of 36lb.; and for every lb. beyond 36lb. 6d. to the extent of 50lb.

Packages despatched by T. HILL are forwarded through Egypt with the Mails, and under ordinary circumstances reach Bombay in 35 days; Ceylon 40; Madras 45; and Calcutta 48 days.

Letters of advice to be sent to T. HILL, or his Agents when a package is sent off to their address, stating contents and value.

Payment of charges is required to be made by Post or otherwise immediately the sender is apprised of the amount, otherwise the Package will be registered as unpaid and charged double, which must be paid before it can be delivered up or forwarded.

Dues and Duties in England, as well as in Egypt, will be paid by T. H. out of the above rates.

Packing in Tin, being absolutely necessary for the protection of Jewellery, Apparel, Books and Medicines from the Sea air, &c. the same will be done at Southampton and Calcutta free of charge.

A Declaration of true value must be sent in the absence of which no package can be registered.

A Receipt will be forwarded to the Owner as soon as the package comes to hand, which Receipt need not be sent out or home to claim the property.

Damage or Loss occasioned by the Act of God, the Queen's Enemies, Vermin, or fire, afloat or on land, and all other dangers of the Seas, Rivers, Steam, and Navigation whatsoever, agreed to be borne and made good.—T. HILL takes upon himself this additional responsibility in consequence of the frequent loss of property from some of the abovenamed causes, and knowing that it is seldom an individual thinks it worth the trouble and expense of opening a Policy for a small amount.

CAUTION.—T. H. will not be responsible in any way for a package containing a Letter, Bill of Exchange, Money, or any Liquid or dangerous substances; but will hold the sender responsible for any evil consequences proceeding from the same.

SCINDE.—Since our last issue intelligence has been received of the capture of Meerpore and Omercote. Meerpore was occupied by Sir Charles Napier without opposition. As the Indus was rapidly rising at Hydrabad, he felt it his duty to fix his head quarters there, and to send a detachment against Omercote. It was said to be defended by a powerful garrison; and it was expected to require a long and arduous siege, which it appeared unadvisable to undertake at so advanced a period of the season, while the Indus was rising with universal force. He resolved therefore to defer the investment of the place, and had issued orders for the retirement of the troops when their commander was informed that it had been evacuated. Between his anxiety to gratify the desires of the General in Chief by the occupation of this important post, and his desire not to disobey positive orders, he knew not what course to adopt. In this dilemma, Lieut. Brown, of the Bengal Engineers, rode forty miles to Head Quarters and forty miles back again, in broad day, under a Scindian sun, in the month of April, to obtain the General's permission to take possession of the Fort. The permission was of course readily given. This extraordinary exertion of Lieut. Brown is mentioned in the despatch to the Governor General, in a manner best calculated to excite admiration—by a simple narrative of the fact. We have now therefore possession of every fortress in Scinde worth holding. It is to all appearance completely subjugated; the Ameers have been removed to Bombay, and the administration of the country, the collection of the revenue, and the charge of the Police, has been formally assumed by British officers.

Sir Charles Napier in issuing his instructions to the Magistrates and Collectors of Hydrabad, Kurachee and Sukker, directs that they shall not make any avoidable change in the ancient customs and laws of the country as we now find them; because "the conquest of the country is a sufficient convulsion for the people of that country." Slavery is among the most ancient customs and laws of Scinde, and the institution itself is so intimately interwoven with the habits and feelings of society that few circumstances are likely to create a greater convulsion than the sudden and peremptory abolition of it. Lord Ellenborough peremptorily decreed freedom to every slave in Scinde within a week after hearing that the country was ours, and made all Acts of Parliament which relate to Slavery current in that newly acquired province. It is impossible to reconcile this decree of the Governor General with the orders of the Governor of Scinde. They are diametrically opposed to each other, yet the Governor General has approved and confirmed the General's Orders. Are we to understand by this confirmation that Slavery is not abolished in Scinde, and that Lord Ellenborough has availed himself of the opening afforded by Sir Charles Napier's orders, to cast into abeyance, an order of his own, which, under the circumstances in which it was passed, will be pronounced by the most ardent abolitionist, not only injudicious but pernicious?

The Ameers of Scinde have arrived at Bombay and have been treated by the Governor with all that generous consideration which it was in his power to bestow on them. We copy from the Times an account of their demeanour and appearance. It is calculated to create painful interest. Though the Ameers have no claim to that greatness of character which is 'canonized by fall from power,' it is impossible to contemplate without pain, the situation of men who not three months since were independent princes ruling over a large country, and honoured even to adulation, and are now reduced to the humiliating condition of prisoners of war, shut out from every association which could impart pleasure, and left to ruminate on their fall without any hope of relief. Though in their Government they were despotic, and commerce decayed, and the land withered under their sway, yet so sudden and calamitous a change in their circumstances involuntarily fills the mind with melancholy emotions.

"'Tis but the same rehearsal of the past," says Byron, and here is an exemplification of his assertion. Lord Ellenborough came out to restore peace to India,—and we have had two bloody battles in a war of his own kindling. He importuned Generals Nott and Pollock to retreat, retreat, retreat, while the prisoners, men, women, and children, were yet in the hands of the enemy, and the stain on our banner was not obliterated,—and he has now been engaged in hastening reinforcements into a country with which we were at peace when he landed in India a twelvemonth ago. He censured Lord Auckland for engaging in a war which was a mistake and might be a crime,—he has now given his opponents occasion to say that he has himself plunged into a war which is a crime, and may be a mistake. He who considered Dost Mahomed as having become our prisoner by unjustifiable means, now holds the Ameers of Scinde as his own prisoners of war. The Governor General who declared he was content with the empire we were in possession of on the 1st of October, has added to it a large kingdom, fertile as Egypt and larger than Portugal. He who declared that the Indus was our boundary, has appointed British Officers to collect revenue and administer justice in a province beyond that river.

THE LANDHOLDER'S SOCIETY'S PETITION ON THE NEW SALE LAW.—We regret that we are unable to find room for the petition of the Landholder's Society for a modification of the New Sale Law; but the object it proposes is so simple, and the objections it advances to the existing system lie within so small a compass, that the following recapitulation of them may be sufficient. In the original draft of the Act it was provided, that all estates, of which the revenue had not been paid up on certain fixed days, (about four in the year) should be absolutely put up to auction and sold. It also directed that a notification of the Estates to be thus sold should be affixed in the Collector's office, at every Civil Court, and every thanna in the district, as well as on the estate advertized, not more than one month, and not less than fifteen days before the day of sale. In the Act which was eventually passed, this provision was omitted, and it was ordained that the estate should be peremptorily sold the day after the forfeiture had been incurred by the non-payment of the periodical instalment.

The Landholder's Society now prays that the provision which was originally made for giving adequate notice of the sale, may be restored; and they support the petition by the following observations. First, that the sale of the estate without notice is injurious to the defaulter, who receives the surplus proceeds of the sale after the public dues have been paid; in as much as the estate cannot be expected to sell for much when the fact of the sale is not known to those who have the means of paying an adequate price for it. Secondly. That it is injurious to mortgagees, who have advanced money on the security of the estate; and is calculated generally to discourage the devotion of capital, by way of loan, to agricultural operations. When the estate is thus sold, in a measure, under the rose, it is not likely to fetch a full price, and the mortgagee has little prospect of obtaining any thing like complete repayment of his loan. The publicity originally proposed would have had the effect of attracting purchasers and enhancing the value of the estate by competition, or it would have enabled the mortgagee to protect his own interests by himself bidding for the estate. Thirdly. The capitalist who is desirous of investing his money in landed property, has no opportunity of doing so under the present system at the periodical sales. He resides generally in Calcutta, or in the large towns in the interior, and it is impossible during the short interval which elapses between the forfeiture and sale of an estate, that he should be able to make arrangements for the purchase of it. It is impracticable for more reasons than one; but it is enough to state that it is physically impossible. The consequence is stated to be, that the estates fall into the hands of land speculators, or the Native officers of the Civil Court and of the Collectorate. Fourthly. The want of due publicity compromises the interests of co-parceners, who are now allowed to purchase an estate thus brought to the hammer in which they have a share. If they happen to be on the spot, well and good. If they are not within eight or ten hours hail of the Collector, they cannot presently the estate by bidding for it. The last reason given by the Landholder's Society, that the situation of the holders of under-tenures is deteriorated by the present system, appears to us to be feeble. Their situation is equally unfortunate, whoever may purchase the estate. Their tenures are liable to be cancelled, and their rents to be enhanced whether the purchaser be a man of substance or a mere speculator; and experience proves that there is not much to choose between them, as it regards consideration for the ryots. The frequent sale of estates and the repeated change of masters is death to the happiness of the tenantry; and it is therefore advantageous to them that the estate should pass into the hands of a man who has the desire and the power of retaining it, rather than of one who buys it in order to sell it again at an advantage; otherwise, it must be indifferent to whom the power of the screw is transferred.

The arguments brought against the system may therefore be resolved into two; the first, that estates when sold without due publication, do not realize an adequate sum, whereby the interests of the unfortunate defaulter, and of the mortgagee are sacrificed; and secondly, that the want of publicity prevents the distant capitalist from investing his money in land, or the absent co-parcener from protecting his interest by purchasing the estate. The Society state that the value of estates has deteriorated under the operation of the new law. This statement, however, is altogether new, and quite opposed to the general impression of its results. We have always understood that since it came into operation, not only had the number of estates exposed to sale been diminished, but that the price bid for them exceeded the sums which had been realized for some years under the old system. The memorial declares that the value obtained in 1839-40 was 310 per cent. on the annual rent; that is, a little above three years' purchase; in 1840-41, 436 per cent., or about four years and a half's purchase; and in 1841-42, during the operation of the law, 264 per cent. or two years and a half's purchase. These statements may refer only to a single district laboring under peculiar disadvantages; or they may form the average of a general calculation which embraces every district. In this latter case they would certainly go far to shew that the law had failed to accomplish one of its chief objects, and ought to be modified. The Society have evidently had access to documents, from which these data have been drawn. We wish therefore they could at the same time have furnished us with a comparison of the number of estates brought to the hammer, through default, since the new law took effect, with the number usually put up to sale under the old system, as the feasibility of that public notice which they pray for, must depend in some measure on the number of notices to be thus issued. The more that number is multiplied, the greater is the chance that the sale will be vitiated by the non publication of some of them within the limited period. We believe there have been instances in which the sale of valuable estates—which require to be advertised—has been cancelled, and that recently, because the Judge did not bestir himself to affix the proclamation sent him in his Court in due time. According to a recent decision of the Board, the non publication of a single notice within the time, not only nullifies the sale, but renders it necessary that the process of proclamation should begin de novo. If therefore any one Thannadar or Moonsiff should fail, from whatever cause, through neglect or collusion, to affix the notice, so that fifteen clear days do not elapse between the publication and the sale, the sale must be postponed for three weeks or a month, and the estate must thus remain without a proprietor for nearly two months; for all the proprietary rights of the old landlord cease from the moment he is declared a defaulter. The inconvenience to which this would subject the purchaser must be taken into consideration in any modification of the law.

This new system of sales was not promulgated without fear and trembling. It was a bold attempt to inforce punctuality among the most dilatory people perhaps on earth, at the risk, if it failed, of having half the estates of the country thrown upon the hands of Government, and the collection of the revenue embarrassed to an incalculable degree. The experiment has succeeded almost miraculously; but while its success hung in suspense, it was not without reason that Government declined to encumber the experiment by making the publication of numerous notices indispensible to the validity of a sale. They might have proved to be so numerous as to render it impossible for the sales to proceed on the appointed day for want of due notice. The act might have broken down in the first quarter, to the great inconvenience of the public interests. There has now been more than a twelvemonth's experience of the operation of the law, and the object sought by the Society may be reconsidered with advantage. There may be objections of which we are not aware to the concession of this point; and it might endanger the principle of the new system; but in ignorance of any such arguments, we must give our vote for the restoration of the clause, and the due publication of notices previous to the sale. It is but reasonable that the defaulter should receive as high a price as can be obtained for an estate, the loss of which deprives him of the means of support. It is desirable that the mortgagee should not lose the amount he has advanced on an estate. It is important to the interests of society, not less than of Government, that capitalists should be enabled to invest their money in land. It is one of the strongest arguments in favour of a zemindarry over a ryotwarry settlement, that the wealth which is accumulated in traffic or by economy, can be invested in the purchase of land; and whatever encourages this investment, must, from that circumstance recommend itself to Government. If it be a fact that under the operation of this law estates have fallen to the value of only two years and a half's purchase, it is very desirable than an effort should be made to relieve our fiscal administration from such an opprobrium. And as the request is reasonable, and offered from no factious motives, the mere fact that the alteration would gratify a large body of wealthy and respectable natives, is a strong argument in its favour, even if so large a number of the European officers of Government had not declared themselves strongly in favour of it.

Deputy Magistrates.—We have at length the pleasure of seeing the draft of an Act for strengthening the Police and Criminal branch of the Judicial Department by the appointment of Deputy Magistrates. It is now more than ten years since the glaring defects of our police system were forced on the notice of Government, and more than four years since the Committee appointed to search for the cause and cure of the disease sent in their report. During this period we have conquered, lost, won and abandoned Affghanistan; we have fortified and relinquished Herat; we have liberated Russian slaves at Khiva; dictated a peace to the Emperor of China under the walls of Nankin; and added Scinde, fertile as Egypt, to the British territories. We have struck all Asia with surprize by the extent and magnitude of our enterprizes. But we have not found either leisure or means for giving internal security to the people whose labour has furnished us, for the most part, with resources for these distant efforts. In this devotion of our national energies to foreign and dazzling expeditions, instead of to humbler and but more useful reforms at home, the Government of India has only followed the footsteps of the Government of England, which is extending its influence to every quarter of the globe, while half its population is sunk into such a state of brutal ignorance as to be unable to write their names. The excuse is, that Government has had no time for domestic reformations; but this is only to say, in other words, that it considers them less important than the objects for which it has found time. If the mental improvement of the people at home, or the protection of property in India had been deemed a matter of paramount concern, it would have required no very long search to find both time and money for it.

The present enactment is very simple. It empowers the local Government to appoint uncovenanted Deputy Magistrates, to perform either the Police or the Judicial functions of the Magistracy, leaving the distribution of their powers and the amount of their remuneration to the discretion of the local Authorities. This was evidently the first step in improvement. The country required an intermediate class of officers between the Daroga and the covenanted Magistrate. It required functionaries of this order, to a larger extent than the peculiar organization of the Civil service could furnish. To secure the services of such men, it was necessary to have recourse to the ability which the country itself presented. The best constructed system of reform must have been futile while Government was without the power of employing agents to work it. That power is now conferred on it by the Supreme Legislative authority in the country; and we shall now be happily enabled to hold the local Government "personally and individually responsible"—to use Mr. Cobden's phrase,—for the establishment of an efficient Police. Nothing is now wanting but the heart to devote to this important branch of public duty, a sum equal to a fourth of the annual profits of its opium speculations.

It is to be hoped that the power thus conferred on the local Government, will not be allowed to lie dormant, but that every district will be supplied with three or four Deputy Magistrates, to be stationed in the centre of small circles, so that they may be enabled completely to command them, and to allow nothing of importance to transpire in them without their knowledge. After having administered the Government of Bengal for more than seventy years, it is humiliating to think that we are nearly as ignorant of its internal condition, as on the day we took it into our own hands. Hitherto we have had no agency through which this valuable information could be collected. Our European functionaries have been for the most part stationary at particular places, the extent of their official duties has left them no leisure for acquiring a knowledge of the country committed to their charge, while the migratory habits which Government has unwisely encouraged, left them little desire for collecting information relative to districts which they were likely so soon to quit. The establishment of Deputy Magistrates will give us a class of men of superior attainments, whose official duties will give them every facility for collecting statistical facts in the circle which they will be required to perambulate. It is much to be desired that the collection of such facts, as shall enable us to legislate with light and knowledge, and not in the dark, will be made a part of their official duty. A list of every village in their beat, of the number of houses and residents, the occupations of the people; their respective casts and classes; the register of deaths, the number of pucka houses, (to mark the progress of wealth;) of the Schools or Colleges it may contain; the number, character and allowances of the village watchman, together with many other details, which might be gradually collected, without interfering with their magisterial duties, ought to exist in the office of each Deputy Magistrate; and if he be a man of intelligent and active mind, he will feel a pleasure in prosecuting these researches. There can be no question that this information would serve in no small degree to facilitate his official labours.

There is one error in the draft Act which will doubtless be rectified when it comes again under the notice of the Legislative Council. It restricts the appointments to Natives of India. The new offices ought however to be placed on the same footing as the office of uncovenanted Judge, and thrown open to all classes, Europeans, East Indian and Native.

FEMALE COOLIES.—A notification has just been issued by order of the Deputy Governor, which states his surprize that the number of females who have accompanied the Coolies recently sent to the Mauritius, does not exceed on an average fifteen per cent. and his determination to adopt more stringent orders for the selection of those coolies whose families are willing to go with them, if the disproportion is not rectified. It is worthy of observation, that while the general average of female emigrants is thus stated at fifteen per cent. we find, on reference to the valuable statement furnished by the Star, that the proportion shipped by each agent presents a very material diversity. The proportion of females to males shipped by

| | | per cent. |

| „ | Adam, Scott and Co. | 3⅜ |

This difference may be the result of inattention, or of instructions from the island, but it is desirable that a more reasonable proportion should be enforced by public authority. It will be found advantageous to the Coolies themselves, by presenting some cheque on their immoral propensities; it will be still more important to the women and children who would otherwise be abandoned to destitution. It will also prove no less beneficial to the planters themselves, inasmuch as it will create inducements for the emigrants to remain after the period of their servitude has expired. We are happy to find that the subject has been taken up by the local Government in good earnest. Already have more than two thousand male labourers embarked without being accompanied by their families. Some of these may have been men without domestic ties, others may have been unmarried youths, but more than half of them consists of individuals who have left the country without making any provision for those whom they are bound to support, and have thus "abandoned their families to the parish." This evil which is perhaps inseparable from the system, should be reduced to the smallest possible amount.

The labourers who embarked for Demarara are returning in a body from thence, the period of their engagements having expired. They are represented as having saved on the average a hundred dollars a piece, and they might have saved more if they had been fairly dealt with by the planters. Their prospects in the island were very flattering, but they longed for home. "The poor Cooly sorrows," says a letter from Berbice, published in the Anti Slavery Reporter, "after his tawny kindred as much as do such of Europe's sons, whose length of residence here has not taught them to forget their homesteads." The proprietors of estates in that colony are blamed for their short-sighted policy in having neglected to ensure the emigration of the wives of the labourers and thereby insuring their continuance in a place "where their labour is rewarded a thousand fold beyond what it possibly can be in India." This circumstance may possibly induce the planters at the Mauritius to encourage rather than impede the efforts of Government to prevent the separation of the wife from the husband.

THE RECENT CASE OF CONTUMACY.—The arrival of the mail last week prevented our alluding to a case recently brought forward in the Englishman, in which the wisdom and equity of our judicial institutions is deeply implicated. It appears that a dacoity was committed in the district of Rungpore, and an information lodged against one Chundun Taker as a party. The evidence to connect him with the robbery was that a gown suspected to be one of the stolen articles, was found in his house; but the gown could not be identified. As there appeared however to be sufficient cause of suspicion against him, the matter was referred to the Sudder Nizamut Court in Calcutta, who ordered a Proclamation to be issued for his apprehension. To this proclamation he did not appear. Some months after, he was apprehended, and tried under Regulation IX. of 1808, found guilty of contumacy in not having surrendered himself, and under the provisions of that law was sentenced to imprisonment and transportation beyond seas for life. He pleaded ignorance of the proclamation, and absence on pilgrimage, but the plea was over-ruled; the sentence was confirmed by the highest Native Court, and unless Government should interpose, he will soon fall a victim to a harsh and unjust sentence.

In this instance no blame attaches to the Zillah Judge or to the Nizamut Court; they were bound by their oaths to administer the law as they found it. It is the law itself which is in fault. It must not be forgotten, however, that the Regulation was passed, not with the view of establishing any principle of law, but to meet a particular exigency. Thirty-five years ago gang robbery had increased to an alarming extent in the lower provinces; the dacoits were in a state of complete organization, and had become so daring that neither life nor property was secure. In one instance they had assembled to the number, it was said, of seven hundred in a fortified position, which was captured only by the extraordinary intrepidity of the Magistrate. The police of the country was set completely at defiance, and in several districts the public authority was superseded. Lord Minto deemed it necessary to meet the emergency by a law of extraordinary severity; and he made the crime of not surrendering to a proclamation punishable by transportation for life. Armed with these new powers, the Magistrate took the field, and in a short time extirpated the gangs, and restored tranquillity. As far as our recollection assists us, it was Mr. John Eliot, one of the most vigorous magistrates of his day, to whom the campaign was entrusted. He was assisted,—though under what arrangement we cannot discover,—by the well known Dr. Leyden, between whom and the late Dr. Marshman, the most cordial intimacy subsisted. We have it traditionally that on this occasion, after having been engaged in scouring the district of Kishnaghur, he came to Serampore, with a huge sword girt to his tall and commanding figure. Exhausted with fatigue, he undid the sword, threw himself down on the couch, and recounted all the perils of the expedition, in which, on one occasion, he jumped from the top of the wall into an enclosure, filled with dacoits, whom he opposed singly until his followers joined him.

It was in reference to such a state of things that the law now under consideration was passed. It is a suspension, so to speak, of the Habeas Corpus Act. Severe and unjust though it be, it was mild in comparison with the Regulation passed thirty-five years before to meet a similar danger. On that occasion Mr. Hastings, with the view of extirpating gang robbery, ordered that the culprit should be executed, that the village in which he resided should be fined, and that his whole family should be sold into slavery. The provisions of these two laws may be taken as a fair index of the state of public feeling in our Government at successive periods. That which appeared reasonable and natural in 1773, was deemed harsh and unjustifiable in 1808; and a provision, which in the opinion of the Supreme Council, was eminently proper in 1808, is repudiated as unjust and barbarous in 1843. Milder and sounder principles have gradually obtained an ascendancy in the public councils during the last seventy years; and our legislation ought to bear the impress of this improvement. The law we suppose will be immediately modified. Even if it had not grown out of circumstances which have ceased to exist, there would be a sufficient argument for its legislative repeal in the fact, that we have outgrown the wisdom of the past age, and can no more reconcile our minds to the transportation of a man for life for not surrendering himself while as yet only a suspected character, than the framers of that law could think of selling the convicted felon's family into slavery.

SICKNESS AND MORTALITY AMONG THE TROOPS AT BARRACKPORE.—We have been favoured with a valuable pamphlet on this subject by Dr. Finch, the Surgeon of the 57th Regiment, now stationed at that cantonment, and proceed to present a brief analysis of its contents to our readers.

The extent to which disease prevails among the troops at Barrackpore, has long been a subject of anxiety to the public authorities, and great thanks are due to Dr. Finch for the exertions he has made to bring the subject forward in a practical shape. He has selected for exemplification the state of three Regiments, the 3d, the 57th and the 58th, and given us a comparative statement of the ratio of sickness and mortality in them during the three years previous to their arrival at Barrackpore, and the two years and four months of their residence there. In the 3d Regiment, the per centage of sickness during the years 1835, 1836 and 1837 in which they were stationed at Mynpooree, was respectively 44; 43 and 52. In the first year after it reached Barrackpore, the per centage rose to 64; in the second to 93, and in the first four months of the third year, to 28. The returns of the 57th Regiment present the same distressing results. It was stationed at Benares in 1835, -36, and 37, and the ratio of sick to the strength of the Regiment was respectively 46; 44 and 52 per cent. In 1838, when at Barrackpore, it rose to 62; in 1839 to 96, and in the first four months of 1840, had actually reached 52; that is, the number of sick during a third of the year was as great as at Benares during a twelve month. The reports from the 58th Regiment, are of the same character. Dr. Finch has been unable to obtain returns of the sickness in this corps while stationed in the Upper Provinces, and he has therefore taken three years of their residence at Jumalpore, a station in the humid climate and soil of Bengal. The ratio there was greater than among the troops stationed in the Western Provinces; but it bears no comparison to the ratio exhibited at Barrackpore. At Jumalpore the per centage of sickness was in three successive years, 52; 67; 55—less in the third year than in the second. The same corps at Barrackpore in 1838 presented a per centage of 70; in 1839 of 97; and in the first four months of 1840 of 33.

It appears therefore that the extent of sickness increases with the length of time the troops are stationed at Barrackpore.

But it is in the ratio of mortality that the returns are most appalling. The 3d Regiment lost in thirty-six months at Mynporee, 26 men; in twenty-eight months at Barrackpore, the casualties amounted to 107. The 57th Regiment lost 35 men in three years at Benares; it lost 139 in two years and four months at Barrackpore. The 58th Regiment lost at the Bengal station of Jumalpore, only 24 men in thirty-six months; and 131 in twenty-eight months at Barrackpore.

We gather from these and other data that the mortality among the sepoys at Barrackpore exceeds four fold that of the same regiments when stationed at other places; that the mortality increases according to the length of their detention at this cantonment, having been in the three corps, 48 in the first year, 180 in the second; and 140 in the first four months of the third year. We also learn that the casualties are greater among the young soldier than among those who have been inured to the hardships of a military life; and that of 241 casualties in a given time, 134 occurred among sepoys under 30 years of age.

This unhealthiness and mortality are traced by Dr. Finch to a combination of causes; and first to the climate of Bengal, so different from that of the Western Provinces. It is a fact, established by experience, that the climate is far more injurious to the emigrant from the West than to the Native. Every European who has a number of up-country servants in his employ, is reminded of this fact by the frequent changes among them, owing in a great measure to sickness. But this will not altogether account for the mortality. Jumalpore has nearly all the disadvantages of a Bengal climate. It has heat and moisture, and long continued rains against it; yet the 58th lost more than twice as many men in four months at Barrackpore than it did in three years at that station. We cannot altogether agree with Dr. Finch in attributing the sickness and mortality to the position of Barrackpore. In both seasons of the year, the wind comes from the north-east and south-west, over the broad expanse of a wholesome river. In the cold weather it is subject to fogs; but so is the rest of the country. The diet of the Sepoys has been charged with half their sickness. It is quite possible that the deteriorated Atta which they purchase for the sake of cheapness, may not agree with them, and that the sudden change from wheat to rice, may be detrimental; but we are told that at Jumalpore they all took to rice, because it was very cheap, and yet enjoyed uncommon health. The last campaign presented numerous instances in which sepoys were stinted in their meals for months; and were obliged to live on food to which that of Barrackpore would have been a luxury, but they were not disabled by sickness. The cheapness of fruit and the indiscretion with which it is devoured, may justly be reckoned among the causes of disease. Neither is the water they drink without its influence on their health. Instead of resorting to the Ganges, the water of which is sweet and may be defecated for a trifle, they have imbibed a superstitious prejudice against it, and take only the water to be found in the tanks, which, at some seasons of the year, is unwholesome. The Sepoys are also over fagged, and in this lies perhaps much of the secret of their bodily complaints. "The Station and Regimental duties bear heavily on the men at Barrackpore, many of whom do not sleep in their huts for many successive nights, and are scarcely able to bear this continued call on them." In addition to the Station and Regimental duties, the troops are required to garrison Fort William, and to furnish guards for the public offices and buildings in Calcutta, where they suffer materially in their health. No conveniences are allowed them, and every arrangement seems as though it was designed to abridge and not prolong existence.

Some of these causes of disease Government has already begun to remove, and if we are not mistaken, much is due in this respect to the representations of Dr. Finch himself. The troops at Barrackpore are to be relieved biennially; and a large shed is to be erected for the guard at the mint in Calcutta. Other causes may also be obviated. The foliage at Barrackpore may be curtailed; filthy drains may be purified; and the public ponds guarded from impurities; neither is there any objection to a vigorous Medical Police in the cantonment. But it is impossible to cast a glance at the huts,—the hovels, rather the kennels in which the men live, without feeling that if every other element of disease and death were removed, these wretched buildings, would be enough to ruin the health of an army. The crying evil of the climate of Bengal is dampness, yet here the floor of the huts is never dry for nearly five months in the year. At the season when the sun darts down its fiercest rays from above, as if from a [illegible]; the earth saturated with rain, furnishes from beneath its contribution of dampness to the elements of death. We do not say that if the sepoy's huts were raised beyond the influence of humidity, they would not die; but it is a matter of experience that Arracan was the grave of half the Regiments sent there, while the men continued to sleep on the floor, and that since they have been accommodated with elevated stages, such as the inhabitants of the province use, it has become almost a sanatarium.

Delhi Relief Fund.—We were favoured some time back with a Brief Statement of the establishment, present condition and prospects of the Delhi Relief Society, which bears a strong resemblance in its constitution and object to the Calcutta District Charitable Society. The institution on its present footing originated in a Minute drawn up by the Officiating Magistrate of Delhi, on the 7th of July 1842. Its design is to promote a sufficient and well organized system of relief for the poor of Delhi and its environs, and of distressed travellers, with a view to repress vagrancy and the systematic practice of living on alms, on the part of able-bodied beggars; and to afford the Police an opportunity of removing beggars from the high roads by making provision for the relief of those who really need it. The Association has been formed through the efforts of the European gentlemen in the City, but they have spared no pains to interest the native gentry of Delhi in their plans, and to secure their active co-operation both in raising funds and providing for the judicious distribution of them. In these efforts they have been more successful than the Calcutta District Charitable Society. In Calcutta, the assistance of the Native community in the cause of benevolence, insignificant as it is, cannot be obtained without disheartening importunity; and it is withdrawn at the earliest opportunity. At Delhi, we find that the Committee of management originally formed, contained two European and eighteen Native gentlemen. Their attendance at the subsequent meetings of the Committee appears to have been very encouraging. Their contributions amount to 289 Rupees a month, while those of the European gentlemen at the station do not exceed 55 Rs. It is true, that the Europeans at Delhi bear no proportion to those in Calcutta, but we question whether the Native community in our metropolis is not possessed of greater wealth than the residents in the ancient capital; the alacrity with which they have come forward to support the institution is therefore deserving of more particular commendation. The Delhi Relief Society is, we think, the only association in India, in which all the proceedings are conducted and recorded in Oordoo.

The monthly receipts of the Society amount to about 275 and the disbursements to 245 Rs. The number of paupers who receive relief amounts to 136, at the rate of 1 Rs. 11 annas a month; but the scale of allowances is regulated by the price of grain; and at some periods it has been as low as a Rupee four annas a month. This is but a small allowance for the subsistence of an individual; but it is deemed sufficient by the native members, when the price of provisions is low. The present funds of the Society are however inadequate to the wants of the city; the registers of the thannahs shew that a number of cases of mendicity remain to be enquired into; and until ample provision is made for those who are really destitute, the police can scarcely interfere with [illegible] the city of its beggars. The Committee have therefore resolved to redouble their efforts to obtain larger subscriptions; and some of its most influential Native members have agreed to take the lead in stimulating the middling classes of society to assist it by their contributions. It is earnestly to be hoped that their efforts may be successful, and that Delhi may furnish an example to other cities in the North West Provinces of the ease with which systematic relief can be given to paupers, and the excuse for street beggary removed.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, APRIL 27.

— The Star announces the publication of the Jurist, a new periodical work, which if it can be kept up with spirit, will prove beneficial to the public interests. Unfortunately all periodical publications in the department of law, which have from time to time been announced in Calcutta, after having strutted their hour upon the stage, have dropped one after the other into oblivion. The subjects which this work is intended to embrace are. 1. Practical expositions of the law-merchant. 2. Lectures, in a colloquial form, upon English jurisprudence. 3. Reviews of Acts of the Legislative Council of India, and of Acts of the Imperial Parliament, affecting India. 4. Notices of decisions in the Supreme Courts of the three Presidencies, which are of interest to the Mercantile Native community.

— A notification appears in the papers from the friends of the late Sir William Macnaghten, requesting a meeting on Tuesday next, at the Town Hall, to consider the propriety of evincing by some lasting testimonial the respect due to the memory of that distinguished man.

— The Governor of Scinde has appointed Lieut. Rathbone to the office of Magistrate of Hydrabad and Collector of Lower Scinde on the left bank of the Indus; Capt. Preedy to the post of Magistrate of Karachee and Collector of Revenue in Lower Scinde on the right bank of that river; and Lieut. Pope to the charge of the Magistracy of Sukker and the collection of the revenues of Sukker and Roree and the adjacent districts. The Governor General has approved and confirmed these measures.

— The affairs of Kytul are settled; the old lady has fled and the country is in our possession. Not a shot was fired. On hearing of the insurrection, General Fast ordered 5500 men of all arms into the field. Such a demonstration on such an occasion; such an apparent raising the ocean to drown a fly, may seem ridiculous, but the object was evidently not so much to conquer Kytul, as to infuse a feeling of wholesome dread into the minds of that cluster of chieftains, who are ungrateful for our protection, and anxious to be relieved from it. When they see what a force may be assembled at a day's notice, their hearts will melt within them. The whole of this grand army was on its way to Kytul, when despatches arrived from Mr. Clerk to say that the business was over and that their services were no farther necessary.

— Dost Mahomed was announced some time ago as having arrived at Peshawur. The Delhi Gazette now states, that a letter has been dispatched from the Lahore Court to Akbar Khan at Jellalabad, advising him to receive his father with all due honour and submit to him in all things, because he had agreed to pay tribute to Shere Sing on condition of his relinquishing all claim on Cabul and Candahar. How long will the Dost pay the tribute?

FRIDAY, APRIL 28.

— An Agri-Horticultural Society was formed at Bhaugulpore, on the 11th of April, at a meeting of gentlemen convened at Cleveland House. It promises well. A large number of Europeans and an equal number of Natives have become monthly subscribers to the institution.

— Letters from Assam state, that a little after 8 on the evening of the 7th instant, a smart shock of an earthquake was felt, and a few minutes after a second shock more severe than the first. From the same source we learn that the manufacture of the first crop of tea for 1843 had commenced in the factories of the Assam Company, that the specimens were very fine, and that there was every prospect of a large and excellent crop.

— The papers this morning give details of the dastardly attack made by a number of Mahomedans, said to be connected with the Muddrissa or Moosulman College, on three constables who were sent to arrest a man of the name of Eastman. It is difficult from the accounts given to assign even a plausible reason for the outrage. It seems that they seized on the constables and beat them with clubs, so unmercifully, that those officers very narrowly escaped with their lives. It will be long before they are on their legs again. The case has been fully examined by Mr. Patton, the Chief Magistrate, and made over to the Sessions.

— The Englishman alluded some time since to the circumstance that the Stephen Rowan Crawford had not been heard of since July last. A letter appears in this day's Englishman, stating that a brother of one of the Native servants who went in the ship has received a letter from him stating that the ship struck on the Andaman islands, the inhabitants of which were cannibals, and that he was the only person saved.

SATURDAY, APRIL 29.

— Our contemporaries are discussing the effects of the new order in Council brought out by the last mail, which forbids English ships to proceed to any port in China, except the five ports mentioned in the treaty, under a penalty of 100£ or three month's imprisonment. This order, if strictly executed, cannot but affect the prospects of the Opium trade, as the gains of the smuggler are derived mainly from the facility with which he can run his small craft into the numerous minor ports which that long line of coast presents. Before the penalty is inflicted, however, it will be necessary to catch the delinquents, and this cannot be done without cruizers, and cruizers cannot be maintained on that coast without money. Is England or China to pay for this preventive service?—We are happy to see our brethren of the press adopting the opinion which we have long held; that the Government of India has no right to prohibit the cultivation or exportation of the drug; or to lend its assistance to other nations to prevent its entering their ports; but that Government ought not to be personally, still less, exclusively engaged in raising an article with the full knowledge that it is intended for a country where it is contraband. Government should give up the monopoly and impose a duty, no matter how heavy, at the point of export.

— In reference to the case of assault on the constables, we now learn that the thanadar of the division made no effort to rescue the unfortunate men; that he came up tardily, and acted inefficiently; and that instead of sending them forthwith to a Hospital he took them to his own caserne; under the pretence of taking down their depositions. It is to be hoped that if this fact be proved, the Magistrate will create a vacancy.

— The Englishman states, that a rumour has reached him of Lord Ellenborough's having actually forwarded the resignation of his office of Governor General; but the announcement is evidently premature.

— The Agra Ukhbar Extra gives us a copy of a despatch from Sir Charles Napier to Lord Ellenborough, announcing the occupation of Omercote without resistance. The river was rising rapidly at Hydrabad, and the Governor did not deem it prudent to go further than to Meerpore, half way between that place and Omercote. A large force was sent against it, and it was reported to be defended by a powerful garrison, on which Sir Charles ordered the troops to retire. Soon after it was understood to have been evacuated. The Commander was disgusted [illegible]; and Capt. Brown, of the Bengal [illegible], rode eighty miles under a Scindian sun to Meerpore and back for his Lordship's orders, which were to advance and occupy the fort. Every place of the smallest note in Scinde is now in our possession and the country is at our mercy—so was Affghanistan once.

MONDAY, MAY 1.

— Some ugly rumours were afloat last week relative to the immediate prospect of a renewal of the war in China; but the arrival of intelligence yesterday to the 9th of March has dissipated them. The Imperial Commissioner Elepoo is dead. He expired somewhat suddenly at the house of one of the Hong merchants, at a very advanced age. In consequence of his demise the commercial negotiations will be suspended, until another Commissioner with equal powers has been appointed from Pekin. It is expected that Keying, a near relative of the Emperor, will be selected for that office. Sir Henry Pottinger had intimated to him that should he be nominated, His Excellency would, after the arrival of Col. Malcolm, be prepared to proceed to the northward and give him a meeting at Ningpo or Shinghai. This movement is likely to facilitate the negotiations, as all the preliminary enquiries at Canton have been completed.

— The Straits Messenger states, that Government is understood to have decided on stationing a Regiment and four Companies immediately at Singapore, that reinforcements may be at hand in case of any emergency in China. The Queen's troops now in China will, it is understood, be shortly placed on the Colonial allowances of the Crown, which are far inferior to those which they have been latterly receiving. Will the troops in reserve at Singapore, at a Company's settlement, be placed on the same footing, or will they enjoy the advantage usually given to troops serving in the Straits? If so, will their allowances be reduced to the level of Crown pay when they are sent to China; or will they enjoy the higher allowances of the Company while their brethren in arms enjoy only the lower emoluments of the Queen's service?

— The last Bombay papers announce the arrival there, and the debarkation of six of the Ameers who have fallen from the dignity of sovereign princes to the humble condition of permanent prisoners of state. We have placed the passage among our selections.

— Khytul has fallen into our hands without a blow. On the approach of our troops the villages were deserted and Khytul abandoned. It is not said what has become of the widowed Ranee; but the head rebel Tej Sing fled with four hundred horse, two guns, and three hackery loads of treasure. He was pursued by a thousand of the Puttiala Raja's Horse and overtaken. The letters from that quarter, published in the papers, state that the whole of the Seikh Protected States are ready to rise and relieve themselves of the burden of our protection.

— The 9th Regiment, which Lord Ellenborough despatched to Scinde on hearing of the first victory, has arrived at Sukker. Colonel Pattle has been removed from the command of the 9th Bengal Cavalry, and a junior officer ordered to cross the desert with all speed to take the command of it. So extreme a measure towards an officer, who has twice shared in the honours of the field within the last two months, appears unjustifiable except on a charge of incapacity or insubordination, and these charges it is usual to substantiate by a Court martial.

— Mr. George Aubert, a young man engaged in mercantile pursuits, and held in high estimation, was struck dead by lighting on Saturday last, [illegible] miles from Chinsurah. The Star states that he was riding in company with Mr. D. Jenkins, who was only a few paces a head of him, and who on seeing the vivid flash, turned round to remark it to [illegible] companion, when he saw him and the horse on which he rode, lying dead.

— Lord Ellenborough is endeavouring to assimilate the Secretariat here with the Secretariat in Downing Street, so far the name of the thing goes. In last Saturday's Gazette, Mr. Thomason is appointed Secretary in the Foreign Department, and Mr. Bushby in the Home Department; and Mr. Philip Melville, throws off the Indian title of Deputy Secretary, and puts on the European designation of Under Secretary. There are however some other changes necessary to make the similarity complete. The offices at home always enjoy the services of three or four gentlemen of the best education, abilities and training, who relieve the Secretary of three-fourths of his intellectual toil, and in fact, so completely manage the department that the change of the Chief Secretary is scarcely felt. Here the Secretary is himself the great over-worked fag, with one covenanted assistant, who is sent to collect revenue or settle estates five hundred miles off, as soon as he has acquired any official aptitude.

TUESDAY, MAY 2.

— Three Junior Civil Servants have been placed at the disposal of Sir Charles Napier to be employed in the administration of Scinde. The present establishment is manifestly insufficient to the duties of so large a country, in such novel circumstances. Upon Sir Charles Napier rests the whole weight of the Government. He has under him only four assistants; for the whole civil, magisterial, and fiscal management of the country. The Civilians are drawn from the ranks of the Bengal service, and their appointment may possibly give as much umbrage to the Bombay press as the appointment of Mr. Ross Bell once did. The prospects of office in Scinde will naturally be considered as appertaining to the Bombay service.

— The Bhaskur states, that the wife of a Koolin brahman has petitioned a Court of law to constrain her husband to make provision for her support. The matter has been referred to the Pundit who has given his decision in favour of the demand. We hope she will have the courage to go through with the matter. Half a dozen judgments of the Court ordering the husband to support his wife would soon put a stop to this species of polygamy.

— The India Steamer arrived yesterday from Suez, which she left on the 29th of March. The present voyage has been shorter than the last. The passengers she took out speak in high terms of the arrangements on board; and say she wants nothing more than another hundred horse power!

The following are the Passengers back:—

From London.—J. Walkingshaw, Esq. T. Grimshaw, Esq. N. B. Read, Esq. B. Wilson, Esq.—Styer, Esq. J. C. Stewart, Esq. Miss Lamb, Robert Lyall, Esq. F. Elwartly, Esq. J. Bosradail, Esq. Dr. A. Bell, A. M. McKenzie, Esq. A. Pearson, Esq. and R. Stewart, Esq.

From Egypt.—F. Masey, Esq.

From Point de Galle.—John Silver, and M. R. S. Sansiley, Esq.

From Madras.—A. Arbuthnot, Esq. Captain Minchin, 67th N. I., the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Jones, and A. Reid, Esq.

— The Red Rover, which has arrived from China, has brought few or no letters. She called at Madras on her way here, and was ordered by the Post Master, so says the Hurkaru, to land all her packets there. We shall thus have the pleasure of paying treble postage for the privilege of receiving our letters at a later period. We think however that there must have been some mistake in the order, or some misunderstanding of its purport.

— We see another Lottery advertised by Messrs. Lattey, Brothers and Co. for articles to the value of 15,000 Rupees. It is perhaps but fair that they should make hay while the sun shines, more especially as it is likely to set so soon. We hope the confirmation of Mr. Bird's order will arrive in time to enable him to give us a law putting down all lotteries. It is due however to Messrs. Lattey, Brothers and Co. on this occasion to state that this lottery does not originate in their own wishes. It has been forced on them by the solicitations of a number of their constituents.

— The Hurkaru states, that he learned a few days ago, that Lord Ellenborough would have been happy with a good pretext for dropping the gates; and that his Lordship wrote to a public functionary to hint that if the inhabitants would petition for the old gates, he should have no objection to leave them there. But the Hurkaru has so intense a dislike of the proclamation, that he is scarcely to be trusted for impartiality when writing on the subject.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 3.

—The meeting which had been announced of the friends of the late Sir W. Macnaghten, to consider how honor might be done to his memory, was held yesterday afternoon, when it was resolved to erect a cenotaph in the new Cathedral of Calcutta. We have no space for more particular allusion to the subject, but shall return to it next week.

— The Madras papers received this morning announce the arrival of the Hindoostan early on the morning of the 22d. She left the Sandheads at 1 P. M. ont he 18th; lay to for one night near the Pulicat shoal, and reached Madras early on the morning of the 22d. Apparently she has been 88 hours from the Pilot to the Roads; which allowing for the time lost near the shoal and the strong southerly winds is more than a fair passage. It is said that the passengers are charmed with every thing on board, but the cabins, which are as hot as ovens. Could not Kuskus tattees be used to advantage? In the blistering months of April and May, they serve to mitigate the heat on the river steamers. Why should they not be found serviceable at sea?—A correspondent of the Star says, that "—— (the identity of the individual cannot be mistaken) said that his motive in applying that the Hindoostan might not be allowed to start on Good Friday, was not a religious but a worldly one—he had important business to transact." This, says the Editor, is precisely what we should have expected; and it is precisely what we should not have expected. John Wallis Alexander may be too strait laced for some; in the opinion of others he may be a bigot, a gloomy bigot; but we know him better than the Star does, and we will venture to say that he is neither hypocrite nor fool. He is not such a hypocrite as to assign religious scruples for embarking on a particular day when his reasons were secular and grovelling; and if he were a hypocrite, he is not the fool to vaunt it.

— The India Steamer has brought letters from the passengers on the Tenasserim Steamer, from Aden the 27th March. She expected to reach Suez on the 4th of April, which would be thirty days after leaving Calcutta. The coal shipped at Galle was so inferior that on one or two occasions the steam actually ran down; that obtained at Aden was of a very superior character. It is rumoured that the Court of Directors have intimated their displeasure at the employment of any of their steamers on the Red Sea route, and that the first experiment is likely to be the last. With so large a redundancy of steamers it is difficult to assign any reason for the Court's repugnance to the employment of one of them, ad interim, on this route, till the Peninsular Company has its complement of vessels complete.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the following sums for the Friend of India:—

NOTIFICATION

BY THE RIGHT HON'BLE THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA.

Agra, the 10th April, 1843.

Despatches, from which the following are extracts, were this day received by the Governor General, from His Excellency Major General Sir Charles Napier, K. C. B., by the route of Sukkur.

By order of the Right Honourable the Governor General of India,

J. THOMASON,

To the Right Honourable LORD ELLENBOROUGH,
Governor General of India,

Camp Hyderabad, 23d March, 1843.

MY LORD,—Major Stack joined me last night with the 3d cavalry, the 8th N. I., and Major Leslie's troop of horse artillery. The enemy fired upon them as they passed Meeanee, but I had reinforced his party by the Poona horse at Muttaree, in case of accidents, and also sent out the Scinde horse to meet him at Meeanee, and in an hour after the enemy appeared I was there myself with a troop of the 9th light cavalry, the remainder of the last named regiment following me with some cannon. No serious attack took place, and the whole arrived in camp late at night. I have given them this day to rest, and to-morrow morning I mean to attack the enemy wherever I find him: he is either at Kotree, Dubba, or Jaum Ali Ka Tandah; all these are within 6 miles of Hyderabad, and he has already began attacking our camels.

I beg to say, that Major Stack's conduct on this march, has pleased me very much. All sorts of reports reached him of the great force of the enemy but he marched on boldly like a good soldier.

I have, &c.

Camp at Alcear, 27th March, 1843.

Major Leslie's troop of H. A. 6 guns.

SIR,—I have the honour to report the arrival of the force under my command, as per margin, at Hyderabad on the night of the 22d instant, having been detained a few hours on the road from Muttaree by a skirmish with the enemy on that day, the particulars of which I have the honour to subjoin.

3d Regt. Lt. Cavalry. 207 Sabres, including drill and sick.

8th Regt. N.I. 818 of all ranks.

I marched from Muttaree at 11 A. M., and after passing the scene of action of the 17th ultimo, about 1 P. M., some horsemen appeared to my left front. Lieutenant McMurdo, who, (with the Poona horse under Lieutenant Tait,) had joined me on the morning of the 21st, proceeded to reconnoitre them with a few troopers of the advance guard, and I directed the Poona horse to remain on their present ground, to reinforce the rear guard and protect the baggage.

As I could perceive the number of the enemy increasing, and they were firing sharply on our advance party, I detached a troop of the 3d light cavalry under Lieutenant Moore to Lieutenant McMurdo's support, and sent Lieutenant Ash-burner, Adjutant 3d light cavalry, to report to you the appearance of the enemy. Lieutenant Moore's troop made a spirited charge on the enemy's advance, but at too great a distance to reach them before they had secured themselves in the bed of the river.

Lieutenant McMurdo sent to report to me, that the enemy were advancing in force, on which I halted the column, with the right resting on the Phoolalie, and detached two guns under Captain Rowan, a squadron 3d light cavalry under Captain Malet, and the Grenadier company 8th regiment under Captain Morse to check their advance; at this time the enemy were crossing the bed of the Phoolalie in great numbers both horse and foot, about 3-4ths of a mile to our left rear in the direction of our baggage, which was in the rear of the column; large bodies were drawn up in front of a wood on the opposite side of the river; and heavy masses were seen with a glass to their left rear, and advancing towards the head of our column.

The guns took a position nearly opposite the point where the enemy were crossing the bed of the river, and opened upon them with such effect that they were instantly checked; a few more rounds telling on them severely, they retreated with precipitation, and recrossed the river much more rapidly than they had advanced; in their retreat they carried with them all those who were ranged in front of the wood. The large bodies in the distance also fell back, and in about half an hour after the opening of our guns there was not an enemy in sight.

Captain Jacob's horse having arrived from Hyderabad, about the time our fire ceased, I directed them to cover the rear of the columns, and recalled our detached parties to join the main body: by this time the baggage being well in advance I resumed the march, and arrived in camp without the slightest loss of any sort.

Ahar ke Kanda, 20th March, 1843, 5 o'clock P. M.

MY LORD,—This town is 20 miles from the field of battle. We passed two prepared positions of great strength. I shall reach Meerpoor to-morrow. The Ameer, I understand, has fled to the desert in great terror, and all his family with him. The inhabitants receive us with great joy, and are very desirous to be assured that we mean to keep the country.

The poona horse has pursued the Ameer and are now near Meerpoor, 40 miles from the field.

Sobdar's servant (and the great mover of his rallied force) was Hoche Mahomed Seedee; he fell in the battle, and it was his followers that stood against the 22d regiment. Three other chiefs have fallen, Golam Ali Talpoor, Ali Khan Talpoor and Jaffa Khan Murry.

FORT WILLIAM,

Secret Department, 26th April, 1843.

Agra, the 17th April, 1843.

The Governor General, at the recommendation of His Excellency the Governor of Scinde, is pleased to direct, that, in all the territories conquered from the Ameers of Scinde, no demand shall be made on the part of the British Government, on account of any arrears of revenue due to the Ameers on the 17th of February 1843; but that, from that date, all revenue heretofore payable to the Ameers, except under the head of Transit Duties, already abolished, shall be due and payable to the officers of the British Government.

By order of the Right Honourable the Governor General of India,

J. THOMASON,
Secy. to the Govt. of India,
with the Governor General.

FORT WILLIAM,

Secret Department, 26th April, 1843.

GENERAL ORDERS BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR OF SCINDE.

Head Quarters, Meerpore, the 2d April, 1843.

1. Lieutenant Rathbourne is to proceed to Hyderabad, and to assume the duty of Magistrate of the town, together with that of collecting the revenue in Lower Scinde, on the left bank of the Indus.

2. Those revenues on the right bank are to be collected by Captain Preedy, who is also to assume the duties of Magistrate of Kurrachee.

3. The revenues of Sukkur and Roree, with the districts attached to those towns, is to be collected by Captain Pope, who is also to perform the duties of Magistrate of Sukkur. The Magistrate for Roree will be hereafter nominated.

4. Lieutenant Brown is appointed Commissioner for the Civil administration of the whole of the conquered territory, under the orders of the Governor.

5. To Lieutenant Brown, the three Collectors above mentioned, are to send in their reports monthly; stating the receipts and expenditure of their respective districts, from which the Commissioner is to make up a general report to the Governor.

6. The above officers are not to make any avoidable change in the ancient customs and laws of the country as we now find them. The conquest of a country is a sufficient convulsion for the people of that country, without adding to their disturbance by abrupt innovations on their habits, and the usual routine of their social life. The above mentioned officers are, therefore, requested to confine their exertions to the correction of those numerous evils which the late tyrannical government of the Belooch conquerors had inflicted upon this unhappy land. It will depend upon the Government of Scinde to make the people hail the coming of the British, as a memorable redemption from slavery and oppression; or look upon it with apathy, as a mere change of cruel masters.

7. The above nomination of officers is distinctly to be considered as a temporary measure, awaiting the decision of the Governor General.

By order,

Military Secretary.

Meerpore, 8th April, 1843.

MY LORD,—I have the honour to report to your Lordship, that yesterday the fortress of Oomercote, opened its gates to the British force sent against it, and is in our hands. I have ordered a small garrison to hold it till further orders.

Considerable difficulties have prevented our sooner getting hold of this most important place; but the zeal and ability of the officers employed, (Captain Whitlie, commanding in the first instance, and Major Woodburn afterwards,) overcame these difficulties. In justice to Lieutenant Brown, my Aid-de-Camp, I must say that this success has been chiefly owing to his exertions and zeal. Having myself remained in a central position, to receive the earliest reports of the progress made by the inundation caused by the river Indus, and to direct the movements of the troops, which a deficiency of water towards Oomercote obliged me to divide, I was unable to command in person the detachment which proceeded to Oomercote. Being at Jourbee, I received a despatch from Oomercote, saying, that it was defended by a powerful garrison; and at the same moment I received another from Hyderabad, to say, that the river was rising with unusual rapidity. It therefore became necessary to give up the idea of attacking Oomercote, and I ordered a retreat; returning myself to this town. Just as my orders to retreat reached the advancing force, (then within 20 miles of Oomercote,) another report reached the Commanding Officer that the fortress was abandoned! Between this report and my order for him to retreat, the Commanding Officer was embarrassed, upon which Lieutenant Brown mounted his horse, and, under the burning sun of this climate, rode 40 miles to Meerpoor, received my orders and instantly returned, taking the supporting troops on the road along with him, and Oomercote was taken!

Justice to this officer has made me enter into a detail otherwise unnecessary; but the man who rides 80 miles without stopping, and in broad day under a Scindian sun, deserves this compliment.

The importance of having Oomercote in our possession is so great, that it repays every inconvenience. Emaun Ghur does not exist; and I believe that no other rallying point remains in the desert for the defeated Ameer Shere Mahomed, who, as is generally supposed, will fly to the Punjab.

Thus, my Lord, I think I may venture to say, Scinde is now subdued. The Scindian population every where express their satisfaction at the change of masters.

4thly.—That the funds be expended in the purchase of seeds, in giving money prizes to the gardeners and ryots, who bring to the show rooms the best specimens of fruits, vegetables, flowers, grain, cotton, tobacco, sugar cane and the like, such specimens being the bona fide produce of their gardens or estates.

5thly.—That the prizes vary from one to five rupees each.

6thly.—That the first show of fruits, flowers, vegetables and Agricultural produce take place on the 10th of May proximo.

That the second show take place on the 1st of Nov. 1843.

That the third show come off on the 24th of Dec. 1843.

That the fourth show take place on the 24th of Jan. 1844.

That the fifth show come off on the 24th of Feb. 1844.

7thly.—That these resolutions be circulated for the information of all European and Native gentlemen, zumeendars and ryots living within 40 miles of this place, and that non-resident subscribers be entitled to seeds and all advantages of the society.

8thly.—That the judges or umpires to decide on the best Agricultural and Horticultural produce consist of three gentlemen, and that two ladies and three gentlemen be solicited to decide on the best specimens of fruits and flowers.

9thly.—That a Secretary be appointed to keep the accounts, collect subscriptions, and carry on all correspondence connected with the society, and that intimation be given to the Parent Society in Calcutta expressive of our wish to become a branch society.

ARRIVAL OF THE SCINDE AMEERS.

"H. M. Ship Nimrod anchored yesterday at about 1 o'clock. On leaving Bombay the vessel reached Kurrachee on the 10th March, left it on the 17th, and arrived off the Hujamree mouth on the 11th, from whence she started for Bombay on the 15th April, the Cote and Semiramis were left at the Hujamree mouth. The Indus is there lying off. Both of these vessels are about twelve miles away, the Nimrod has brought down the Ameers and followers. Every attention was paid to them by Captain Glasse, and his excellent body of officers even according to the acknowledgement of the Ameers all seemed to have been fully animated by the highest kindliness of feeling. The Ameers are five in number; and they are accompanied by six sons and nephews altogether, and a retinue of fifty-one followers, who have all expressed their utmost satisfaction for the very kind and considerate treatment which the officers of the Nimrod and even every sailor bestowed upon them."

Captain Glasse, who on this important occasion, had much to attend to, conveyed the Captives down the Indus to the Flotilla Steamer, [illegible] had made every necessary and considerate arrangement for their comfort. The zenana will, it is thought, come by the Semiramis, which may be expected hourly.

The Ameers several times expressed their thanks, in the most liberal terms, for the kind treatment which they have enjoyed at the hands of Captain Glasse, and his gallant crew. The Nimrod made a quick passage, having left on the 16th April at four in the afternoon. Two boats, one belonging to the Superintendent of the Indian Navy, put off for the Nimrod about four o'clock, in order to bring the distinguished captives on shore. An officer's guard has been ordered to proceed to Malabar Hill, where it is reported that the Government Bungalow in that quarter, will be given for the reception of the prisoners. This is an amiable trait in the character of Sir G. Arthur, who at such a hot season, foregoes his own comforts for the good of others.

—The news brought by the Nimrod is, that Scinde is tranquil—two of the principal tribes had declared their complete submission to the British power—Sir Charles Napier is effectually Governor of that country, and awaited merely the departure of the Ameers and of their zenana to take possession of the Palace at Hyderabad, and to install the government. He is in the enjoyment of excellent health, and was so confident in the security of his rule, that he has, as report states, sent for Lady Napier.

The forces were about to be diminished, the Poona horse and some other troops being about to be removed elsewhere. Captain Willoughby of the Artillery, who came in charge of the Ameers, brought down the Head Quarters of his Company.

The news from Kurrachee is, that it continued to be surrounded by the Beloochees, who used every means to pillage the British there. The route to Tatta is said not to be yet open. H. M. 22d Regiment, which has reaped such laurels in Scinde, is described as about to proceed to Kurrachee. The great want there is of some Cavalry to scour the country.

Landing of the Ameers.—At half past 5 o'clock the Apollo Bunder was thronged by various persons, who went thither to witness the land-landing of the Ameers. Boats of various kinds were seen around the Nimrod which was at anchor in the Middle Ground. Within a few minutes the small Steamer Snake, which was in readiness, was seen to approach the ship of war, and take two boats in tow—and in a short time they approached the Bunder. At length the boats came along side the Pier. Captain Oliver superintended the disembarkation, assisted by the officers of the different vessels of war in the harbour; the Chief Magistrate, P. W. Legeyt, Esq. and Captain Burrowes regulated the Police; Major Seaton acted as Town Major, and Captain Willoughby made the arrangements of the carriages. As soon as the first boat stopped, Mr. Secretary Escombe and some of these officers went down the steps and assisted the Chief Ameer to ascend them. Upon reaching the top, the old man, who is a most remarkable specimen of the proportions of Falstaff from the extraordinary extension of his girdle, looked for a moment around him. The gentlemen pointed out the carriage in which he was to be conveyed to his residence. Doctor Burnes, who was present, went forward to salute his old acquaintance;—the Ameer recognized him, and said that he had often thought of him since 1828.

"I remember him," said Doctor Burnes to his friend, "when he was a fine young man, of slight form and great activity;—but time has wrought great change."

The Ameer when handed to the open carriage, which was like the rest, a hack one hired for the occasion, paused; and whether from not being accustomed to such vehicles or not, he seemed unwilling to enter it, after some persuasion he took his seat, and his son and others joined him. One of them exhibited his agility in stepping [illegible] the front seat and clambering over to sit [illegible] the coachman. The carriage was then driven off, accompanied by some of the Cavalry that [illegible]ly escort the Governor.

The rest of the Ameers soon got into the other [illegible] and followed towards Malabar Hill, [illegible] they are to take up their residence for a [illegible]. The sole carriage was seen to take the direction of Fort George, where one of the family, who is accused of having procured by unfair [illegible] the death of Captain Ennis, was sent in order to undergo the punishment of a rigorous [illegible].

[illegible] was among the Ameers one who was obliged to be conveyed in a carpet litter from the boat: [illegible] laid on the ground on his carpet, and soon [illegible] crowd surrounded him. His attendants were [illegible], and, as he felt his position oppressive, [illegible] out to be allowed [illegible] the Police sepoys who were near soon drove off the crowd, and he seemed to be at ease, until at length a palanquin was brought up, into which he was assisted.

In the mean time the attendants landed a quantity of mattrasses and other baggages on the pier, a guard of the Marine Battalion was placed over it, and bullock carts were brought forward in which the whole was placed in order to be conveyed to its destination.

Every arrangement seemed to have been suited to the occasion. The appearance of the Ameers had nothing strongly expressive of dignity or of intellect. Their round caps and their dresses bore the marks of travellers, and they looked themselves as if resigned to the fate, which is usual to the State Prisoners in India, viz. that of passing life in indolence and luxury.

The Semiramis is expected to bring the zenana of the Ameers, it appears that of the 200 females composing that sisterhood of slaves, only 30 have volunteered to come to India, to join their former Lords and Masters; the others prefer remaining to enjoy the liberty which Lord Ellenborough's proclamation has ensured to them."—The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette.

ARRIVAL OF THE AMEERS.

The fallen rulers of Scinde reached Bombay on Wednesday on board of H. M.'s sloop Nimrod. The winds were so light in shore that though the Sloop had been telegraphed early in the morning, the passengers were not landed till towards twilight. The Ameers expressed themselves gratified for the kindness shewn them by Captain Glasse, and his officers. Captain Oliver superintended their debarkation; Mr. Legeyt, Chief Magistrate of Police, Captain Burrows, Major B. Seaton, and other officers were in attendance at the Pier. Instead of sending the unhappy chiefs to Mahim Fort, Butcher's Island, or Fort George, all of which had been examined, Sir G. Arthur had made over for their use the bungalows occupied, at certain seasons of the year, by himself and his family at Malabar Point. Open carriages were in attendance, and an escort of Cavalry accompanied them to their place of residence. The Ameers being prisoners of State, are retained in strict seclusion; they are described as broken-hearted and miserable men,—maintaining much of the dignity of fallen greatness, and without any querulous or angry complainings at this unalleviable source of sorrow, refusing to be comforted,—the very pictures of unmingled grief and hopeless despondency. The generous consideration of Government in assigning them as cheerful a place of residence as could be provided, was not lost upon them, but seemed to afford them no consolation. Meer Nusseer at once recognised Dr. Burnes, and spoke of their former intercourse—when the first European officer who had ever been permitted to visit the court of Scinde considered it a high privilege to afford medical attendance to those who are now our prisoners: the Meer said he had constantly reflected since then on this intercourse, which, from the mention made of it to those who have since visited Hydrabad, must have been an endearing one. Poor Meer Roostum of Khyrpoor, so long our ally, the first Scindian chief who ventured to express his admiration of us, and to desire our friendship—by much the most intelligent and hardly dealt with of them all, recognised Captain Del' Hoste in a moment, and embraced him in a paroxysm of the deepest emotion. Captain Del' Hoste had fed with him, and had lived with him for months, and he now looked on him as the only friend he had in a land of strangers. One of the chiefs, supposed to have been connected with the murder of Captain Ennis, has been placed in close confinement; the others will enjoy as many comforts and as much freedom as is consistent with their safe custody, till the pleasure of the Governor General be known. It was well to remove them from Scinde: their presence in our camp cherished hopes, to attempt whose realization could only lead to further mischief.—Bombay Times, April 22.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Dear Sir,—The interest you have always displayed in the welfare and improvement of India, is my apology for intruding these my humble endeavours in the same cause.

In your issue for March 23d, is an article on Railways in India, written evidently in [illegible]dation of their adoption; but as I believe that your correspondent's view of the subject is a fallacious one; and that it is the duty of every one, under such circumstances to contribute as much as lies in his power towards eliciting the truth; I contribute this my mite.

The article above alluded to, contains no estimate to guide to a correct opinion of the economy of the plan; and without one it is impossible to get any thing like an approximation to the truth: I have therefore endeavoured to supply the public with as correct a one as lies in my power.

To give the public the means of judging what degree of confidence may be placed in my opinions, I will adduce Robt. Stephenson's report in favour of my plans and estimates for a Railway of 250 miles extent, over a most mountainous country:—and the plans and estimates which I have lately made to the satisfaction of my employers, Messrs. Carr, Tagore and Co. of a line of canal 111½ miles long, in this district. On this occasion it was left to me to decide whether a Railway or a Canal should be adopted. I decided on the latter, as my estimates, both of the first cost and of the current expenses, were very greatly in its favour. There was no engineering difficulty whatever on the line, for a Railway: indeed, I never saw, in any country a piece of ground so well adapted for the mere construction of a Railway, as the line I levelled.

I have had to correct several errors in your correspondent's calculations, some greatly to the advantage of his scheme, but even so, you will see by my estimates that it will not answer to carry goods by Railway, in this country; that is on such lines as that from Calcutta to Allahabad.

In para. 10, he puts down Reynolds's cast iron sleepers at Co.'s Rs. 2 each: this must be a mistake; two Rupee's worth of cast iron would make but a sorry sleeper for a yard of Railway. I have allowed about Co.'s Rs. 7; and he has allowed nothing for turn outs.

In para. 14, he assumes, in calculating the rate of freight on the H. Co.'s Steamers, 50 cub. feet to the ton, supposing it would be the same as is usual on the ships trading from this port: but this is a mistake: the allowance is 93⅓ c. ft. making the ton cost 5,6d p. mile, instead of 3d as he has it.

And in para. 16, he supposes that a 600 maund boat carries 600 maunds; whereas it only takes 250, making the actual cost of a ton a mile 0,583d instead of 0,252d.

An insuperable barrier, in practice, to the introduction of Railways into this country, for a long period to come, is their enormous cost. Where could Four Millions Sterling be raised for the construction of a Railway in India? even supposing the estimates were favourable. No such impediment exists in the case of the Canal: its first cost is within reach; £850,000 is no extraordinary sum to embark in such a speculation. It would not afford such a brilliant triumph to the engineer, but it would certainly succeed in a commercial point of view; which is the true test of utility. Canals maintain their superiority over Railways in point of economy, even in Europe, where they have to stand the competition of the latter, on an equal footing as regards the price of the labour bestowed upon them, while in this country the case is very different: the chief part of the Railway, in this country, would have to pay European prices, while the Canal would be done wholly at Indian prices: a difference of 4 to 1 in favour of the Canal.

In the annexed estimates, I have taken your correspondent's description of the country for good; and I have taken his estimate of the distance, viz. 600 miles for both the Railway and the Canal. The quantity of freight I have supposed each way 43,00,000 maunds: likewise taken from your correspondent's article.

Your most obedient,

RELIGIOUS.

DR. VAUGHAN AND THE ATHENÆUM ON THE REFORMATION.—"But if Christianity has done much to foster the spirit which declares that every man should be a freeman, and that woman should be his companion, and not his slave; it has done much more, since the era of the Reformation, to strengthen all previous impulses of that nature, by calling upon men, without respect of persons, to become, in the main, their own teachers with regard to all matters of religious opinion and religious duty. * * It taught a people, who seemed to have nothing to do in religion, except to be observant of its forms, to feel as though they had everything to do in it, if their observance of forms was to be found of the slightest value. Men who had been taught to lean entirely on the priesthood of others, were admonished, that as they hoped to be saved, it would behove them to become their own priests. In this manner, it set forth a new doctrine in respect to human right and human duty, based on new views in regard to human capability. It raised man from a condition of mere passiveness in the hands of the accredited ministers of religion, and required him to act with the intelligence and seriousness proper to a being conscious of his personal accountableness to God. * * It was no mean thing that men should learn to regard themselves as competent to pursue the course which had been thus marked out for them in respect to religion, inasmuch as it would prepare them to look with a new intelligence on many other matters, which, in common with religion, had been long accounted as subjects greatly above their comprehension. If men, for example, were to conduct themselves after this manner with regard to religion, was it not reasonable that they should learn to conduct themselves in the same manner with regard to the questions of civil government? If the church could err—and err so fatally, might not the state also err, and no less fatally, and could it be improper that the right to judge concerning the more sacred should be extended to the less? Religion and government are the great questions of society, and the principle which conveys a right to take cognizance of these, conveys a right to take cognizance of everything else. It is the fact that the principle of the Reformation carried with it these seeds of general improvement, that has given to it so much importance in the view of all minds interested in the progress of man and society. It was a call to wakefulness on one great subject, and a call made with so much success, that it could not fail to induce a habit of wakefulness in respect to many other subjects."

These, it seems to us, are the characteristic merits of the Reformation, its claims to admiration and respect. The dispute was not properly a dispute about texts, a dispute concerning the rejection of this ceremony, or a repudiation of that tradition; it was a stand made in favour of religion against priestcraft, of the free service of God against the passive-obedience slavery of man,—of the spirit and essence of revelation against the quibbles and quiddities of a degenerated philosophy—or to sum up all, of civilization against barbarity and degradation. Such a view of the Reformation will alone do it justice; and by thus regarding it, can mankind best be secured against the subtle snares which on every side beset a less philosophic and comprehensive aspect of its differences with the old church.

We do not think that Dr. Vaughan has at all overstated this part of his case; he has, on the contrary, somewhat overlooked the influence which great cities exercise on the first spread of Christianity, and in rescuing its followers from persecution. He has not even felt sufficiently the bearings of commerce on the rise and progress of the reforming spirit; having with respect to it, fallen somewhat into the common error of mistaking cause for effect:—

"The effect of this new spirit upon commerce, and upon the kind of civilization which has its centre in great cities, has been very conspicuous. Just before the commencement of the reformation, the commercial power of Europe was in the hands of the Portuguese. During the progress of that struggle, Spain became the seat of commercial ascendancy. But no sooner do we see Protestantism acquire stability and power in Europe, than we see the civic industry, the manufacturing skill, the commercial enterprise, the colonial greatness, and the naval power of Europe go over, almost entirely, to the side of the professors of the new faith, and with that class of religionists have these things continued, in the main, to our own time. It was the [illegible] power of Protestantism which enabled the United Provinces to assert their independence in the face of the most deadly hostility on the part of Spain and her allies; and which enabled the same people to place an effectual check on the ambition of Louis XIV., even while the half of Europe was at his bidding. * * Portugal, Spain, and Italy, have continued their adhesion to the old faith, and to this day they are the victims of the old decrepitude. Russia upon the threshold of those countries have been making every sort of progress, with unprecedented [illegible] the last three centuries, and during that period those kingdoms have not been merely stationary, but in most respects retrograding. * * We do not hesitate, therefore, to allege, that the weakness of the social system in Europe is on the side of Catholicism, and that its strength is on the side of Protestantism."

Now all this is only partially true, either in fact or in theory. The spirit of the Romish Church during the Middle Ages, was simply aggrandizement of the Church and of Churchmen; and it lent itself to liberty or to tyranny, indifferently, as best served its own momentary purpose: to tyranny the most frequently, only as that most commonly amalgamated with its selfish designs. At the time of the Reformation, churchcraft was closely allied to statecraft; and the two combined were hostile to every social movement,—that of commerce among the rest. But where did the Reformation find the lever with which it worked? in the active and inquisitive mind of commercial communities. It was, indeed, State, rather than Church mismanagement, which warred against Portuguese and Spanish commerce; and if that proved itself the strongest, it was because commerce was already in chains. But in Italy, and in the Hans towns, where civil tyranny was cowed, commerce throve unmolested by Popery; and when the moment of religious deliverance arrived, it was in such great foci of commercial activity, that Protestantism found its readiest disciples, and its principal barriers against the invasions of civil and of religious persecution.

In our notice of Dr. Taylor's work on the manufacturing districts (Athen. No. 773), we referred to some striking instances of the strong and direct influence of great aggregates of men and of manufacturing industry on the developement of agriculture itself. But besides this market encouragement, the utility of the great town in diffusing knowledge is (as we have stated) not less important. Dr. Vaughan, more suo, puts these truths in a more didactic form:—

"The great agency in calling forth man's capabilities, whether for good or for evil, is that of his fellows. The picturesque, accordingly, may be with the country, but the intellectual, speaking generally, must be with the town. Agriculture may possess its science, and the farmer, as well as the landowner, may not be devoid of intelligence; but in such connexions, the science and intelligence, in common with the nourishment of the soil, must be derived, in the main, from the studies prosecuted in cities, and from the wealth realized in the traffic of cities. If pasturage is followed by tillage, and if tillage is made to partake of the nature of a study and a science, these signs of improvement are peculiar to lands in which cities make their appearance, and they become progressive only as cities become opulent and powerful. In this sense we might venture to change the language of our poet a little, and say, 'Man makes the country, where art makes the town!'—and in so saying we should make a much nearer approach toward the truth."

"It may be that the United States will be appealed to, as affording striking evidence of the low mechanical routine to which all science is reduced, in proportion as the elements of society become more and more democratic. It should be a sufficient answer to such persons, to remind them that the republican institutions of Athens, so far from being incompatible with a high state of civic refinement, have contributed to render that city the model of all cities in respect to such cultivation. In the history of the United States, the useful has hitherto very naturally taken a marked precedence of the ornamental, partly from the youth of the States themselves, and partly from the fact that England is, in this respect, only as another province to North America, everything new in British discovery being at the service of the Anglo-American people so soon as it becomes known among ourselves. Down to this time, it has been enough that the people of the United States should apply the stores of knowledge placed continually at their disposal. Of America, we may say, her age of invention is to come. But come it will, though her danger, in common with all states in which the commercial spirit becomes predominant, will continue to be on the side of looking to science too much in its relation to mechanism and profit, and too little in relation to its less obvious and wider results. The great check upon this tendency will be found in the general intelligence of her people; in the necessary increase of wealth with certain classes among them; and in the national pride, which will always be much affected by the consciousness of this deficiency so long as it exists."

In allusion to the "tyrant majorities" of the American states, Dr. Vaughan makes some shrewd observations:—

"It is not to be denied that among ourselves much of this evil exists. [illegible] one knows that our great landholders make [illegible], for the most part, of coercing their tenants [illegible] of their particular opinions. Our [illegible], also, has its peculiar [illegible] in this shape, which [illegible] for the classes dependent upon it. By these things, in a great measure, our people are broken up into parties, and the man committed to one side has to lay his account with much social hostility from the other. Our laws do not punish independence in politics or in religion, but society does. We have not a tyrannical majority, but we have in the place of it, tyrannical classes, and tyrannical parties. In a multitude of instances we see that talent fails to be appreciated, character ceases to be safe, social standing is lost, wealth, employment, subsistence—all are hazarded when men dare to commit themselves to a decided course in regard to some of our great public questions. In both countries, it is from these indirect modes of oppression, more than from any positive law, that freedom opinion is invaded."

The summing up, too, is worth quoting:—

"But it must not be forgotten, that with all the faults of an ill-regulated citizenship, men would possess few opinions worth contending about, and still less freedom of opinion, were there no cities. Political science, taking in the great moral questions belonging to good government, finds its birthplace in cities, and in its birthplace only will it be found to make hopeful advances towards maturity. Its aim should be to discountenance tyranny in every form—the tyranny of opinion, no less than the tyranny of law, or of the sword. It aims at the good of all, and it should learn how to respect the opinions of all. It is not perfect, but it is a great good—incalculably great when compared with the ignorance, the barbarism, and the misery that would come into its place if it ceased to exist. We see its faults, but all faults are comparative, and in thus setting forth the defects and vices often attendant on some of the best forms of citizenship, we do not make choice of subjection to the much greater social evils which must belong to the condition of the people who do not build cities. Our aim is not to commend barbarism, but to improve civilization, and to that end we would deal with it faithfully.

The sophism in this, and all similar arguments, lies in contrasting the maximum of evil attributable, to one condition, with the beau ideal of its opposite, or at least with an assumed state of society, in some stage of that opposite's influence. In assigning the evil, the argument sinks the concomitant good; and in its constrast, it makes a like imperfect statement the other way. In praising despotism, men instance the long peace of Augustus, or the reigns of the Trajans, and carefully keep out of sight the Neros or the Heliogabali; just so in railing against tyrant majorities, they sink all notice of Star Chambers and Inquisitions.

But it is time to pause. If our quotations have not produced a desire to read the book, their extension will equally fail to do so. In Dr. Vaughan's survey of his subject, there are few of the influences of great cities on which he has not shed some light. With respect to education we find him (as might be expected) more favourable to popular, than to governmental, institutions; and we think him so far right that the best guarantee for diffused education is a strong desire among the people for information: here, as elsewhere, the aid-thyself principle is immediately applicable. His remarks on the Prussian system, though somewhat one-sided, are worth more than a passing attention, in the present state of public opinion, which sets rather violently in favour of the short cuts, and the sic jubeo appliances, of arbitrary sovereignty, in search of improvement.—Athenæum.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CHRIST'S HOSPITAL.—A General Court of the Governors of Christ's Hospital was held at their Hall on Monday, to take into consideration an address to Her Majesty, praying her to accept their humble but hearty thanks for her royal munificence, in the gift lately presented by her to that institution (1,000*l.*). The treasurer of the institution, who, in a very feeling address, moved the thanks of the meeting, mentioned a most singular fact:—That since the institution was founded by the youthful sovereign, Edward VI., no sovereign of this realm has ever bestowed one farthing upon this excellent institution. It remained for our present most gracious and youthful Queen to [illegible] by her munificent gift the benefactions of the youthful founder.—Pat.

SIR ROBERT PEEL'S PLAN OF CHURCH-EXTENSION.—The Globe of last Thursday says, "Sir Robert Peel has adopted, as the basis of his church-extension scheme, the principle which he denounced and opposed, when it was propounded by the Whig Government as a leading feature of a plan for abolishing church-rates."

And the Morning Chronicle of Saturday says, "Sir Robert Peel has explained away to nothing the promise of church-extension which he made last year."

Thus we are distinctly told by these two newspapers—by the one, that Sir Robert Peel is going to do nothing, and by the other, that he is going to do almost, or entirely, the same thing which the Whigs proposed, and which he [illegible] in 18[illegible].

Now, both these [illegible] [illegible]ly false. Sir Robert Peel is [illegible] had made every necessary and considerate arrangement for their comfort. The zenana will, it is thought, come by the Semiramis, which may be expected hourly.

The Ameers several times expressed their thanks, in the most liberal terms, for the kind treatment which they have enjoyed at the hands of Captain Glasse, and his gallant crew. The Nimrod made a quick passage, having left on the 15th April at four in the afternoon. Two boats, one belonging to the Superintendent of the Indian Navy, put off for the Nimrod about four o'clock, in order to bring the distinguished captives on shore. An officer's guard has been ordered to proceed to Malabar Hill, where it is reported that the Government Bungalow in that quarter, will be given for the reception of the prisoners. This is an amiable trait in the character of Sir G. Arthur, who at such a hot season, foregoes his own comforts for the good of others.

—The news brought by the Nimrod is, that Scinde is tranquil—two of the principal tribes had declared their complete submission to the British power—Sir Charles Napier is effectually Governor of that country, and awaited merely the departure of the Ameers and of their zenana to take possession of the Palace at Hyderabad, and to instal the government. He is in the enjoyment of excellent health, and was so confident in the security of his rule, that he has, as report states, sent for Lady Napier.

The forces were about to be diminished, the Poona horse and some other troops being about to be removed elsewhere. Captain Willoughby of the Artillery, who came in charge of the Ameers, brought down the Head Quarters of his Company.

The news from Kurrachee is, that it continued to be surrounded by the Beloochees, who used every means to pillage the British there. The route to Tatta is said not to be yet open. H. M. 22d Regiment, which has reaped such laurels in Scinde, is described as about to proceed to Kurrachee. The great want there is of some Cavalry to scour the country.

Landing of the Ameers.—At half past 5 o'clock the Apollo Bunder was thronged by various persons, who went thither to witness the landlanding of the Ameers. Boats of various kinds were seen around the Nimrod which was at anchor in the Middle Ground. Within a few minutes the small Steamer Sesha, which was in readiness, was seen to approach the ship of war, and take two boats in tow—and in a short time they approached the Bunder. At length the boats came along side the Pier. Captain Oliver superintended the disembarkation, assisted by the officers of the different vessels of war in the harbour; the Chief Magistrate, P. W. Legeyt, Esq. and Captain Burrowes regulated the Police; Major Seaton acted as Town Major, and Captain Willoughby made the arrangements of the carriages. As soon as the first boat stopped, Mr. Secretary Escombe and some of these officers went down the steps and assisted the Chief Ameer to ascend them. Upon reaching the top, the old man, who is a most remarkable specimen of the proportions of Falstaff from the extraordinary extension of his girdle, looked for a moment around him. The gentlemen pointed out the carriage in which he was to be conveyed to his residence. Doctor Burnes, who was present, went forward to salute his old acquaintance;—the Ameer recognized him, and said that he had often thought of him since 1828.

"I remember him," said Doctor Burnes to his friend, "when he was a fine young man, of slight form and great activity;—but time has wrought great change."

The Ameer when handed to the open carriage, which was like the rest, a hack one hired for the occasion, paused; and whether from not being accustomed to such vehicles or not, he seemed unwilling to enter it, after some persuasion he took his seat, and his son and others joined him. One of them exhibited his agility in stepping upon the front seat and clambering over to sit beside the coachman. The carriage was then driven off, accompanied by some of the Cavalry that usually escort the Governor.

The rest of the Ameers soon got into the other carriages and followed towards Malabar Hill, where they are to take up their residence for a time. One sole carriage was seen to take the direction of Fort George, where one of the family, who is accused of having procured by unfair means the death of Captain Ennis, was sent in order to undergo the punishment of a rigorous confinement.

There was among the Ameers one who was obliged to be conveyed in a carpet litter from the boat: he was laid on the ground on his carpet, and soon the crowd surrounded him. His attendants were at hand, and as he felt his position oppressive, he cried out to be allowed to breathe; the Police sepoys who were near soon drove off the crowd, and he seemed to be at ease, until at length a palanquin was brought up, into which he was assisted.

In the mean time the attendants landed a quantity of mattrasses and other baggages on the pier, a guard of the Marine Battalion was placed over it, and bullock carts were brought forward in which the whole was placed in order to be conveyed to its destination.

Every arrangement seemed to have been suited to the occasion. The appearance of the Ameers had nothing strongly expressive of dignity or of intellect. Their round caps and their dresses bore the marks of travellers, and they looked themselves as if resigned to the fate, which is usual to the State Prisoners in India, viz. that of passing life in indolence and luxury.

The Semiramis is expected to bring the zenana of the Ameers, it appears that of the 270 females composing that sisterhood of slaves, only 30 have volunteered to come to India, to join their former Lords and Masters; the others prefer remaining to enjoy the liberty which Lord Ellenborough's proclamation has ensured to them."—The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette.

ARRIVAL OF THE AMEERS.

The fallen rulers of Scinde reached Bombay on Wednesday on board of H. M.'s sloop Nimrod. The winds were so light in shore that though the Sloop had been telegraphed early in the morning, the passengers were not landed till towards twilight. The Ameers expressed themselves gratified for the kindness shewn them by Captain Glasse, and his officers. Captain Oliver superintended their debarkation; Mr. Legeyt, Chief Magistrate of Police. Captain Burrows, Major D. Seaton, and other officers were in attendance at the Pier. Instead of sending the unhappy chiefs to Mahim Fort, Butcher's Island, or Fort George, all of which had been examined, Sir G. Arthur had made over for their use the bungalows occupied, at certain seasons of the year, by himself and his family at Malabar Point. Open carriages were in attendance, and an escort of Cavalry accompanied them to their place of residence. The Ameers being prisoners of State, are retained in strict seclusion; they are described as broken-hearted and miserable men,—maintaining much of the dignity of fallen greatness, and without any querulous or angry complainings at this unalleviable source of sorrow, refusing to be comforted,—the very pictures of unmingled grief and hopeless despondency. The generous consideration of Government in assigning them as cheerful a place of residence as could be provided, was not lost upon them, but seemed to afford them no consolation. Meer Nussoor at once recognised Dr. Burnes, and spoke of their former intercourse—when the first European officer who had ever been permitted to visit the court of Scinde considered it a high privilege to afford medical attendance to those who are now our prisoners: the Meer said he had constantly reflected since then on this intercourse, which, from the mention made of it to those who have since visited Hydrabad, must have been an endearing one. Poor Meer Roostum of Khyrpoor, so long our ally, the first Scindian chief who ventured to express his admiration of us, and to desire our friendship—by much the most intelligent and hardly dealt with of them all, recognised Captain Del' Hoste in a moment, and embraced him in a paroxysm of the deepest emotion. Captain Del' Hoste had fed with him, and had lived with him for months, and he now looked on him as the only friend he had in a land of strangers. One of the chiefs, supposed to have been connected with the murder of Captain Ennis, has been placed in close confinement; the others will enjoy as many comforts and as much freedom as is consistent with their safe custody, till the pleasure of the Governor General be known. It was well to remove them from Scinde: their presence in our camp cherished hopes, to attempt whose realization could only lead to further mischief.—Bombay Times, April 22.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

Dear Sir,—The interest you have always displayed in the welfare and improvement of India, is my apology for intruding these my humble endeavours in the same cause.

In your issue for March 23d, is an article on Railways in India, written evidently in recommendation of their adoption; but as I believe that your correspondent's view of the subject is a fallacious one; and that it is the duty of every one, under such circumstances to contribute as much as lies in his power towards eliciting the truth; I contribute this my mite.

The article above alluded to, contains no estimate to guide to a correct opinion of the economy of the plan; and without one it is impossible to get any thing like an approximation to the truth: I have therefore endeavoured to supply the public with as correct a one as lies in my power.

To give the public the means of judging what degree of confidence may be placed in my opinions, I will adduce Robt. Stephenson's report in favour of my plans and estimates for a Railway of 250 miles extent, over a most mountainous country:—and the plans and estimates which I have lately made to the satisfaction of my employers, Messrs. Carr, Tagore and Co. of a line of canal 111¼ miles long, in this district. On this occasion it was left to me to decide whether a Railway or a Canal should be adopted. I decided on the latter, as my estimates, both of the first cost and of the current expenses, were very greatly in its favour. There was no engineering difficulty whatever on the line, for a Railway: indeed, I never saw, in any country a piece of ground so well adapted for the mere construction of a Railway, as the line I levelled.

I have had to correct several errors in your correspondent's calculations, some greatly to the advantage of his scheme, but even so, you will see by my estimates that it will not answer to carry goods by Railway, in this country; that is on such lines as that from Calcutta to Allahabad.

In para. 10, he puts down Reynolds's cast iron sleepers at Co.'s Rs. 2 each: this must be a mistake; two Rupee's worth of cast iron would make but a sorry sleeper for a yard of Railway. I have allowed about Co.'s Rs. 7; and he has allowed nothing for turn outs.

In para. 14, he assumes, in calculating the rate of freight on the H. Co.'s Steamers, 50 cub. feet to the ton, supposing it would be the same as is usual on the ships trading from this port: but this is a mistake: the allowance is 93⅓ c. ft. making the ton cost 5,6d p. mile, instead of 3d as he has it.

And in para. 16, he supposes that a 600 maund boat carries 600 maunds; whereas it only takes 250, making the actual cost of a ton a mile 0,533d instead of 0,252d.

An insuperable barrier, in practice, to the introduction of Railways into this country, for a long period to come, is their enormous cost. Where could Four Millions Sterling be raised for the construction of a Railway in India? even supposing the estimates were favourable. No such impediment exists in the case of the Canal: its first cost is within reach; £850,000 is no extraordinary sum to embark in such a speculation. It would not afford such a brilliant triumph to the engineer, but it would certainly succeed in a commercial point of view; which is the true test of utility. Canals maintain their superiority over Railways in point of economy, even in Europe, where they have to stand the competition of the latter, on an equal footing as regards the price of the labour bestowed upon them, while in this country the case is very different: the chief part of the Railway, in this country, would have to pay European prices, while the Canal would be done wholly at Indian prices: a difference of 4 to 1 in favour of the Canal.

In the annexed estimates, I have taken your correspondent's description of the country for good; and I have taken his estimate of the distance, viz. 630 miles for both the Railway and the Canal. The quantity of freight I have supposed each way 43,00,000 maunds: likewise taken from your correspondent's article.

Your most obedient,

Calcutta, 3d April, 1843. S. M. C. E.

We publish this letter not to disappoint our correspondent, but we reserve our remarks to the next week.—Ed.

RELIGIOUS.

DR. VAUGHAN AND THE ATHENÆUM ON THE REFORMATION.—"But if Christianity has done much to foster the spirit which declares that every man should be a freeman, and that woman should be his companion, and not his slave; it has done much more, since the era of the Reformation, to strengthen all previous impulses of that nature, by calling upon men, without respect of persons, to become, in the main, their own teachers with regard to all matters of religious opinion and religious duty. * * It taught a people, who seemed to have nothing to do in religion, except to be observant of its forms, to feel as though they had everything to do in it, if their observance of forms was to be found of the slightest value. Men who had been taught to lean entirely on the priesthood of others, were admonished, that as they hoped to be saved, it would behove them to become their own priests. In this manner, it set forth a new doctrine in respect to human right and human duty, based on new views in regard to human capability. It raised man from a condition of mere passiveness in the hands of the accredited ministers of religion, and required him to act with the intelligence and seriousness proper to a being conscious of his personal accountableness to God. * * It was no mean thing that men should learn to regard themselves as competent to pursue the course which had been thus marked out for them in respect to religion, inasmuch as it would prepare them to look with a new intelligence on many other matters, which, in common with religion, had been long accounted as subjects greatly above their comprehension. If men, for example, were to conduct themselves after this manner with regard to religion, was it not reasonable that they should learn to conduct themselves in the same manner with regard to the questions of civil government? If the church could err—and err so fatally, might not the state also err, and no less fatally, and could it be improper that the right to judge concerning the more sacred should be extended to the less? Religion and government are the great questions of society, and the principle which conveys a right to take cognizance of these, conveys a right to take cognizance of everything else. It is the fact that the principle of the Reformation carried with it these seeds of general improvement, that has given to it so much importance in the view of all minds interested in the progress of man and society. It was a call to wakefulness on one great subject, and a call made with so much success, that it could not fail to induce a habit of wakefulness in respect to many other subjects."

These, it seems to us, are the characteristic merits of the Reformation, its claims to admiration and respect. The dispute was not properly a dispute about texts, a dispute concerning the rejection of this ceremony, or a repudiation of that tradition; it was a stand made in favour of religion against priestcraft, of the free service of God against the passive-obedience slavery of man,—of the spirit and essence of revelation against the quibbles and quiddities of a degenerated philosophy—or to sum up all, of civilization against barbarity and degradation. Such a view of the Reformation will alone do it justice; and by thus regarding it, can mankind best be secured against the subtle snares which on every side beset a less philosophic and comprehensive aspect of its differences with the old church.

We do not think that Dr. Vaughan has at all overstated this part of his case; he has, on the contrary, somewhat overlooked the influence which great cities exercise on the first spread of Christianity, and in rescuing its followers from persecution. He has not even felt sufficiently the bearings of commerce on the rise and progress of the reforming spirit; having with respect to it, fallen somewhat into the common error of mistaking cause for effect:—

"The effect of this new spirit upon commerce, and upon the kind of civilization which has its centre in great cities, has been very conspicuous. Now all this is only partially true, either in fact or in theory. "It may be that the United States will be appealed to, as affording striking evidence of the low mechanical routine to which all science is reduced, in proportion as the elements of society become more and more democratic. It should be a sufficient answer to such persons, to remind them that the republican institutions of Athens, so far from being incompatible with a high state of civic refinement, have contributed to render that city the model of all cities in respect to such cultivation. In the history of the United States, the useful has hitherto very naturally taken a marked precedence of the ornamental, partly from the youth of the States themselves, and partly from the fact that England is, in this respect, only as another province to North America, everything new in British discovery being at the service of the Anglo-American people so soon as it becomes known among ourselves. Down to this time, it has been enough that the people of the United States should apply the stores of knowledge placed continually at their disposal. Of America, we may say, her age of invention is to come. But come it will, though her danger, in common with all states in which the commercial spirit becomes predominant, will continue to be on the side of looking to science too much in its relation to mechanism and profit, and too little in relation to its less obvious and wider results. The great check upon this tendency will be found in the general intelligence of her people; in the necessary increase of wealth with certain classes among them; and in the national pride, which will always be much affected by the consciousness of this deficiency so long as it exists."

In allusion to the "tyrant majorities" of the American states, Dr. Vaughan makes some shrewd observations:—

"It is not to be denied that among ourselves much of this evil exists. Every one knows that our great landholders make no secret, for the most part, of coercing their tenants in favour of their particular opinions. Our monied aristocracy, also, has its penalties in this shape, which it inflicts on the classes dependent upon it. By these means, in a great measure, our people are broken up into parties, and the man committed to one side has to lay his account with much social hostility from the other. Our laws do not punish independence in politics or in religion, but society does. We have not a tyrannical majority, but we have in the place of it, tyrannical classes, and tyrannical parties. In a multitude of instances we see that talent fails to be appreciated, character ceases to be safe, social standing is lost, wealth, employment, subsistence—all are hazarded when men dare to commit themselves to a decided course in regard to some of our great public questions. In both countries, it is from these indirect modes of oppression, more than from any positive law, that freedom opinion is invaded."

The summing up, too, is worth quoting:—

"But it must not be forgotten, that with all the faults of an ill-regulated citizenship, men would possess few opinions worth contending about, and still less freedom of opinion, were there no cities. Political science, taking in the great moral questions belonging to good government, finds its birthplace in cities, and in its birthplace only will it be found to make hopeful advances towards maturity. Its aim should be to discountenance tyranny in every form—the tyranny of opinion, no less than the tyranny of law, or of the sword. It aims at the good of all, and it should learn how to respect the opinions of all. It is not perfect, but it is a great good—incalculably great when compared with the ignorance, the barbarism, and the misery that would come into its place if it ceased to exist. We see its faults, but all faults are comparative, and in thus setting forth the defects and vices often attendant on some of the best forms of citizenship, we do not make choice of subjection to the much greater social evils which must belong to the condition of the people who do not build cities. Our aim is not to commend barbarism, but to improve civilization, and to that end we would deal with it faithfully.

The sophism in this, and all similar arguments, lies in contrasting the maximum of evil attributable, to one condition, with the beau ideal of its opposite, or at least with an assumed state of society, in some stage of that opposite's influence. In assigning the evil, the argument sinks the concomitant good; and in its constrast, it makes a like imperfect statement the other way. In praising despotism, men instance the long peace of Augustus, or the reigns of the Trajans, and carefully keep out of sight the Neros or the Heliogabali; just so in railing against tyrant majorities, they sink all notice of Star Chambers and Inquisitions.

But it is time to pause. If our quotations have not produced a desire to read the book, their extension will equally fail to do so. In Dr. Vaughan's survey of his subject, there are few of the influences of great cities on which he has not shed some light. With respect to education we find him (as might be expected) more favourable to popular, than to governmental, institutions; and we think him so far right that the best guarantee for diffused education is a strong desire among the people for information: here, as elsewhere, the aid-thyself principle is immediately applicable. His remarks on the Prussian system, though somewhat one-sided, are worth more than a passing attention, in the present state of public opinion, which sets rather violently in favour of the short cuts, and the sic jubeo appliances, of arbitrary sovereignty, in search of improvement.—Athenæum.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CHRIST'S HOSPITAL.—A General Court of the Governors of Christ's Hospital was held at their Hall on Monday, to take into consideration an address to Her Majesty, praying her to accept their humble but hearty thanks for her royal munificence, in the gift lately presented by her to that institution (1,000*l.*) The treasurer of the institution, who, in a very feeling address, moved the thanks of the meeting, mentioned a most singular fact:—That since the institution was founded by the youthful sovereign, Edward VI., no sovereign of this realm has ever bestowed one farthing upon this excellent institution. It remained for our present most gracious and youthful Queen to further by her munificent gift the beneficence of the youthful founder.—Pat.

SIR ROBERT PEEL'S PLAN OF CHURCH-EXTENSION.—The Globe of last Thursday says, "Sir Robert Peel has adopted, as the basis of his church-extension scheme, the principle which he denounced and opposed, when it was propounded by the Whig Government as a leading feature of a plan for abolishing church-rates."

And the Morning Chronicle of Saturday says, "Sir Robert Peel has explained away to nothing the promise of church-extension which he made last year."

Thus we are distinctly told by these two newspapers—by the one, that Sir Robert Peel is going to do nothing, and by the other, that he is going to do almost, or entirely, the same thing which the Whigs proposed, and which he himself withstood, in 1837.

Now, both these representations are most criminally false. Sir Robert Peel is about to offer to the church a large measure of extension; and the principle of his measure differs most essentially from that which he opposed in 1837.

The subject of debate is that of the lands and other estates of the church. These, as it is now well ascertained, are exceedingly ill-administered; and under the existing law, cannot be made to yield their full value. By an entirely different system, which, however, can only be established by an Act of Parliament, these estates may be made to produce a very large annual income, over and above their present rental. Whether this may be 100,000*l*., or 200,000*l*., or 300,000*l*., we shall not now stop to inquire; only remarking, in reply to those who foolishly exclaim, that "Sir Robert Peel is going to do nothing for the church,"—that if the new measure gives the church an increased rental of only 100,000*l*. a year, and at the same time enables her to raise money thereon,—it will be equal to supplying her with a capital, immediately available, of three millions sterling.

So much for the Chronicle's assertion, that Sir Robert Peel "has explained away to nothing his promise of church extension." The Globe, however, is more moderate in its misrepresentation; only objecting that Sir Robert's plan is merely the Whig plan of 1837, to which he then gave his most decided opposition.

"Half the truth is a lie;" a maxim which was never more forcibly illustrated than in this instance. Sir Robert Peel, we may concede, is probably about to produce a plan, one portion of which resembles the Whig plan of 1837. But it resembles only that part of the scheme of 1837 to which Sir Robert did not object; while that feature of the 1837 project which was defeated by Conservative opposition, is now utterly abandoned.

The Whigs, in 1837, proposed to give this new value to church property by a new enactment; but they then proposed that from this new value of her own estates, the church should derive no benefit whatever. Gaining this new income, on the one hand, she was to yield to the Dissenters her church-rates on the other. The amount given up would have exceeded the amount gained, and thus the church would have been a loser by the whole transaction; while of church-extension not one syllable was heard. This was the proposition which Sir Robert Peel, and the whole Conservative party, withstood in 1837; a proposition differing from the present, as much as an offer to improve a man's estate for his own benefit would differ from an offer to improve it for the benefit of others.—Record.

MR. C. BULLER ON CHARITIES.—The total income of charities was about 1,200,000*l*., and he had heard from good authority, that if it were well managed that income might become 2,000,000*l*. But it was stated at 1,200,000*l*., and of that sum 312,000*l*. only was applied to education; namely, 151,000*l*. to classical schools, 141,000 to schools not classical, and 19,000*l* or 20,000*l*. to schools of a miscellaneous character. That was independent of the universities. He thought then it might occur to the Legislature, that in order to provide the great requisite of education for the people, the best way to procure the necessary means would be, without diverting the funds of those charities too much from the purposes to which their founders devoted them, to make some efforts to render that enormous amount available for the purposes of education. (Hear.) That might, perhaps, startle some honourable gentlemen. (Hear.) But another part of those charities had also been classified, and that was that species of charity which was distributed in small sums, putting out of the question clothing, not food, and medical relief. Now, he thought that if one could describe those charities by one short term, nothing could describe them better than the term "mischievous charities." (Hear.) It was not only useless, but the most detrimental way of giving money that could be devised. (Hear.) He would mention one instance. In the Report of the Charity Commissioners it was stated, that in 1828 they went to the parish of St. Luke and there they found that a sum of 200*l*. was distributed annually to the poor, and how? in the shape of eighteenpenny tickets on the day next before Christmas-day. The consequence was, that the whole of that money was spent in drinking close to the workhouse; so much so, that in the evidence it was stated, that on that day the gin-shop keepers in the neighbourhood hired an extra number of hands to supply their customers. ("Hear," and a laugh.)—Pat.

THE MINT.—By a Parliamentary paper issued on Monday morning, respecting the transactions of the Mint during the year ending December 31, 1842, it appears:—1. That 194,229*l*. 0s. 6d. were issued out of the Consolidated Fund for the purchase of bullion for coinage.—2. That the total amount of purchases of silver bullion and dollars was 191,924*l*. 18s. 2½d. the Mint value of which, at 66s. per lb Troy, was 208,746*l*. 2s. 11½d., showing a seignorage difference between market and Mint value of 18,664*l*. 2s. 3½d.—3. Old worn silver coin from the Bank of England, purchased for re-coinage, nominal value, 20,000*l*.; Mint value, 18,157*l*. 2s. 5d.; showing a loss on the purchase of 1,842*l*. 17s. 7d.—4. Copper bullion purchased, 499*l*. 12s. 2d.; Mint value at 224*l*. per ton, 1,189*l*. 3s.; seignorage, 689*l*. 10s. 10d.—5. The silver and copper coin delivered into the Mint-office amounted to 192,852*l*. of silver, and 1,344*l*. of copper.—6. Payments of silver and copper coin were 190,472*l*. 13s. 3d.—7. Payments made into the Exchequer out of cash received for silver and copper monies, 175,317*l*. 0s. 4d.—Pat.

THE SLAVE TRADE.—On Tuesday, in answer to a question from Lord Brougham, the Earl of Aberdeen entered into some important explanations relative to the instructions given to our cruisers on the African coast; and stated, that a new and explicit code, founded upon existing treaties and the law of nations, had been prepared, the publication of which would, he trusted, disabuse the French public of the unfounded prejudice they now entertained. The noble Lord proceeded to show that England had done much to put an end to the traffic in slaves. In Cuba, owing in a great degree to the exertions of the Governor-General Valdez, whose integrity and disinterested humanity merited the highest eulogy, the number of vessels employed in the trade had been diminished within the last four years from 71 to 3; while the number of slaves imported, which in 1839 was 25,000, was in 1842 only 3,150. The Earl of Clarendon bore personal testimony to the generous conduct of General Valdez.—Pat. March 2.

WRECKERS ALONG THE COAST.—The following is an extract of a letter received yesterday from New Romney, dated February 26:—"I observed by the French papers that the persons taken up for pillaging the wrecks of the Reliance and Conquerer have been tried and condemned to imprisonment. It would most signally be aiding the cause of humanity if the authorities on Romney Marshes would follow the example set them by their neighbours; for such wholesale plunder as has taken place here lately I never would have believed had it not come under my observation. I will endeavour (if that be possible) to give you an idea of it. The Francis (schooner), from London, bound to Ireland, came on shore about a mile and a half to the eastward of Dungeness Light, during a snow-storm on Saturday, the 18th inst., at 1 o'clock in the morning. It blew a tremendous gale from the eastward also. The coastguard, as usual, did all that men could do to save those on board, but, owing to the heavy sea breaking continually over the vessel, every soul perished. I believe they consisted of six persons, including the master. As you may suppose, the vessel herself very soon began to break up, and her cargo, consisting of tallow and dyewood, was consequently washed along the beach; hundreds of the inhabitants (most of whom are smugglers, or smuggler's descendants, from highest to lowest) from the different towns came flocking down to the beach, and, notwithstanding the efforts of the coast-guard and agents, managed to carry off property to a large amount. On the very day of the unfortunate disaster, and day after (Sunday), tallow was sold in Lydd by the cwt., almost openly, for 3½d. and 4d. per pound; nay, so bold and shameless had they become, that some of the more respectable thieves (or rather, I should have said, greater scoundrels) actually bought the tallow from the minor thieves and sent it to Rye and other places in waggons and carts. I have long had a desire to expose the infamous and nefarious system practised on this part of the coast towards the victims of the tempest, and I think I shall be able to open the eyes of the public to facts which will astonish them."—Pat.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE RICHARD CARLILE.—The remains of this notorious individual were deposited at the Kensal-green Cemetery on Monday. At two o'clock in the afternoon a vast number of persons were assembled in Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, to witness the departure of the funeral cortege. At three o'clock a hearse and five mourning coaches drove up to the house where the deceased was lying. The funeral procession moved on, and during its progress attracted considerable attention. On arriving at the grave, a considerable delay occurred from the clergyman having had to read the burial service over several bodies before the arrival of the deceased. When the officiating divine, the Rev. Josiah Twigger, arrived at the grave, accompanied by the clerk, one of the deceased's sons addressed the clergyman as follows:—"Sir, we want no service over the body of our late father; he passed his life in opposition to all priestcraft, and we protest against the service being read." The reverend divine replied, "Sir, I must do my duty." Another son of the deceased here stepped forward and said, "We have purchased this ground as the resting place of our deceased parent, and I object, with my brothers, to the reading of the funeral service." (Here loud cries of "Hear, hear," were given by the mob assembled round the grave.) The clergyman continued, "I must, and will do my duty; and at your peril abide the consequences that may occur from any opposition to the usual observance on such occasions." Another son, "Then, Sir, we will not hear it." Here the mob cried out, "Yes, yes, leave the grave; let all the friends of Mr. Carlile go away." At this moment the party assembled quitted the grave, the mourners retired into the coaches, and the clergyman proceeded in the most impressive manner to read the service, during which he was frequently interrupted by ribald jests from a few stragglers who had kept at a short distance from the spot. It is due to the sons of the deceased to state, that they gave their opposition in the most respectful tone possible, but their example was not imitated by many of the followers of the deceased. After the clergyman had retired, a rush was made to the grave, and a son of the deceased addressed the crowd as follows:—"I beg to state that I, with my family and friends, were opposed to the performance of this service; we did not require it, and have given every opposition in our power to its being done. I thank you all, in the name of my late father, for your attendance here on this occasion." Having said thus much he and the followers of the funeral departed.—Times.

ENGLISH JOURNALISM AT FRANKFORT.—An English newspaper is about to be established in Frankfort, similar to that edited by Galignani in Paris, and destined to communicate to Englishmen residing in and about the former town the principal contents of the English press as quickly as possible. An Englishman, who has resided at Frankfort for several years, is at the head of this new enterprise.—Pat.

MISREPRESENTATIONS REGARDING THE AFFGHAN WAR.—There would seem to be something portentous in the appearance of two Numbers of a Quarterly publication within a few weeks of each other,—the February Number of the Edinburgh Review treading on the heels of the January. With some curiosity we cut open the new Number, to discover on what urgent account it had forestalled its proper time of appearance; and, if we mistake not, we find the reason at full length in the concluding Article—as the spirit of a letter often lies in the postscript—"Ministerial Misrepresentations regarding the East." The Article comes but just in time to assist the discussions in the House of Commons, upon a subject which is in some danger of becoming stale in public estimation before it has been well opened, much less exhausted;—we mean the facts connected with the occupation of Affghanistan and the subsequent disasters. The recent debate on the vote of thanks to the Indian army scarcely touched upon this subject, which calls for a distinct and searching inquiry. The reviewer fairly announces his object to be that of a partisan, or, at least, an advocate, in undertaking to defend the administration of Lord AUCKLAND against the misrepresentations of party adversaries; but it must be acknowledged, that he has executed his task with the calmness of an historian, while the competent knowledge which he exhibits, gives to his statements, though exparte, considerable weight. The charges brought against the late Governor General are, we must think, very successfully repelled, so far as regards responsibility for that "series of omissions and blunders, unparalleled in our military annals," which led to the deplorable issue at Cabool; and some other "fallacies" are satisfactorily disposed of. One of Sir ROBERT PEEL'S main pretexts for the infliction of an Income-tax, namely, the charges which the disasters in Affghanistan would occasion upon the British Treasury, is shown to have had no foundation in fact, and to have been unworthy of the Minister who stooped to make use of such a fiction. "The real fact is," says the Reviewer, "that the war in Affghanistan has not cost, and is not likely to cost, the people of this country one farthing. The reinforcements so emphatically mentioned by Sir ROBERT PEEL, were sent out at the sole expense of the Company; and to meet the excess of expenditure occasioned by the war, the Company have raised a loan of 5,000,000*l*., which will be sufficient for the purpose." "Incredible as it must appear," says the writer, "to all who read the extracts from the Speeches of the Prime Minister, neither the opening and closing triumphs, nor the intermediate disasters of the Affghan war, have cost the people of Great Britain a single farthing." This, however, is not quite correct. The Reviewer is thinking only of the actual war expenditure; but he forgets that they have cost us peerages and pensions; and never was peerage much less deservedly obtained than by Lord KEANE. We would not grudge the bauble coronet; but, to have hereditary legislators fastened upon us, with their pensioned heirs, as the consequence of ennobling a lucky soldier, is a just subject of national complaint. We are happy, however, to be assured by the Reviewer, that the state of the finances and credit of the East India Company, and the improved state of things as regards the intrinsic resources of India,—leave no ground of fear,—"no fear that our Indian possessions will not advance in institutions and wealth in a rapidly accelerating ratio; above all, no fear that they will become a pecuniary burden to Great Britain;—that is, if the nobleman whom Sir ROBERT PEEL has selected as the fittest of his great party to administer these important affairs, will be satisfied with pursuing the wise course of domestic policy chalked out for him by those who originated, or maintained and improved, that order of things which he there found in existence."

Upon this point, the Reviewer, like every body else, has something more than misgivings. The "crude schemes of pseudo-reform" of the Governor-General, his financial quackeries and blunders, have made him almost as ridiculous, as his attempts to disparage the administration of his predecessor render him odious. "All India laughs at him;" but, it is remarked, "the laugh is spreading among the natives, and that will not be so pleasant, if it goes on." He has affronted and disgusted the Civil Service,—"a most powerful official oligarchy, by whose instrumentality, whether he like them or not, he must conduct the Government;" and this, not by unpopular yet honest measures of reform, but "by gratuitous, objectless slights and insults." "Unless rumour be falser than usual," adds the Writer, "Lord ELLENBOROUGH has equally alienated and disgusted the Court of Directors. But his Proclamations, and, above all, his General Order on the restoration of the Sandal-wood Gates to the Hindoo temple of Somnauth, seem to have brought public opinion as to his dangerous interferences and general unfitness, to absolute unanimity. Nor will the approval—the deplorable approval—of the greatest military authority alive, save them from undoubting derision and contempt now, and throughout all posterity." That approval, indeed, has been expressed only in reference to that part of the Governor-General's conduct which related to the orders issued to the Commanders, and the provision made for the advance of the troops. No one disputes his Lordship's claim to the merit of having availed himself of all the military preparations made by his predecessor, and acted as a good Commissary General, which was all that was left him to do, after he had given permission to the two Generals to advance. But of the wisdom of his conduct in other respects, the public will form their own opinion; and will no more accept the Duke of WELLINGTON's affirmation as evidence of the noble Lord's political competency, then the voucher of Lord BROUGHAM for his eminent piety. Nor, having commenced his administration with arraigning, before the world, the policy of the late Governor General, can Lord ELLENBOROUGH complain of being judged with the same judgment, and meted with his own measure. "Use the memory of thy predecessor fairly and tenderly," is the sage advice of Lord BACON; "for, if thou dost not, it is a debt which will sure be paid when thou art gone."—Pat.

THE POPE AND THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA.—ROME, FEB. 7.—It is certain that His Holiness persists in protesting against all the innovations made in the church by the Emperor Nicholas, and that he rejects all offers of arrangement which exclude the re-establishment of the church of Poland in the ancient status quo.—Ibid.

PORTUGAL.—We have received Lisbon news to the 21st inst., brought by the Iberia steamer. Lord Howard de Walden had, it would appear, received instructions from England to break off the negotiations for the tariff convention: the British Government not being disposed to accept the last Portuguese proposals, nor to lose further time in the matter. The Portuguese appear to have anticipated this result; and, while keeping up high duties to protect their manufactures, the Fishery Company are striving to pacify and bolster up the Douro interests by grants of public money.—Ibid.

THE CAPE COLONY.—We have received Cape Papers to the 24th of December, which furnish occasion for recalling public attention to the affairs of that important but neglected Colony.

Of the lack of wisdom on the part of the Government, or of public spirit on that of the good people of Cape Town, or of both united, a very prodigious illustration is afforded by the fact, that the prosperity of Cape Town, and its retaining the honour of a metropolis, are placed in jeopardy for want of a road across the Downs. This is at present the all-engrossing subject. The discovery, that the farmers in the interior are seeking for other ports more to the eastward, to avoid the necessity of transporting their produce across "a gulf of sand," which renders it necessary to employ eighteen oxen to draw 2,000lbs. of wool,—has at length alarmed and roused the inhabitants, who have petitioned to be allowed to raise money for the first outlay, by a rate levied on fixed property, and to collect tolls for its future maintenance. Various plans have been heretofore proposed for carrying this object into effect,—by Government or by joint-stock companies; but they have all fallen to the ground. When the "compensation money" was beginning to flow into the Colony to an amount far beyond the necessities of business, and the question that perplexed the brains of capitalists was, what should be done with the superabundance of money, when interest fell to less than three per cent., and a large amount of money was locked up in the Government coffers,—it was proposed to form a grand Joint-Stock Company, with a capital of a million, to be called the "Cape of Good Hope Joint Stock Land Road, and Emigration Company." Instead of this, we are told, the money was "laid out in ribbons and silks," and served only to excite a spirit of luxury and extravagance. We suspect that, if the application of the compensation money could be traced to its results, it would, in nearly every instance, be found to have been as fruitless of any benefit to the West India Colonies, as to the Cape, so far as regards the permanent interests of the Colonists.

At the Cape, however, matters have now come to "the turning point," not only of Road or no Road, but of Town or no Town. "Cape Town," remarks the South African Advertiser, "exists but as the port of the country, which it is fast ceasing to be,—or as Head Quarters, which, if its comparative commercial importance declines, it will also soon cease to be. There is but one remedy; a Road to serve as a bridge across the Cape sands, and branches from it to the productive districts." The main line of the proposed road is "from Salt-river House to Tygerberg, where it is to divide, one branch running to the Eerste River, and another turning to the left towards the Paarl; it is also proposed to carry other branches to Koeberg and Stellenbosch. The Cape Town traders have, indeed, need to bestir themselves and shake off their Batavian sluggishness. The improvement of their port is not less necessary than that of the means of transit by land; and they must look for a growing rivalry on the part of the eastern districts.

The accounts from the Frontier are most distressing. The continued drought in Cafferland had led to a serious loss of cattle; and, the principal sustenance of the natives being milk, numbers had died from famine. The Government had issued instructions to the resident political agents to furnish the sufferers with food at the public expense; and private liberality was also contributing to alleviate the distress.

But the most important intelligence relates to the insurgent spirit of the Boers beyond the Orange River, whose proceedings had occasioned the Lieutenant-Governor suddenly to march in that direction with a large force of horse and foot, and artillery. Reinforcements were to follow. There can now be no mistake as to the only course left to the Cape Government. The accounts from Natal represent the Boers as openly declaring their determination, as soon as the six months' truce concluded with Captain Cloete should be at an end, to drive the English out of their territories. The Frontier Times states, that "they have also declared that, if the Government interfere between them and the natives, or in any way, they will invade the Colony. They are parcelling out the lands they have seized, and are issuing title deeds. Pretorius is now Field-Commandant of the country south of the Draakberg; and a Dutchman of the name of Cloete has been raised to the same bad eminence, and probably by equal merit, amongst the Orange River Boers. They have declared all that country their own, without any reservation; and the native tribes or chiefs are in future to hold their own territories as vassals of the Dutch Republic. The leader of one party of Boers, whose name we refrain for the present to mention, has, it is said, requested assistance from the Government; stating that, unless it be speedily sent him, he will be compelled against his will to become a traitor. In the meantime, we hear that the Boers within the Colony are leaving, and still preparing to expatriate themselves in great numbers."

The immediate cause of the present movement, the South African Advertiser says, are "certain overt acts on the part of the Boers in Adam Kok's District of the Griqua country, and open preparations for an attack on Philipolis; and the discovery of certain proceedings on this side the river, by which the peace of the country and the safety of the inhabitants have been seriously threatened. Rumour and probability connect these proceedings with corresponding movement on the part of the Boers at Natal. They have, from end to end of that territory, resolved on savage independence; and Government has at last begun to act as open rebellion and hopeless hostility—hostility that concessions only inflame, like oil poured on fire—imperatively require.

"The Griquas, not only those under Kok, but those under Waterboer also; the numerous bodies of Bushmen who look up to Waterboer as the friend and ally of the Colony, and as their protector; and numerous native chiefs and tribes among whom Christianity and civilization were making rapid progress; as well as the security of this Colony and the honour of the British name, depend now on the conduct of Col. Hare. Simultaneous action on Natal, Colesberg, Moshesh's country, and Philipolis, will quench this rebellion, not, probably, without blood, but chiefly in the blood of the guilty. Government has in hand, or within its reach, force sufficient for such action. This all the world knows and sees, and therefore will ascribe, and most justly, any thing approaching to failure, either to military incapacity, cowardice, (we use right words,) or treason at Head-Quarters."

The occupation of Port Natal will now be forced upon the British Government. It has been too long delayed, but is now imperatively demanded, for the security of the Frontier, and the protection of the native tribes. We shall await with some anxiety the next despatches. The latest intelligence will be found in another column.—Pat.

ABYSSINIA.—The Allgemeine Zeitung gives, in a late number, some interesting information from the interior of Africa. Balgat Areja, it seems, had made himself master, in December last, of Tigrai, where he had put an end to the plundering practices of a number of petty chiefs, who had known how to turn the disorders of the times to their advantage. Among other notorious characters, a certain Gobra Mariam, who, under the reign of Ubie, had allowed himself many excesses against the European residents, and particularly against the English missionaries, is represented "to have received the reward of his crimes." His hands and feet were cut off, and he survived this mutilation only a few hours.

Balgat Areja, mentioned above, is a descendant of the celebrated Ras Valeda Selasse, and was intrusted with the government of a large portion of Tigrai by Ubie, when the latter set out on his hostile expedition against the Ras. The descent of the governor, and a strict exercise of justice, which served at the same time to rid him of a number of his most dangerous rivals, made him extremely popular, so that he found it an easy matter to extend his authority over the whole of Tigrai.

The Coptic Abuna, the head of the Abyssinian Church, after a short residence in the country, has completely changed his system of conduct towards the Europeans. The pride and animosity with which he at first treated them has been succeeded by the most marked civility and condescension. He accompanied the Belgian consul, M. Blondel, a considerable distance, when the latter set off from Gondar, a thing unheard of in the country where the Abuna is looked on as the representative of Christ on earth. He allows the Europeans to sit by his side, a favour not enjoyed even by the Emperor of Gondar. A wish is, however, expressed, that the Abuna would moderate his too impetuous behaviour, which may else draw down upon him an untimely end, the customary fate, by-the-bye, of nearly all his predecessors, of whom very few have come to a natural death.

Speaking of the European travellers in Abyssinia, the writer says—"Nearly half of them have now returned to Egypt; M. Blondel, by the way of Sennaar; the French travellers Galinier and Ferret, and the Englishman Bell, over Massana. Among those who have remained, none enjoys more popularity than Wilhelm Schimper. All the accounts that reach us agree in stating that this indefatigable German naturalist is rendering the most important services to science and humanity. He has discovered a system of determining the altitude of a place by its botanical character. In the south of Abyssinia, i. e. in the kingdom of Shoa, the English mission is diligently at work. Two Bavarians are attached to it, a physician and a painter. The missionaries Krapf and Isenberg, together with a third, lately left this on their way thither. The return of Mr. Krapf from Shoa, through the country of Galla, belongs, in a geographical point of view, to the most interesting excursions undertaken of late years, his route having lain, for the greater part, through districts not supposed to have before been traversed by Europeans. He was robbed on his way, stripped to his shirt, and escaped death only by a secret flight undertaken barefooted, and almost in a state of nudity. His narrative when published will, no doubt, meet with great favour from the public, on account of the information he was enabled to obtain through his ultimate knowledge of the native languages, his correct judgment, and his freedom from prejudice."

The same letter says, that M. Fresnel, distinguished by his discovery of the New Himyarian language, and by several works of high merit in illustration of Arabic literature, had, a few days previously, left Cairo for Jedda, having been appointed French Consular agent at the latter place.—Pat.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MEMORIALS OF AFFGHANISTAN.

BY J. H. STOCQUELER.

ON the 15th of April, 1843, will be published, in one volume, the whole of the dispatches, narratives, state papers, &c. connected with the expedition to, and occupation of, Affghanistan, between the 1st of October, 1838, and the 1st October, 1842. These documents, arranged in chronological order, will be connected by a brief and succinct narrative of the operations in Affghanistan and Scinde, commencing with the assembly of the Army of the Indus at Ferozepore, and terminating with the evacuation of the former state after the restoration of the prisoners.

The object of this work is to present, at one view, the whole of the occurrences which have distinguished a most eventful period of British Indian History, and thus to facilitate the references of the student, the politician, and the soldier.

The work will be illustrated with sketches of remarkable places, striking incidents, portraits, costumes, &c. &c.

PRICE 20 RUPEES.

☞ Amongst the documents contained in this work will be found Lord Auckland's Proclamation, the despatches of Sir John Keane, General Wiltshire, General Sale, Sir Willoughby Cotton, General Pollock, General Nott, &c.; the narratives of Captain Outram's pursuit of Dost Mahomed; of Captain Gray's escape; of the destruction of the Goorkha Battalion; of Captain Ferris's escape from Pesh Bolak; of the disaster which befell Skinner's horse in the Bolan Pass; of Major Brown's defence of Kahun; of the defence of Kyelat-i-Ghilzie; of the rise and progress of the insurrection at Cabul; of the retreat from Cabul to Jellalabad, &c.; Lord Ellenborough's Proclamation, &c. &c.

AGENCY FOR THE RECEIPT AND TRANSMISSION OF PACKAGES BY THE MONTHLY STEAMERS TO AND FROM INDIA.

MR. THOMAS HILL, Agent at Southampton for the Oriental and Peninsular Steam Navigation Company, having opened an Office at that port for the purpose above-mentioned, begs to submit to the Indian public the rates and conditions upon which packages are received and forwarded. Mr. HILL feels assured, from the advantages of his position, that he will be enabled to afford the highest satisfaction to those who may honour his Agency with their support.

Bombay, Ceylon, Madras, and Calcutta.—For each parcel 5s. with 5 per cent. on the value (Assurance, Guarantee, &c.) and further 1s. for every lb. to the extent of 12lb.; for every lb. beyond 12lb., 10d. to the extent of 24lb.; for every lb. beyond 24lb., 8d. to the extent of 36lb.; and for every lb. beyond 36lb. 6d. to the extent of 50lb.

Packages despatched by T. HILL are forwarded through Egypt with the Mails, and under ordinary circumstances reach Bombay in 35 days; Ceylon 40; Madras 45; and Calcutta 48 days.

Letters of advice to be sent to T. HILL, or his Agents when a package is sent off to their address, stating contents and value.

Payment of charges is required to be made by Post or otherwise immediately the sender is apprised of the amount, otherwise the Package will be registered as unpaid and charged double, which must be paid before it can be delivered up or forwarded.

Dues and Duties in England, as well as in Egypt, will be paid by T. H. out of the above rates.

Packing in Tin, being absolutely necessary for the protection of Jewellery, Apparel, Books and Medicines from the Sea air, &c. the same will be done at Southampton and Calcutta free of charge.

A Declaration of true value must be sent in the absence of which no package can be registered.

A Receipt will be forwarded to the Owner as soon as the package comes to hand, which Receipt need not be sent out or home to claim the property.

Damage or Loss occasioned by the Act of God, the Queen's Enemies, Vermin, or fire, afloat or on land, and all other dangers of the Seas, Rivers, Steam, and Navigation whatsoever, agreed to be borne and made good.—T. HILL takes upon himself this additional responsibility in consequence of the frequent loss of property from some of the abovenamed causes, and knowing that it is seldom an individual thinks it worth the trouble and expense of opening a Policy for a small amount.

CAUTION.—T. H. will not be responsible in any way for a package containing a Letter, Bill of Exchange, Money, or any Liquid or dangerous substances; but will hold the sender responsible for any evil consequences proceeding from the same.

Agents in Calcutta, Messrs. JEPHSON & Co.

MONUMENT IN BOMBAY TO ALL THOSE WHO PERISHED IN SCINDE AND AFFGHANISTAN DURING THE LATE CAMPAIGNS.

A PROPOSAL having been set on foot to erect a Monument IN BOMBAY to the Memory of the Officers of Her Majesty's and the Honourable Company's services, who fell in Scinde and Affghanistan during the late Campaigns—a General Meeting of the Subscribers assembled in the Town Hall on the 25th ult.—The Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of Calcutta in the Chair,—when the following measures were resolved to be adopted:—

1.—To open the Subscription to the Public.

2.—To extend the memorial to ALL those, OFFICERS and MEN, who perished in Scinde and Affghanistan during the late Campaigns.

3.—To erect, as a GENERAL Monument, a Church on Colabah, in which should be placed a particular Monument, or Monuments, to perpetuate the names and services of every individual.

It is hoped that the character and beneficial objects of the Monument which is contemplated, will command it to the warm approbation of the Public; combining, as it does, permanence and protection to a most appropriate memorial, and commemorating, in a sacred building, the names of those, who, many of them, were deprived of the rites of Christian burial.

The Committee hope to erect monumental tablets for each regiment engaged, to bear the name of every commissioned officer, with the number of non-commissioned officers and privates, who perished in Scinde and Affghanistan; thus affording a lasting memorial of every individual sufferer: but, in cases where the friends of the deceased may desire to give a more particular token of their regard, it will be in their power to place any special monument they please.

A register of the names of every non-commissioned officer and private will be engrossed on vellum, and kept in the vestry of the church as a solemn record of the parties, to be open at all times to the inspection of the Public.

The proposed site (that of the present temporary building, which stands in need of immediate and extensive repair) has many advantages, being most conspicuously open to the view of every ship that enters the harbour, being within the lines of a European regiment, and adjacent to the depot of Queen's troops, by whom it is used as a Military Church. (It also affords accommodation to other residents of the Island, the majority of whom are servants of the Hon. Company in the several services.)

This noble Monument, at once National and Christian in its character, will keep constantly before their minds the estimation in which their fallen comrades were held, and the full and deep sympathy which will ever follow, even to the grave, such devoted obedience as they displayed.

Subscriptions are requested to be paid to the Bank of Bengal, to the account of the Affghan and Scinde Monument on Colabah.

GEORGE PIGOTT,
Secretary.

Colabah, April 5, 1843.

THE AFFGHAN CAMPAIGN OF 1842.

THE BLUE BOOK, of which we have received a copy, consists of five hundred and forty-seven public documents, and includes both the military despatches of our officers, and the instructions which were issued by the Executive Government. We are thus enabled to trace with a degree of confidence the impression created on the public Authorities by the successive developement of events, and the measures which were pursued by them during this critical period of our Indian History. The Book also affords us an opportunity of correcting some of the erroneous opinions which were current at the time and which were adopted, more or less, by the conductors of the press. In the notices we now offer, it will be our aim to discuss the subject with strict impartiality and without any reference to the representations we ourselves may have given on imperfect information. We must however premise, that many documents of no small importance to a right understanding of the subject have been omitted or withheld, and that we are still left in some instances to our own conjectures; but whether the suppressed documents would have been more favourable to Lord Auckland or to Lord Ellenborough, it is not for us to say.

The first intelligence of the insurrection reached Mr. Clerk on the 16th of November, and he ordered the three Regiments, which had been warned for service in Affghanistan, the 53d, the 60th, and the 64th to cross the Sutledge and proceed with all haste to Peshawur. Adverting to the request made by Capt. Mackeson that "the Brigade which had been warned for the Cabul Relief" should be urgently despatched, he did not request that it should be accompanied by cavalry or artillery; and he left it to the discretion of the Commander-in-Chief, then in the Western Provinces, to whom an express was sent on the 17th November, to decide on this important point. The orders issued by Sir Jasper Nicolls on the matter thus referred to him, are not published in the Blue Book, but the first Brigade marched without either cavalry or artillery. To the three Regiments enumerated above was added the 30th Native Infantry; and the four corps were concentrated at Peshawur by the end of December.

Information of the out-break reached the Governor General in Calcutta about the end of November. The first despatch which alludes to it, is dated the 2d December; and the only measure which it authorized in the emergency which had arisen was the concentration of an effective brigade at Peshawur; the commander of which was directed not to advance to Cabul, except "in view to an object of pressing and vital importance to the safety of the troops at that place." The next day, the 3d of December, intelligence from Cabul of the 9th of November, of a more disastrous character reached Calcutta on which Lord Auckland informed the Commander-in-Chief that it had not altered the views contained in the letter of the preceding day: that nothing more was to be effected than to complete one effective brigade at Peshawur, "so as to give succour to our troops in the event of their retiring." At the same time the Governor General stated that "in the extreme event of the Military possession of Cabul and the surrounding territory having been lost, it was not his intention to direct new and extensive operations for the re-establishment of our supremacy throughout Affghanistan." It thus appears that within one week after the Supreme Council had been informed of the insurrection, it was resolved to relinquish our connection with the countries beyond the Indus, and to retire "deliberately and under such arrangements as should leave some political influence in the country," but still to retire from it; and the commanding officers were directed to shape their proceedings with a view to carry these intentions into effect. Whatever merit or demerit therefore may be attached to the determination to abandon our supremacy in Affghanistan, belongs primarily to Lord Auckland's administration. It was evidently in reference to these despatches that Sir Robert Peel asked Lord John Russell, "Who contemplated the abandonment of Affghanistan? I could tell him."

In the letter of the 3d Dec. the Governor General declared himself opposed to the despatch of a second Brigade. But on the 5th, he wrote to the Commander-in-Chief to approve of the despatch of two Brigades, and to request that the command of the army of relief might be entrusted to General Lumley. On the same day a despatch was sent to Sir W. Macnaghten, which he never received, which alludes to the provision made by Government "for the contingency of our political influence in that quarter being for a time entirely subverted;" but the nature of this provision—the abandonment of Affghanistan—was not mentioned. At the same time the Envoy was informed of the efforts which have been made to send troops to Peshawur, and he was told that they would move according to the directions which he and General Elphinstone might issue. On the 26th November, Capt. Mackeson, in a letter from Peshawur, informed Mr. Maddock that intelligence had been received from Cabul of the 14th. and Jellalabad of the 21st, and that our troops were in a most critical position. From his letter Government appears for the first time to have been informed that the insurrection was universal; that "from whatever beginning it arose, it had become general throughout the country; and that the population had not stopped to enquire in favour of whom they were rising; it was sufficient that the object in view was to rid themselves of the Kafer yoke—to expel the Feringees from Affghanistan."

We have remarked that the first Brigade was sent on without the equipment of artillery. This fatal omission Mr. Clerk attempted subsequently to supply. On the 4th of December, that is seventeen days after the first Regiment had moved across the Sutledge, he wrote to Capt. Alexander, commanding the 3d Troop 2d Brigade of Horse Artillery, then on its way to Ferozepore, requiring him on this emergent occasion, to anticipate the sanction of the Commander-in-Chief, and cross the Sutledge immediately. On the 7th, Mr. Clerk received orders from his Excellency prohibiting the dispatch of that troop of Horse Artillery, and he therefore cancelled the instructions which he had sent to Capt. Alexander. From the Blue Book it would appear that Mr. Clerk bore this bitter disappointment with exemplary resignation.

The despatch from the Governor General of the 2d December already alluded to, reached the Commander-in-Chief on the 12th. In it Lord Auckland had desired that the first brigade should be made complete with a due proportion of artillery and cavalry. Sir Jasper, in his reply to this letter states, that the orders of the Governor General for the concentration of an effective brigade at Peshawur had been anticipated—but that neither artillery nor cavalry had been sent, because there was no probability of the want of the former; and it did not appear prudent to send on the 10th Cavalry. On the 20th the Governor General replied to this letter thanking His Excellency for the prompt and able manner in which the orders of Government had been executed; but regretting that more cavalry had not been sent—the number sent with the four Regiments was 100. It will be remembered that the Governor General on the 3d of December had written to the Commander-in-Chief to forbid the dispatch of a second Brigade. Sir Jasper's letter on the 13th, in acknowledging the receipt of it says, the injunction not to detach a second brigade, shall "be ever borne carefully in view.—I shall with great reluctance order the advance of H. M. 9th and the 26th N. I. ... but very strong doubts are entertained here whether the four native corps (already sent) can protect a considerable convoy through the Khyber." This letter from the Head of the army appears inexplicable, except upon the supposition that he disliked the war in Affghanistan, was anxious that the reverses we had experienced should induce Government to give up its hold on the country, and was altogether lukewarm about the dispatch of reinforcements. Such a supposition however we are not at liberty to entertain. As the object in sending forward the first four Regiments was to effect the relief of the beleaguered garrisons of Jellalabad and Cabul, if the Commander-in-Chief thought that they would be unable to accomplish this object, by protecting a large convoy through the Khyber, it might have been supposed that reinforcements would have been pushed on, not only without reluctance, but with cheerfulness.

At length, on the 4th of January, six weeks after the insurrection was known, the Queen's 9th and the Company's 26th, together with a Regiment of Cavalry, and Artillery were sent across the Sutledge—but the guns were sent without ammunition. Thus we find that the first four Regiments of relief were sent without guns—the last three with guns, and without ammunition. The Blue Book contains ample explanations of these deplorable omissions; but they were not the less culpable because an excuse was found for them. There is every reason to believe that if the first Brigade had started with a full equipment of Artillery and Cavalry, it would have reached Peshawur in the last week of December. Captain Mackeson affirms that the Khybur, though obstructed, was not at that time closed, as it subsequently was when our affairs appeared desperate; that a few douceurs would have opened a path for the troops; which might have been at Gundamuk by the 10th of January. The approach of such a force under the command of Sir Robert Sale could scarcely have failed to exercise a beneficial influence on the negotiations at Cabul; but even if it had not been in time to prevent the fatal retreat, it might have been instrumental in saving the lives of all those who perished at Jugdulluk and Gundamuk on the 12th and 13th January, among whom were included no less than forty-two officers. It is animating to speculate on the auspicious turn which affairs might have taken, if General Napier had commanded at Cabul; or, after the insurrection had become general, if Mr. George Clerk had been left to apply the resources of the state, unfettered, to the crisis which had arisen. In that case we should probably have had no Blue Book at all. We think the future historian of the campaign is likely to comment with little delicacy of language on the hesitation and reluctance with which these reinforcements were sent on. Neither will the narrow and inadequate view which was unhappily taken of the emergency at Head Quarters escape his observation; for when Brigadier Wild wrote on the 30th December from Peshawur, deeply regretting that no Artillery had been allowed to accompany his force, and stating that if a troop of Horse Artillery had been present, he might have advanced immediately, the reply was that Jellalabad was considered to be in a state of security! and that affairs at Cabul had much improved by a supply of provisions having been obtained, and that there was no pressing necessity for an advance attended with heavy risk! To dwell so emphatically as the letters in the Blue Book do, on the heavy risk of succouring British troops when exposed to almost certain destruction, is quite new in our military annals. But what will the future historian say to the extraordinary fact that the troops which left the banks of the Sutledge on the 17th November, did not reach Jellalabad before the 17th of April, five months after they had started?

On the 21st of January, Lord Auckland received information from Mr. Clerk that Sir W. Macnaghten had been assassinated by Akbar Khan; and a letter was addressed on the same day to the Commander-in-Chief by the Supreme Council, directing that a third Brigade should be held in readiness to move across the Punjab, and that it should comprise one European Regiment, a troop of Horse Artillery, and as large a body of Cavalry as could be spared. Within ten days after, intelligence reached Calcutta of the annihilation of the Cabul Army; and Government appears to have come immediately to the determination of withdrawing the troops from Jellalabad, and concentrating them at Peshawur. It was expected that General Pollock, with the 7000 men under his command, would be able to force the Khybur, and raise the siege of Jellalabad. The only immediate object left for General Pollock to accomplish, after the destruction of the Cabul force, was the salvation of that garrison. When this had been accomplished, it remained for Government to determine what ulterior measures should be adopted to recover our prisoners, and to vindicate our national honour. Lord Auckland expected to be relieved from his office within a month, and he appears to have deemed it prudent to leave the selection of those measures to his successor. It is true that the retirement from Jellalabad to Peshawur after General Sale's relief, which had been previously left optional with General Pollock, was now made peremptory; but this appears to have been dictated chiefly by military considerations, as Peshawur was supposed to be a much safer station for the troops; and it was manifestly Lord Auckland's intention to hold a strong position at that place, and to collect all the means and appliances necessary for another campaign, if such a step should have recommended itself to his successor. We can find no indication of his Lordship's determination to retire altogether—re infectâ—from the country. He speaks distinctly of preparing for any ulterior movement which might be thought proper by the Government here, or in England. Had the retirement on Peshawur been intended as a retirement within the Indus, Lord Auckland would scarcely have allowed the strong Brigade then marching across the Punjab, to have pursued its way. In the same letter to the Court of Directors, dated 19th February, in which these orders to General Pollock are recapitulated, Lord Auckland informs them that on the 10th of that month, he had issued instructions to General Nott in reference to his continuance at, or his withdrawal from Candahar, to act solely as might, to the best of his judgment, secure the paramount object of the safety of his troops, and uphold at the same time the honour of the British arms. These directions correspond with the Notification issued by the Governor General on hearing of the annihilation of the Cabul force—that "the most active measures had been adopted, and would be stedfastly prosecuted for expediting powerful reinforcements to the Affghan frontier, and for assisting such operations as may be required in that quarter for the maintenance of the honour, and interests of the British Government." The letter to Sir Jasper Nicolls of the 31st January after the disaster was known in Calcutta bears this construction. It says, "General Pollock will have a force of 12,000, a force which when assembled in concentrated strength, with due equipments and provisions, will be adequate to subdue all opposition to the movements it may be directed to undertake....If General Pollock, arriving with only General McCaskill's brigade, can safely maintain the position at Jellalabad, he will continue to do so; ... but rather than run any extreme risk in that position, the Governor General would wish the General to arrange for withdrawal from it and the assemblage of all his forces at or near Peshawur." We have the same sentiments expressed again on the 10th February: "General Pollock should confine himself to withdrawing the Jellalabad Garrison to Peshawur and there for the present holding together all the troops in a secure position." In the last letter written during Lord Auckland's administration, the same intention appears to be predominant, that of withdrawing the garrison of Jellalabad to Peshawur, and there waiting the progress of events. At the same time the General was informed that the Governor General did not contemplate any great effort, in the present season, for the re-occupation of Affghanistan. The only passage which appears to disturb this impression of the views of Lord Auckland, is contained in a letter to Mr. Clerk of the 10th February and which runs thus: "If, at the same time, it should be your deliberate opinion that the important and vital interests of the British Government in India, and the well being of the British and Seikh states urgently require that the measure of withdrawing our troops from Peshawur, or at least farther eastward than some point on the left bank of the Indus should be suspended,"—which seems to intimate that some orders for retiring from Peshawur had been issued. But this view of the case has not only no support from any other portion of the documents; but is diametrically opposed to the tenor of all the other despatches. At the same time it is evident that Lord Auckland's first impulse on receiving news of the insurrection was to abandon Affghanistan; and that as our disasters multiplied his unwillingness to re-enter the country increased. We are ready to admit that we were not previously aware of the extent to which his anxiety for the withdrawal of our troops had been carried.

Having thus extracted from the Blue Book those passages which represent Lord Auckland's views of the measures proper for the existing crisis, we turn to those of his successor. But before we enter upon Lord Ellenborough's administration, we must acquit ourselves of an act of justice towards a public servant, who, belonging as he does to the same branch of the service with Clive, strongly recals to our remembrance the political genius of that eminent statesman. We allude of course to Mr. George Clerk. On hearing of the tragedy of Cabul, he proceeded in person to the Commander-in-Chief's Camp, and urged on him [No. 147] the necessity of holding our ground at Jellalabad against any Affghan power or force, with the view of retrieving our position at Cabul, by advancing upon it at the fit season, simultaneously from Candahar and Jellalabad. He advised that after having thus regained our position and the influence which such proof of power must give, not only in Affghanistan, but amongst all the neighbouring states, we should then withdraw with dignity and undiminished honour." His Excellency admitted the undeniable force of these arguments, but added "I am greatly inclined to doubt that we have at present either army or funds sufficient to renew this contest. Money may perhaps be obtainable but soldiers are not, without leaving India bare." Yet, after six months of indecision, the Government of India, followed precisely the path chalked out by Mr. Clerk, and retired from Affghanistan with dignity and with augmented honour; and—strange to say,—troops were found for this expedition, without leaving India bare. As soon as there was a heart to renew the contest, and re-establish our honour, it was discovered that there were quite troops enough for the undertaking.

The sentiments of Lord Ellenborough during the past year in reference to the war, belong to three distinct periods, and however his Lordship may suppose that they never underwent any alteration, yet, to every other individual it must be evident that his measures at each of these successive periods exhibited, not a circumstantial variety but a substantial change, of views. The three periods may be dated respectively from the 15th of March, the 19th of April, and the 4th of July. On the 15th of March Lord Ellenborough, in conjunction with the members of Council, thought it convenient to explain to Commander-in-Chief the deliberate views which were entertained respecting the measures to be pursued in Affghanistan, under the new administration which had then commenced. His Lordship fully adopted the views of his predecessor with regard to the continued possession of Affghanistan, which he felt would be a source of weakness rather than of strength; but in reference to the recovery of our prisoners and our reputation the despatch contains these remarkable expressions: "Whatever course we may hereafter take, must rest solely on military considerations, and have, in the first instance, regard to the safety of the detached bodies of our troops at Jellalabad, at Ghuzni, at Kelat-i-Ghilzee, and Candahar, to the security of our troops now in the field from all unnecessary risk, and finally to the re-establishment of our military reputation by the infliction of some signal and decisive blow upon the Affghans, which may make it appear to them, to our own subjects, and to our allies, that we have the power of inflicting punishment on those who commit atrocities, and violate their faith, and that we withdraw ultimately from Affghanistan, not from any deficiency of means to maintain our position, but because we are satisfied that the King we have set up, has not, as we were erroneously led to imagine, the support of the nation over which he has been placed." There has been no little discussion regarding the paternity of this advice, and some have gone so far as to attribute it to the Duke of Wellington, but a comparison of dates will shew the impossibility of this conjecture. At the time it was written no letters had been received in India from London of a later date than the first week of January, at which time the Duke could scarcely have heard of the murder of Sir Alexander Burnes. The letter evidently embodies the sentiments of the Council, and the style affords the strongest evidence that it was composed by Mr. Maddock.

The Commander-in-Chief on receiving the letter of the 15th of March, immediately pointed out to the Governor General that General Pollock might be bewildered by the conflicting opinions of the Supreme Council, in as much as he had been instructed on the 15th of February "to direct all his measures and efforts to the withdrawal of Sir R. Sale's force from Jellalabad to Peshawur, with the least possible delay," whereas in the letter of the 15th of March he was urged "to strike some signal and decisive blow upon the Affghans, with a view to the re-establishment of our military reputation;" adding that by the ninth paragraph he would consider himself at liberty to choose the place and time at which such effort was to be made, even to an advance on Cabul. He enquired of Lord Ellenborough which course the General was to follow. His Lordship lost not a day in replying, "that the instructions contained in the letter from him in Council of the 15th March, necessarily superseded the previous instructions of the 15th February in every instance in which they might clash." Nothing therefore can be more evident than that up to the 12th April, the day on which this reply was written, Lord Ellenborough continued of opinion that the re-establishment of our military reputation in Affghanistan was an object of paramount importance.

But within a week a change came over Lord Ellenborough's feelings. He had now proceeded up the country. He had heard successively of the repulse of Col. Wild, and of the fall of Ghuzni, and though on the 19th of April, the commencement of the second period, his Lordship had received intelligence that General Pollock had forced the Khyber Pass, he had at the same time been informed of the check which General England had experienced at Hykulzie, and of his having subsequently fallen back on Quetta and fortified that post, under the impression that it was impossible for him to reach Candahar. The Governor General was evidently filled with deep consternation by this intelligence, and began to despair of eventual success. He wrote three successive letters to the Commander-in-Chief on the same day, the 19th April; the first to inform him that the fall of Ghuzni had removed the chief object of General Nott's continued occupation of Candahar, and that the repulse which Brigadier England had experienced at Hykulzie, had induced him to order General Nott to abandon Candahar, and retire to the Indus, at the earliest practicable moment. The second letter threw out a hint that General Pollock having forced the Khyber, and probably relieved Sir Robert Sale, might also be ordered to fall back on Peshawur. In the third letter he expresses a doubt whether it would be justifiable again to push on General Pollock's force for no other object than that of avenging our losses, and of re-establishing in all its original brilliancy our military character. Sir Jasper was at the same time requested to give directions to General Pollock suitable to the new views which the Governor General had adopted; and Mr. Maddock was directed to write to General Nott ordering him to withdraw the garrison from Kelat-i-Ghilzie, to abandon Candahar and move down to the Indus. To this order General Nott replied on the 21st of May in terms of which the meaning could not be mistaken: "I shall make all necessary arrangements for carrying into effect the orders I have received.... I know that it is my duty and their duty—that of the Political Agents—implicitly and zealously to carry into effect every order received, without enquiring into the reasons for the measures adopted, whatever our own opinions or wishes may be." The order to retire from Candahar, which was made peremptory, necessarily decided the question whether General Pollock should advance or not; because he could not have advanced on Cabul without General Nott's aid. We may therefore consider the 19th of April as the day on which his Lordship relinquished the idea of re-establishing in all its brilliancy our military character in Affghanistan, and resolved that both armies should retire within our own territories. This determination was adopted at a time when there was little hope of the liberation of our prisoners, and before Lord Ellenborough had heard of General Sale's victory at Jellalabad. On the 21st of April his Lordship received intelligence of that victory and issued the Notification which electrified India. On the 22d of April he wrote to the Court of Directors to announce the triumph of Jellalabad—and also sent copies of the instructions which he had issued to Generals Nott and Pollock to retire to India at the earliest practicable period.

The three letters of the 19th appear to have reached the Commander-in-Chief on the 27th of April, and his Excellency stated in reply that he had not ventured to give any instructions to General Pollock; but that the orders of the 15th of March "must now guide him;"—though they had been so completely superseded by the contrary orders of the 19th of April: The reason given for this rather anomalous proceeding was, that General Pollock was "a clear headed good officer." But His Excellency thought better of the matter two days after, and resolved to embody the views of the Governor General in a letter from himself, in which he told the General that as Shah Soojah was dead, Ghuzni lost, and General Nott had been ordered to retire to the Indus, he was also to retire to Peshawur. He was directed not to wait for the prisoners, unless a negotiation for their release had been brought to such a point that its happy accomplishment might be risked by withdrawing—in other words, that if there was no treaty for their deliverance on the eve of being completed, they were to be left to their fate. "The hostages at Cabul," says His Excellency, "cannot, I think, be saved by any treaty or agreement made under existing circumstances at Jellalabad"—so you are not to loiter for them. The Governor General, on receiving the Commander-in-Chief's first letter, in which he had declined issuing any instructions to General Pollock, but preferred leaving that clear headed officer to interpret Lord Ellenborough's wishes of the 19th of April by his orders of the 15th of March, very wisely sat down to pen his own orders to General Pollock; and he informed him that the death of Shah Soojah, and the success which had attended our arms at Jellalabad and in the Khyber, rendered it more easy to withdraw the troops. "The first object of the Governor General's anxiety has ever been to withdraw, with honour, into positions of security the several corps of the army which he found scattered and surrounded in Affghanistan; and that object might now be accomplished as respected General Pollock's army."

When General Nott obtained intelligence of the determination made by Lord Auckland to withdraw General Pollock's force from Jellalabad to Peshawur, he wrote to Mr. Maddock on the 24th March deprecating this movement in the most emphatic language. His letter, No. 291, is one of the finest in the whole collection. Its style differs so essentially from the short and abrupt style of his subsequent dispatches, as to create a feeling of surprize that the same individual should adopt so different a mode of writing at different periods. Soon after the dispatch of this letter, General Nott heard that General England had been repulsed at Hykulzie, that he had retreated to Quetta, and had begun to fortify that position, apparently without the smallest intention of moving on to Candahar; and he wrote him that memorable letter of the 18th of April, which is unquestionably the most valuable of the collection, because upon it and on its results, turned the whole of our succeeding efforts, which have been crowned with such extraordinary success. We give it almost entire:

"I think it absolutely necessary that a strong brigade of 2,500 men should be immediately pushed from Quetta to Candahar, with the supplies noted in the foregoing paragraph. I, therefore, have to acquaint you, that I will direct a brigade of three regiments of infantry, a troop of horse artillery, with a body of cavalry, to march from Candahar on the morning of the 25th instant. This force will certainly be at Chummun, at the northern foot of the Kojuck, on the morning of the 1st of May, and possibly on the 30th of this month. I shall, therefore, fully rely on your marching a brigade from Quetta, so that it may reach the southern side of the pass on the above-mentioned date. I believe there can be no difficulty whatever in accomplishing this, nor of crossing the Kojuck without loss, provided the heights are properly crowned on either side. I have crossed it three times in command of troops, and

I know that what I now state is correct. There can be no danger in passing through Pisheen, provided a careful and well-ordered march is preserved, and patroles and flanking-parties of horse are thrown well out. The people of this country cannot withstand our troops in the open field. I am well aware that war cannot be made without loss, but I yet hope that British troops can oppose Asiatic armies without defeat; and I feel and know that British officers should never despair of punishing the atrocious and treacherous conduct of a brutal enemy. You say that you are "not aware if you know the localities of Quetta:" I know them well and I hope I shall be excused when I express my surprise that the authorities of Quetta should for a moment have thought of throwing up breastworks, and intrenching that straggling and wretched cantonment, when the town and citadel is so well calculated for every purpose which can render a post at all desirable in Shawl, and I am quite certain may be well defended by 500 men. Did I command at Quetta, I would relinquish the cantonment; it is useless. Quetta is not a place for a large body of troops. I feel obliged to you for pointing out the many difficulties attending our position, but you are well aware that it is our first and only duty to overcome difficulties, when the national honour and our military reputation are so deeply concerned. Nothing can be accomplished without effort and perseverance. In reply to the last paragraph of your letter of the 10th instant, I have only to observe, that I have not yet contemplated falling back; without money I can neither pay the long arrears due to the troops, nor procure carriage for field operations. I deeply regret this state of things, which ought to have been attended to months ago; had this been done, I should now have been on my march to Ghuznee. I shall fully rely on your brigade being at the Kojuck on the 1st of May or before. This letter I request may be forwarded to Major Outram."

Well might the brave Major Outram on the perusal of this letter write to the Governor General's Private Secretary to say that it was "the most refreshing draft he had quaffed since our reverses commenced, as giving the best possible assurance that General Nott was equal to the powers vested in him." Had General England not advanced to Candahar, Lord Ellenborough could not have moved on to Cabul; and had not General Nott, in the exercise of that supreme political power with which he had been invested, peremptorily ordered that officer to bring up his troops and his convoy to the Kojuck pass on a particular day, it is possible that General England might have continued in his entrenchments at Quetta till the whole of General Nott's force had fallen back on it. This letter is therefore the most important, as it is also the most animating which was written after our disasters had commenced. When it was laid before the Governor General, however, Mr. Maddock was directed to write to the General to say that his Lordship's views were unaltered, that he must retire upon the Indus, but that he might wait till October, as it seemed impossible for him to retire earlier. General Pollock having also represented the impossibility of his withdrawing at that time to Peshawur, was permitted to defer his retrograde movement till October. On the 14th May, the Governor General wrote to the Commander-in-Chief to say, that neither Generals Nott and Pollock could retire from Affghanistan before October; and that he had hitherto succeeded in "preserving absolute secrecy with respect to his intentions of withdrawal; that he had done so by unusual means, but that it appeared to him essential to the public interests that entire secrecy on this point should be observed." But the Governor General was deceived as to his success in preserving absolute secrecy. An officer on Sir Jasper Nicolls's staff sent intelligence of the order to withdraw to Jellalabad; the officers betted at their mess, before the native servants, as to the probable date of the retrograde movement, and within a month it was known all over India, and commented on with appropriate indignation.

We have previously remarked that Lord Auckland's orders to retire, which were sent to General Pollock, restricted his withdrawal to Peshawur, where it was intended to concentrate a large force, to be prepared for those ulterior movements which his successor, or the Ministry at home might direct. Lord Ellenborough's orders to retire are couched in general terms. The Generals are directed to place themselves in safe and easy communication with India. This might create a doubt whether his Lordship really intended to retire within our own territories, which must of course have been tantamount to the absolute abandonment of Affghanistan. But this doubt is removed, by the orders issued in one letter to General Nott to retire to Sukkur on the Indus, while those given to General Pollock are thus explained in the 69th paragraph of the very long letter which Lord Ellenborough wrote on the 8th of June to the Secret Committee at home: "On the 23d ultimo, the requisite instructions were issued for a despatch of ten lakhs of treasure to Major General Pollock to enable him to meet any difficulties in procuring carriage and supplies, in the present disorganized state of the Seikh army, in his rear; and in addressing the Commander-in-Chief on the subject I reiterated my earnest desire for the speedy return of General Pollock's army to the Sutledge. It appears that the withdrawal from Affghanistan, the intelligence of which the Governor General had endeavored hermetically to seal was intended to bring back the army at once to our own territories; and that the ten lakhs sent on were intended to purchase cattle for this retrograde movement to the Sutlege. The Commander-in-Chief's letter to General Pollock of the 28th May is also written under the impression that the troops were absolutely to retire to India; it alludes to the arrangements which had been made to render them more comfortable after they had crossed the Indus; and states that elephants and bearers would be assembled at Ferozepore.

On the 1st of June, Mr. Maddock wrote to General Pollock to express Lord Ellenborough's regret on learning that he could not retire immediately after having forced the Khyber, as it would have had the appearance of a military operation successfully accomplished and even triumphantly achieved, while the retirement of the army after six months of inaction would have a different and less advantageous character; but as he was compelled to remain till October, it was hoped he would be enabled to draw the enemy into a position in which he might strike a decisive blow. The General was also told that he has no political duties; that his business was in fact to do as much damage to the enemy as possible, and to come away as quickly as he could. That no doubt might be left on the mind that the Governor General's object was to withdraw General Pollock's army at the earliest practicable moment to India, Mr. Maddock on the 4th of June wrote to Mr. Clerk, not only to collect cattle for the army, but to prepare boats of sufficient number and ample size for passing the rivers of the Punjab; and to make arrangements for provisioning the army in its progress through that country.

But all these views of retirement were suddenly changed on the memorable 4th of July, the commencement of the third period. General Pollock had been allowed for the convenience of his troops, to advance a portion of them a march or two towards Cabul. On the 4th of July Mr. Maddock was instructed to write to General Nott, to explain to him the reason of this movement in advance lest he should be misled into the belief that it indicated any change in the main object of the instructions previously given him to retire. The Secretary was also instructed at the same time to write to General Pollock, to say that "no change had from the first taken place in the Governor General's views of the expediency of withdrawing his army at the earliest period consistent with the health and efficiency of the troops, that is, as now understood, in the beginning of October." The same post conveyed to both Generals orders diametrically opposed to the instructions contained in Mr. Maddock's letters. On that very day Lord Ellenborough himself wrote a letter to General Nott, to say that he had now for the first time reason to suppose that the General had the means of moving a large proportion of his army, and that the improved position of that army with sufficient means of carriage to move in Affghanistan induced his Lordship to leave to his option the line by which he should withdraw his troops. The letter proceeded to state that, in the direction of Quetta and Sukkur there would be no enemy to oppose him; but that in the other route there would be found difficulty, danger, and—glory. It contained these remarkable expressions, which shew how complete was the change which had come over the mind of Lord Ellenborough: "I do not undervalue the aid which our Government in India would receive from the successful execution by your army of a march through Ghuzni and Cabul, over the scenes of our late disasters. I know all the effect which it would have upon the minds of our soldiers, of our allies, of our enemies in Asia, and of our countrymen, and of all foreign nations in Europe. It is an object of just ambition, which no one more than myself would rejoice to see effected; but I see that failure in the attempt is certain and irretrievable ruin; and I would endeavour to inspire you with the necessary caution, and make you feel that great as are the objects to be attained by success, the risk is great also." His Lordship however does not seem to have entertained the smallest doubt of the course which General Nott would pursue, the moment his hands were loosed; and he proceeds to make arrangements under the impression that the General would inevitably choose to 'withdraw by way of Ghuzni and Cabul.' Indeed from the moment the option to advance was given to General Nott, the Governor General evidently considered that advance as certain as though it had been peremptorily put in orders: and he proceeded to say, "You will bring away with you from the tomb of Mahomed of Ghuzni, his club which hangs over it, and you will bring away the gates of his tomb, which are the gates of the temple of Somnath. These will be the just trophies of your successful march. —You will not fail to disguise your intention of moving, and to acquaint General Pollock with your plans, as soon as you have formed them." "This letter," says the Governor General, "remains absolutely secret;"—and Mr. Maddock himself, it seems, was allowed to know nothing of its having been despatched till this new order was echoed back from Candahar and Jellalabad. On the 23d of July the Governor General wrote to General Pollock to say that he expected General Nott would be in possession of the letter of the 4th on that day; and that it was expected that he would feel himself sufficiently strong, and be sufficiently provided with carriage, to be able to march on Ghuzni and Cabul. His Lordship went on to say, "the object of the combined march of your army and General Nott's upon Cabul will be to exhibit our strength where we suffered defeat; to inflict just but not vindictive retribution upon the Affghans, and to recover the guns and colours as well as the prisoners lost by our army."

It appears, therefore, that this new resolution to march on Ghuzni and Cabul with a view to retrieve our honour to recover our guns and colours, and to release our prisoners was taken on the 4th of July. Lord Ellenborough, it is true, continued to affirm that no change had come over his views; and that he was only carrying out his original intentions. But if his Lordship succeeded in blinding his own eyes to the truth—of which we have some doubt,—he certainly blinded those of no one else. No man was so stupid as not to perceive the difference between General Nott's retiring upon Sukkur, in which direction there was no enemy, and his advancing to the reconquest of Ghuzni and Cabul. Every one else could feel that General Nott's inglorious retreat to the Indus was not the same thing as his triumphant advance to the Capital. Lord Ellenborough might consider that advancing was synonimous with retiring, but it only required a reference to the Dictionary to shew that his Lordship was in the wrong. After all, it was a clumsy contrivance for getting out of the scrape into which the Governor General had fallen by the panic order of the 19th April; and it would certainly have been more beneficial to his reputation, to have avowed at once that circumstances had induced him to change his plans; and that instead of retreating without honour, he intended to restore our reputation in Central Asia before we withdraw from Affghanistan.

But what induced his Lordship to alter his determination, and to "retire by way of Ghuzni and Cabul?" The letter of the 4th July would lead one to suppose that it was occasioned solely by the announcement, that the 3000 camels which he had ordered for the retreat had safely reached Candahar. It is but justice to his Lordship to remove the suspicion that so weighty and important a measure did not originate in so inadequate a cause. The real reason creeps out accidentally in the letter sent to the Court of Directors on the 16th August, which announces this change of views in language marked by extreme caution. This letter to the Court, written six weeks after the option had been given to General Nott to advance on Ghuzni, and after he had been ordered to bring away the club and the gates, appears to have been the first intimation given to the Directors of this important movement. The third paragraph runs in the usual strain: "I adhere to my original intention of withdrawing the whole army from Affghanistan, and I have repeated in the most emphatic manner the order before given for withdrawal." The next paragraph announces the change: "Some risk I deem it justifiable to incur for the recovery of the guns and of the prisoners and with the view of exhibiting the triumphant march of a British army over the ground on which we have suffered defeat"—but "I should never forgive myself if I exposed that army to any material and serious danger, for the possible accomplishment of any object now to be obtained in Affghanistan." Then comes the cause of the movement: "my hope and expectations are that, without incurring such danger, I shall effect, through the instructions I have given, every object now desired by the people of England." It must not be forgotten that the full details of the Cabul Tragedy reached England in the beginning of April; and that the papers of that month, which described the ardor of the people of England for the recovery of our national reputation, reached Lord Ellenborough towards the end of June. The despatches which he received from the Ministry doubtless breathed the same spirit. The sentiments of the community in India were unanimous for an advance. The order to withdraw had no support but in the columns of the Bombay Times and the Hurkaru; and his Lordship wisely embraced the first decent opportunity—and it was afforded by the intelligence that three thousand camels had reached Candahar—to cancel that offensive order, and to revert to the only line of policy, in which honour and safety were to be found.

After Lord Ellenborough had recovered his spirits and his resolution, and determined to re-establish our national reputation on the scenes in which it had suffered an eclipse, his letters and actions exhibit the utmost vigor. Thus in writing to General Pollock,—before he had learned that General Nott had resolved to advance—he says, "It appears to me far better, and more honourable to our arms that this movement on Cabul should be continued, than that even on the actual delivery of the guns, colours, trophies, and prisoners, it should be countermanded." In writing to the Court of Directors on the 17th of August, he says, "I have told the Major General, that when every gun and colour and Military trophy in the hands of the Affghans, and every prisoner within the reach and power of the de facto Government of Cabool have been surrendered to him, and not till then, he may give orders suited to a state of returning peace." The most arduous efforts were made to send cattle to General Pollock's Army. It is true that they arrived at Jellalabad after the General had proceeded with his Army to Cabul, and were therefore of no service in furthering his advance. It is quite true that the sixteen thousand head of cattle, the mention of which by Sir Robert Peel called forth such deafening cheers in the House of Commons, assisted the army only on its return; but after the 4th of July, there was no lukewarmness, no hesitation, no pusillanimity. The Governor General had passed from the extreme of despondency to the extreme of enthusiasm; and did all in his power by ten weeks of activity to repair the mischief occasioned by ten weeks of inaction. Notwithstanding the vote of the House of Commons, however, it is a fact that the success of that brilliant expedition which re-established our supremacy in Asia was owing to the exertions made under Lord Auckland's administration, and that no addition was made to the means of action under the reign of his successor, save and except the three thousand Camels which Major Outram had procured, and the cattle which General Pollock was able to purchase for his retreat. It will be readily admitted that there appears a degree of faint heartedness in the despatches of Lord Auckland after he had been stunned by the news of the outbreak, and that the troops sent on under Generals Pollock and England were designed to prevent additional disasters rather than to retrieve our lost honour. There is evidently more to be known of the resolutions taken in Calcutta at that period than the Blue Book discloses. While the Governor General continues with his Council, his measures are in some measure controlled or modified by the opinions of his colleagues; and we have yet to learn what portion of the credit of Lord Auckland's dispatches, and of the letter of Lord Ellenborough on the 15th of March, is due to the magnanimity and firmness of the other members of the Supreme Council. But, as far as we are admitted into the secrets of the year by the Blue Book it appears that the credit of having applied the resources of the British empire successfully to the recovery of our national reputation, belongs with more truth to the period of Lord Auckland's than of Lord Ellenborough's administration. At the most important period of the year, from the 19th of April to the 4th July, Lord Ellenborough did nothing,—and worse than nothing. Admitting that the repulse of General England, coming so thick upon the intelligence that the advance of our troops had been checked in the Khyber, and that Ghuzni had fallen, created a panic in his mind, under the influence of which he thought the salvation of India depended on our getting out of the country; yet when his Lordship was informed in the last week of May, that General England had safely reached Candahar and that General Nott's force was now equipped for any service, the order to advance ought not to have been delayed for a moment; and it is much to be questioned whether the deliberate, and not accidental, loss of those golden weeks, is not deserving of more censure than the subsequent exertions, in sending cattle, which met the General on their return, are deserving of praise.

We have many apologies to offer our readers for the extraordinary length to which this article has extended; but we trust that the importance of presenting an uninterrupted review of the Blue Book, combined with the great interest of the subject, will plead some excuse for our having devoted this number almost exclusively to it.

MEETING IN HONOUR OF THE LATE SIR WILLIAM MACNAGHTEN.—The report of the meeting convened last Tuesday week in honour of the late Sir W. Macnaghten reached us too late to admit of more than a brief notice of its proceedings. We were not a little disappointed at the report. In the first place it was opened by the Chairman with only "a few words," instead of an animating address, which would have given the tone to the meeting. We have learned incidentally that another gentleman had been selected to preside on the occasion, from whom an appropriate introduction was expected, and that he was prevented from attending by another engagement. The Rev. Mr. Fisher was then called to the chair, but as he was not prepared for the duties thus unexpectedly cast on him, his address was necessarily brief and meagre. In the next place, only a single address was delivered on the occasion, though the meeting was attended by many of the friends and admirers of the deceased, who were fully competent to describe the excellencies of his private character and the talent displayed in his public conduct. In the third place, the address of Mr. Rattray, though highly appropriate as far

I know that what I now state is correct. There can be no danger in passing through Pisheen, provided a careful and well-ordered march is preserved, and patroles and flanking-parties of horse are thrown well out. The people of this country cannot withstand our troops in the open field. I am well aware that war cannot be made without loss, but I yet hope that British troops can oppose Asiatic armies without defeat; and I feel and know that British officers should never despair of punishing the atrocious and treacherous conduct of a brutal enemy. You say that you are "not aware if you know the localities of Quetta:" I know them well and I hope I shall be excused when I express my surprise that the authorities of Quetta should for a moment have thought of throwing up breastworks, and intrenching that straggling and wretched cantonment, when the town and citadel is so well calculated for every purpose which can render a post at all desirable in Shawl, and I am quite certain may be well defended by 500 men. Did I command at Quetta, I would relinquish the cantonment; it is useless. Quetta is not a place for a large body of troops. I feel obliged to you for pointing out the many difficulties attending our position, but you are well aware that it is our first and only duty to overcome difficulties, when the national honour and our military reputation are so deeply concerned. Nothing can be accomplished without effort and perseverance. In reply to the last paragraph of your letter of the 10th instant, I have only to observe, that I have not yet contemplated falling back; without money I can neither pay the long arrears due to the troops, nor procure carriage for field operations. I deeply regret this state of things, which ought to have been attended to months ago; had this been done, I should now have been on my march to Ghuznee. I shall fully rely on your brigade being at the Kojuck on the 1st of May or before. This letter I request may be forwarded to Major Outram."

Well might the brave Major Outram on the perusal of this letter write to the Governor General's Private Secretary to say that it was "the most refreshing draft he had quaffed since our reverses commenced, as giving the best possible assurance that General Nott was equal to the powers vested in him." Had General England not advanced to Candahar, Lord Ellenborough could not have moved on to Cabul; and had not General Nott, in the exercise of that supreme political power with which he had been invested, peremptorily ordered that officer to bring up his troops and his convoy to the Kojuck pass on a particular day, it is possible that General England might have continued in his entrenchments at Quetta till the whole of General Nott's force had fallen back on it. This letter is therefore the most important, as it is also the most animating which was written after our disasters had commenced. When it was laid before the Governor General, however, Mr. Maddock was directed to write to the General to say that his Lordship's views were unaltered, that he must retire upon the Indus, but that he might wait till October, as it seemed impossible for him to retire earlier. General Pollock having also represented the impossibility of his withdrawing at that time to Peshawur, was permitted to defer his retrograde movement till October. On the 14th May, the Governor General wrote to the Commander-in-Chief to say, that neither Generals Nott and Pollock could retire from Affghanistan before October; and that he had hitherto succeeded in "preserving absolute secrecy with respect to his intentions of withdrawal; that he had done so by unusual means, but that it appeared to him essential to the public interests that entire secrecy on this point should be observed." But the Governor General was deceived as to his success in preserving absolute secrecy. An officer on Sir Jasper Nicolls's staff sent intelligence of the order to withdraw to Jellalabad; the officers betted at their mess, before the native servants, as to the probable date of the retrograde movement, and within a month it was known all over India, and commented on with appropriate indignation.

We have previously remarked that Lord Auckland's orders to retire, which were sent to General Pollock, restricted his withdrawal to Peshawur, where it was intended to concentrate a large force, to be prepared for those ulterior movements which his successor, or the Ministry at home might direct. Lord Ellenborough's orders to retire are couched in general terms. The Generals are directed to place themselves in safe and easy communication with India. This might create a doubt whether his Lordship really intended to retire within our own territories, which must of course have been tantamount to the absolute abandonment of Affghanistan. But this doubt is removed, by the orders issued in one letter to General Nott to retire to Sukkur on the Indus, while those given to General Pollock are thus explained in the 69th paragraph of the very long letter which Lord Ellenborough wrote on the 8th of June to the Secret Committee at home: "On the 23d ultimo, the requisite instructions were issued for a despatch of ten lakhs of treasure to Major General Pollock to enable him to meet any difficulties in procuring carriage and supplies, in the present disorganized state of the Seikh army, in his rear; and in addressing the Commander-in-Chief on the subject I reiterated my earnest desire for the speedy return of General Pollock's army to the Sutledge. It appears that the withdrawal from Affghanistan, the intelligence of which the Governor General had endeavored hermetically to seal was intended to bring back the army at once to our own territories; and that the ten lakhs sent on were intended to purchase cattle for this retrograde movement to the Sutlege. The Commander-in-Chief's letter to General Pollock of the 28th May is also written under the impression that the troops were absolutely to retire to India; it alludes to the arrangements which had been made to render them more comfortable after they had crossed the Indus; and states that elephants and bearers would be assembled at Ferozepore.

On the 1st of June, Mr. Maddock wrote to General Pollock to express Lord Ellenborough's regret on learning that he could not retire immediately after having forced the Khyber, as it would have had the appearance of a military operation successfully accomplished and even triumphantly achieved, while the retirement of the army after six months of inaction would have a different and less advantageous character; but as he was compelled to remain till October, it was hoped he would be enabled to draw the enemy into a position in which he might strike a decisive blow. The General was also told that he has no political duties; that his business was in fact to do as much damage to the enemy as possible, and to come away as quickly as he could. That no doubt might be left on the mind that the Governor General's object was to withdraw General Pollock's army at the earliest practicable moment to India, Mr. Maddock on the 4th of June wrote to Mr. Clerk, not only to collect cattle for the army, but to prepare boats of sufficient number and ample size for passing the rivers of the Punjab; and to make arrangements for provisioning the army in its progress through that country.

But all these views of retirement were suddenly changed on the memorable 4th of July, the commencement of the third period. General Pollock had been allowed for the convenience of his troops, to advance a portion of them a march or two towards Cabul. On the 4th of July Mr. Maddock was instructed to write to General Nott, to explain to him the reason of this movement in advance lest he should be misled into the belief that it indicated any change in the main object of the instructions previously given him to retire. The Secretary was also instructed at the same time to write to General Pollock, to say that "no change had from the first taken place in the Governor General's views of the expediency of withdrawing his army at the earliest period consistent with the health and efficiency of the troops, that is, as now understood, in the beginning of October." The same post conveyed to both Generals orders diametrically opposed to the instructions contained in Mr. Maddock's letters. On that very day Lord Ellenborough himself wrote a letter to General Nott, to say that he had now for the first time reason to suppose that the General had the means of moving a large proportion of his army, and that the improved position of that army with sufficient means of carriage to move in Affghanistan induced his Lordship to leave to his option the line by which he should withdraw his troops. The letter proceeded to state that, in the direction of Quetta and Sukkur there would be no enemy to oppose him; but that in the other route there would be found difficulty, danger, and—glory. It contained these remarkable expressions, which shew how complete was the change which had come over the mind of Lord Ellenborough: "I do not undervalue the aid which our Government in India would receive from the successful execution by your army of a march through Ghuzni and Cabul, over the scenes of our late disasters. I know all the effect which it would have upon the minds of our soldiers, of our allies, of our enemies in Asia, and of our countrymen, and of all foreign nations in Europe. It is an object of just ambition, which no one more than myself would rejoice to see effected; but I see that failure in the attempt is certain and irretrievable ruin; and I would endeavour to inspire you with the necessary caution, and make you feel that great as are the objects to be attained by success, the risk is great also." His Lordship however does not seem to have entertained the smallest doubt of the course which General Nott would pursue, the moment his hands were loosed; and he proceeds to make arrangements under the impression that the General would inevitably choose to 'withdraw by way of Ghuzni and Cabul.' Indeed from the moment the option to advance was given to General Nott, the Governor General evidently considered that advance as certain as though it had been peremptorily put in orders; and he proceeded to say, "You will bring away with you from the tomb of Mahomed of Ghuzni, his club which hangs over it, and you will bring away the gates of his tomb, which are the gates of the temple of Somnath. These will be the just trophies of your successful march. —You will not fail to disguise your intention of moving, and to acquaint General Pollock with your plans, as soon as you have formed them." "This letter," says the Governor General, "remains absolutely secret;"—and Mr. Maddock himself, it seems, was allowed to know nothing of its having been despatched till this new order was echoed back from Candahar and Jellalabad. On the 23d of July the Governor General wrote to General Pollock to say that he expected General Nott would be in possession of the letter of the 4th on that day; and that it was expected that he would feel himself sufficiently strong, and be sufficiently provided with carriage, to be able to march on Ghuzni and Cabul. His Lordship went on to say, "the object of the combined march of your army and General Nott's upon Cabul will be to exhibit our strength where we suffered defeat; to inflict just but not vindictive retribution upon the Affghans, and to recover the guns and colours as well as the prisoners lost by our army."

It appears, therefore, that this new resolution to march on Ghuzni and Cabul with a view to retrieve our honour to recover our guns and colours, and to release our prisoners was taken on the 4th of July. Lord Ellenborough, it is true, continued to affirm that no change had come over his views; and that he was only carrying out his original intentions. But if his Lordship succeeded in blinding his own eyes to the truth—of which we have some doubt,—he certainly blinded those of no one else. No man was so stupid as not to perceive the difference between General Nott's retiring upon Sukkur, in which direction there was no enemy, and his advancing to the reconquest of Ghuzni and Cabul. The letter of the 4th July would lead one to suppose that it was occasioned solely by the announcement, that the 3000 camels which he had ordered for the retreat had safely reached Candahar. It is but justice to his Lordship to remove the suspicion that so weighty and important a measure did not originate in so inadequate a cause. The real reason creeps out accidentally in the letter sent to the Court of Directors on the 16th August, which announces this change of views in language marked by extreme caution. This letter to the Court, written six weeks after the option had been given to General Nott to advance on Ghuzni, and after he had been ordered to bring away the club and the gates, appears to have been the first intimation given to the Directors of this important movement. The third paragraph runs in the usual strain: "I adhere to my original intention of withdrawing the whole army from Affghanistan, and I have repeated in the most emphatic manner the order before given for withdrawal." The next paragraph announces the change: "Some risk I deem it justifiable to incur for the recovery of the guns and of the prisoners and with the view of exhibiting the triumphant march of a British army over the ground on which we have suffered defeat"—but "I should never forgive myself if I exposed that army to any material and serious danger, for the possible accomplishment of any object now to be obtained in Affghanistan." MEETING IN HONOUR OF THE LATE SIR WILLIAM MACNAGHTEN.—The report of the meeting convened last Tuesday week in honour of the late Sir W. Macnaghten reached us too late to admit of more than a brief notice of its proceedings. We were not a little disappointed at the report. In the first place it was opened by the Chairman with only "a few words," instead of an animating address, which would have given the tone to the meeting. We have learned incidentally that another gentleman had been selected to preside on the occasion, from whom an appropriate introduction was expected, and that he was prevented from attending by another engagement. The Rev. Mr. Fisher was then called to the chair, but as he was not prepared for the duties thus unexpectedly cast on him, his address was necessarily brief and meagre. In the next place, only a single address was delivered on the occasion, though the meeting was attended by many of the friends and admirers of the deceased, who were fully competent to describe the excellencies of his private character and the talent displayed in his public conduct. In the third place, the address of Mr. Rattray, though highly appropriate as far as it went, was confined to a small portion of his official career. It displays an over caution, on an occasion on which, if at any time, the warmest enthusiasm would have justifiable. If it had been intended to convene a meeting only of Sir William's personal friends, to mark their attachment to his memory by the erection of a suitable monument, the proceedings as reported would have been quite in character; but as it was a meeting not only of his own friends but also of the community in general, and was intended to commemorate both his private worth and his public exertions, it would have been more suitable to the occasion to have dwelt with zeal and energy on his claims to a public memorial, founded on the evidence of his official services which had been rewarded by one of the highest offices in the gift of the public Authorities.

It has been suggested that any such allusion to that part of his public career, in which he stood forward more prominently before the world both in India and Europe, would have destroyed the unanimity so desirable on every such occasion, in as much as he was indentified with the Affghan war, of the justice of which some who were present entertained great doubts. But it would not have been difficult to have separated his individual merits when placed in a situation of high trust from the political question of the war, as to have dwelt on the talent he exhibited amidst unexampled difficulties, without falling into any approbation of the policy by which Lord Auckland's administration has been rendered memorable. The clouds which hung over his character while we were but partially informed of the course of events at Cabul, have been gradually dispelled; and though he may have been to blame for having allowed himself to be lulled into security while Affghan treachery was preparing for our destruction, yet every successive account we receive, from eye witnesses, places his conduct after the crisis had arrived in the most favourable light. Indeed there is every reason to believe that if he had enjoyed the post of General instead of that of Envoy at Cabul, the final catastrophe might have been averted.

CANAL VERSUS THE RAILWAY.—We had the pleasure last week of publishing a letter relative to the construction of a Canal, instead of a Railway to Allahabad; and we regret that owing to an unfortunate mistake in the office, the estimate which should have accompanied it, was omitted. We discovered the omission after the sheet had gone to press, too late to remedy it. We have now the pleasure of annexing the calculations to this article. They will enable our scientific friends to reperuse, and with greater advantage, the letter which we published last week and to test the calculations of the writer. He has already been employed by the house of Carr, Tagore and Co. in surveying the line of country from the Colliery to the Hooghly, in order to ascertain the feasibility of uniting them by means of a canal. His survey has been conducted with great scientific accuracy; and his map of the country to be traversed will be found of eminent service even though the scheme itself should not be carried into execution. It may reasonably be questioned how far the expense of a canal to the Burdwan coal mines could be prudently incurred in our present ignorance of the mineral resources of this extensive country. The chief utility of such a canal in such a locality would be the cheap and easy transportation of coal to the metropolis. But it may happen that, after the canal shall have been completed, coal of a superior quality will be discovered in other districts, in positions so favourable for transport to Calcutta as materially to diminish the importance of the Burdwan collieries.

A Canal to Allahabad however will be liable to no such fluctuation of value. It will connect towns and marts, which have every prospect of enjoying a long lease of existence. The commercial interests to which it would become subservient have at present every appearance of being permanent. There can be no question, that for the transit of merchandize a canal would be cheaper than a rail, and on that consideration more feasible; but speed of transmission must be taken into the account in every undertaking which claims patronage in the present age; and here the canal would labor under a great disadvantage. Nor must it be forgotten that no enterprize, whether it be the canal projected by our correspondent, or the rail roads of the Engineer officer can be carried into effect without the co operation of Government. Funds might doubtless be raised in England to the extent of Eighty-three lakhs of Rupees for a canal, but capitalists have no confidence in private individuals here though united as a corporation, and will not entrust their funds to them. It is said that the credit of Calcutta has sunk so low that even the merchants of New South Wales affect to mistrust us. Unless therefore such an enterprize was placed under the safeguard of the public authorities, it would not meet with adequate support. But if Government were to undertake the patronage, and aid in the accomplishment of any such undertaking, it would naturally select one which would be equally advantageous in a political and a military as in a commercial point of view, and would give the preference to the railway, notwithstanding the expense. After half a dozen years of peace, the finances of India would easily bear the annual demand for a rail road; and it would have the superior recommendation of conveying passengers as well as goods, and both with the greatest rapidity; it would enable Government on an emergency to push forward a whole brigade of troops, and to transport military stores with ease and speed, and thus to crush opposition in the bud. The advantage of a railway over a canal, to the public interests would be greater than the advantage of a canal over a railway in point of economy.

We hope the papers with which our correspondent has favoured us will draw forth such observations from our scientific readers as may serve to keep up the discussion, and advance the cause of public improvement.

THE NEW CHURCH AT COLABA.—The reader scarcely needs to be informed that a proposal was made some time ago at Bombay to erect a Monument to the memory of the brave men who fell in Affghanistan. It was originally intended to carry this design into effect by building a cenotaph, or a mausoleum, or monumental column; but a number of the friends of religion, were enabled at one of the meetings to overrule this design, and to substitute for it the erection of a Church at Colaba. The Bishop of Calcutta happening to be at Bombay at the time, gave his verdict for the Church, and subscribed 1000 Rupees towards it. The authors of the original movement however resolved to adhere to their first intentions, and have been endeavouring to obtain subscriptions for a cenotaph. We have received a copy of the prospectus for the Church, which will be found among our advertisements and have been solicited to advocate its claims to public support. We feel some degree of delicacy on the subject, and would rather decline any interference in a discussion which does not belong to us, and in which we can do no good. A cenotaph to commemorate departed excellence is certainly more in unison with the feelings and practise of this age, and will probably obtain more support from military men. At the same time the erection of a Church at a place where it is needed, is an object that must commend itself to every right mind. If on such an occasion, one may be supposed to enjoy two votes, we would rather split them between the Church and the Cenotaph, than give a plumper to the Church.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, MAY 4.

— There was a meeting of the Landholder's Society held on Monday evening, the 1st May. The utmost activity still continues to pervade the Society. There are no less than seven subjects now upon the tapis. Relative to the Draft of an Act for the employment of Assistant Magistrates, it was resolved to forward a letter to Government expressing the satisfaction and gratitude with which the Draft had been listened to by the Committee, and praying that after the words, Natives of India, should be inserted the words, and all other persons.

— Some anonymous correspondent of the Englishman in the number of this morning in puffing the nunnery in Calcutta, states that a very great number of Protestant parents have, at the hazard of their children's religion, sent their girls to it. We always understood the Catholic priesthood to assert that the subject of religion was not mooted at the Loretto House, and that Protestant children might be sent there with perfect impunity. We now learn from one who seems to be in the secret, that Protestant children do hazard their faith by being sent there.

— Yesterday's Calcutta Gazette announces that Dr. Mouat has been appointed Secretary to the Council of Education. He already sustains the office of Secretary and Treasurer of the Medical College, and Professor of Chemistry and Materia Medica. He must therefore have his hands tolerably full; and though we believe he will do all he can in this new department of labour, and can do more than many other men, yet the appointment of any individual with other heavy engagements as Secretary in the department of Education shews the very light estimation in which it is held. Government would not thus dispose of the office of Secretary to the Revenue or the Salt and Opium Board.

— Mr. Dampier, the Superintendent of Police, has written to Mr. Patton, the Magistrate of Calcutta, to advise that parties proceeding in charge of goods by land by the trunk road should be instructed to halt by night at places where there are police posts, as the police with the churundars, or men in charge, would be able to resist attacks on the property made by parties from Shahabad, who are always on the watch for opportunities of plunder.

— Last night's Calcutta Gazette announces the appointment of Mr. Frederick James Halliday, as Secretary to the Government of Bengal. But as he was appointed to this office so far back as the 28th May, 1838, and has never been removed from it, it seems difficult to account for a second appointment to the same office. The oracle of the Gazette goes no farther, and leaves us to solve the enigma, as best we may. The Hurkaru however lets in a little light on the subject by giving us to understand that the Gazette in saying that Mr. Halliday was to be Secretary to the Government of Bengal, meant that he was not to be Secretary to the Government of India.

FRIDAY, MAY 5.

— We have papers from China to the 25th of March; their contents are not of particular interest. Col. Malcolm had arrived in the Vixen, with the ratification of the Treaty by Her Majesty. The Plenipotentiary having declared his intention of going to the Northward to expedite the settlement of the commercial treaty, a Mandarin of rank waited on him to represent that this would probably retard matters, and to entreat him to remain at Hong Kong, as the new Commissioner, Keying, might shortly be expected at Canton, immediately after which the ratifications will be mutually exchanged. To this request Sir Henry Pottinger has acceded. The Chinese Government had resolved to fit out several cruizers with the view of putting down the pirates; but they have civilly declined the co-operation of the British authorities.

— The Delhi Gazette states, that the Governor General has conceded to the King of Delhi the point of Nuzurana, or the presenting of a present, or Nuzur annually to him on the part of the British Government. Our contemporary affirms that it is to be paid in addition to the usual allowances, and that the King is offended with this arrangement and resolves to appeal from it; but what cause of offence there can be in making these additional presents, we are at a loss to conceive.

— A representation has evidently been made to the Court of Lahore to prevent any of the Ameers of Scinde taking refuge in its dominions, as we now learn that very stringent orders have been given to the Governor of Mooltan, to give them no asylum.

— The Hindoostan Steamer reached Madras in less than four days, that is in 88 hours, against a strong current and wind. One of the passengers has written a letter to the Englishman, describing the situation of the passengers on board as every thing that could be desired—only the cabins are wretchedly small, and altogether suffocating. Every one seems to keep out of them as much and as long as he can, and many wisely prefer sleeping on the deck to entering the oven. This is the first voyage of the Hindoostan in the month of April, and experience teaches that the arrangements which are admirably adapted for a cold climate will not do for India in the hot weather. The writer we allude to, says that it seems no longer a matter of doubt that the Steamer cannot get to sea under three days from leaving Mr. Engledue's house. Surely this might be rectified. It would be strange if the vessel was within eighteen hours as long going from Garden Reach to the Sand Heads as from the Sand Heads to Madras.

— The Medal which the Court of Directors have bestowed on Dwarkenath Tagore, has arrived in India; and will be presented to him by the Deputy Governor on Wednesday next, when the company of ladies and gentlemen is solicited. We hope the Chukerbuttee faction and the Tagore family who turned Dwarkenath out of society will be there to witness the ceremony.

— The fort of Khytul has been a scene of confusion and plunder since it fell into our hands. The Sappers and Miners have been diligently employed in knocking down places suspected of containing treasure and stores. By the 19th, treasure had been found to the extent of three lakhs and a half; but private plunder had been carried to a great extent notwithstanding the efforts of the public Authorities.

SATURDAY, MAY 6.

— The Madras Athenæum publishes a letter from Bellary, which gives a fearful account of the mortality in H. M's. 63d. The Regiment has lost fifty men, five women and four children. Nineteen men died in one day.

— The Agra Ukhbar states that ground has been marked out for the offices of the Sudder Court and Sudder Board, at that station, to which they will probably be removed from Allahabad in the next cold season.

— The intelligence from Scinde received through the Bombay papers is that the Queen's 22d had been removed from Hydrabad to Kerachee; that the country was quiet and tranquil; the two victories having extinguished opposition. The troops who occupied Hydrabad were still employed in searching for concealed treasure, considerable quantities of which turned up every day, but none had been sent on to Bombay. The doors of the Zenana were thrown open by order of Lord Ellenborough and the inmates were told that they were at liberty to retire wherever they would. Only thirty out of a hundred chose to cast in their lot with their former masters and determined to follow them to Bombay. The rest availed themselves of the freedom they had obtained.

— The fallen Ameers of Scinde have been received in Durbar by the Governor of Bombay, who has treated them with the greatest kindness and consideration. His attention and kindness appear to be duly appreciated by them. Their future destination is at yet unknown; they will not however be allowed to return to Scinde, or be placed in a situation so near to it as to afford any facilities for intrigue. While at the seat of Government every thing calculated to alleviate their sorrows will be allowed them.

— Mr. Cochrane, formerly of the Calcutta bar, who afterwards proceeded to Bombay and practised there with much success, is about to return to Calcutta. In an appeal case lately heard before the Privy Council, he appeared for one of the parties and was highly complimented by Lord Brougham for the extraordinary ability of his argument. Should Mr. Cochrane and Mr. Dickens return to the bar of Calcutta, its profits will be divided among a greater number of barristers than at any period since its establishment.

MONDAY, MAY 8.

— At the last meeting of the Asiatic Society a little box containing a portion of the dust of the sandal wood gates was presented and examined by the members. We believe the impression was general that the gates were really of sandal wood. The exhibition of the little box occasioned no small amusement. A copy of the inscription as well as a drawing of the gates, and the report of the Engineer officers, was by some accident not presented at the same time with the dust.

— The Madras Athenæum, brought up by the India states that intelligence to the 6th of March had been received through that steamer, and that McNaghten had been acquitted on the ground of insanity. He is indebted in a great measure for his acquittal to the exertions of Mr. Cochrane, formerly of the Calcutta bar, and who is about shortly to return to it.

— The Bombay papers just received state that the place selected by the Governor of Bombay for the residence of the Ameers of Scinde, is the most eligible situation that could have been chosen. It is the old palace formerly given by Sir John Malcolm to the now defunct or obscured East India Amelioration Society.

— By the intelligence from Sukker which is given in the last number of the Delhi Gazette we learn that Scinde can scarcely as yet be said to be tranquillized. There does not appear to be any regular post by land between Hydrabad and Sukker, which is owing probably to the road being infected by the Belochees who have always shewn a great partiality for our mails. The mails are brought up at long intervals by the Steamers. Capt. Tucker and Col. Pattle were proceeding to Ferozepore on sick certificate.

— The draft of a new Act has just appeared in the Calcutta Gazette, which directs that the Judges, European and Native shall record their decrees in their own vernacular tongue, after which they are to be translated into the language in use in the Court. This Act, will at once get rid of the very objectionable practice which was said to prevail in some Courts, and may yet linger in them, of decreeing or dismissing a cause, and then leaving the Shristadar to draw up to discover the reasons and draw up the decree.

— At the last meeting of the Bengal British India Society:—"One of the members of the Committee read the rules which have been prepared to guide the future operations of the Society. After the rules had been read, Mr. Speede proposed that since they were consistent with the original principles on which the Society was based, they should be at once adopted. This was not, however concurred in by the majority present, and Mr. Michael Crow in particular, who proposed an amendment, that the consideration of the rules should be postponed, which being put to the vote was carried."

TUESDAY, MAY 9.

— The non arrival of the Bishop of Calcutta begins to be a source of uneasiness. His Lordship left Bombay nearly five weeks ago, and the vessel was fully due on the 22d of last month. The present season has been remarkable for its storms, but they may not have extended to the Bay.

— The last number of the Christian Observer states, that the amount of offerings made to the Somnath Gates on their way to Agra, amounted to 3600 Rupees and that this sum had been carried to the credit of the public funds.

— The Atalanta Steamer, which was to leave Bombay on the 1st of the present month, has 30 grown up passengers, 8 children and 4 servants. If Bombay can furnish a constant supply of passengers for the monthly steamers, it would be strange if, Calcutta, Madras, Ceylon, the Straits and China should not be able to contribute a full complement of passengers month by month for the vessels of Peninsular and Oriental Company.

— The Star, in continuation of the returns of Coolies shipped to the Mauritius, has published a list of those who have embarked in the month of April. They amount to 509 men, 60 women, and 13 children. The proportion of women is still within 12 per cent.; but it is added in the column of remarks that these vessels had cleared out before Mr. Davidson's letter relative to the disproportion was received. We are sorry that the names of the agents have been omitted; we believe it is accidental; but it would be well to supply the omission in future.

— The Sesostris Steamer has arrived at Bombay from Kerachee with the wounded, sixty in number. The larger proportion of them are doing well, though their wounds were in many instances severe; one man had his liver shot through, another his lungs, another his gullet. Two had died on their voyage. The Steamer which conveyed the wounded from Hydrabad to Kerachee, was fired upon by the Belochees from behind light breast works.

— The Bombay Times, from whose columns this information is derived, says, that the three officers who galloped along the whole front of the enemies' line in the last battle, with the view of ascertaining its strength and drawing on themselves the fire of the guns and matchlocks, were Major Waddington and Lieuts. Brown and Hill.

— The Pluto and Nemesis, war steamers, now on their way to Bombay to strengthen the steam flotilla on the Indus, are to proceed through the Pamban passage. They will thus save two if not three days, which would otherwise have been lost in rounding Ceylon.

— We regret to learn from the Agra Ukhbar, that Col. Sutherland has sustained some severe injury in his head either from a fall off his horse or a coup de soleil.

— The Court of Requests has just ruled that its attornies are entitled to a fee of Eight Rupees for every attendance on a client.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 10.

— The Gold Medal sent out by the Court of Directors for Dwarkenath Tagore is publicly to be presented to him this morning at Government House by the Deputy Governor. We expect there will be a good gathering of Europeans and Natives on the occasion. The Hurkaru of this morning endeavours to shew that the measure did not spring from their own "free will and mere motion," and that they never thought of it till after Dwarkenath had received marks of distinguished honour from the nobility and the Court. There is some truth in what our contemporary says; but he is rather too severe on the Directors. He seems to forget that in shewing that a good example is not lost on them, they have exhibited a degree of merit second only to that of having set a good example themselves.

— The mortality in H. M. 63d by cholera towards the close of their march to Bellary as announced in the Madras papers received this morning is most distressing. In a very few days two of the officers, one lady, 100 rank and file, and 200 camp followers, besides women and children, have been carried to the grave.

— There was a paragraph in yesterday's Englishman, stating that Mr. Lang, the barrister, was to succeed Mr. O'Hanlon on the Magisterial Bench. The Star contradicts the report. The new Magistrate, if a barrister, must give up both chamber and forensic practise; and this it seems no gentleman is willing to do. We wish Government would manifest the same anxiety to have the whole man for the Education Secretary, which they do to have the whole man and nothing less for a Magistrate.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

THE MEETING IN HONOUR OF THE LATE SIR W. H. MACNAGHTEN.

The meeting last evening in honour of the late Sir W. H. Macnaghten, was one of the most respectably attended there has been for a long time. A number of gentlemen belonging to the Civil and Military Services were present on the occasion, together with several others. Among the rest we observed, R. H. Rattray, G. H. Barlow, F. J. Halliday, J. F. M. Reid, H. Moore, R. Mytton, J. H. Patton, C. R. Prinsep, L. L. Clarke, W. H. Smoult, R. O'Dowda, W. C. Blacquiere, P. O'Hanlon, Esquires; Col. Forbes, Major Irvine, Captain Lawrence, Dr. R. M. M. Thomson, Baboos Dwarkanath Tagore, Prosonocoomar Tagore, &c. &c. The Rev. Mr. Fisher, senior, was called to the chair, who opened the meeting with a very few words, when

MR. RATTRAY rose to propose the first resolution, in doing which he addressed the meeting as follows:—

GENTLEMEN,— I will not weaken the impression of the moment by my feeble eulogy of a character, the merits of which you all know, and by your presence now acknowledge. I may be permitted, however, to state, that I was for some years officially connected with Sir William Macnaghten, when, as its Register, he was attached to the Court to which I still belong; and that, even then, in a situation of much labor and responsibility, though little calculated to attract public attention, and still less to elicit public honours, he established for himself a high reputation, and found time to frame those volumes on the laws and usages of the country, which will long remain what they have long continued to be, the safe guides of our judicial functionaries. While there, as elsewhere, his talents and acquirements were, by all, recognised and admired; and his kind and gentlemanly bearing was cordially responded to. Those talents and those acquirements removed him to a higher grade of service; and the more extended display of them, there, eventually raised him to that eminence, which had he never attained, we had not been assembled here to mourn and honour him.

I beg to submit for your consideration, and, if approved, for your adoption, what I deem to be a suitable leading resolution on this most interesting occasion. Without some knowledge of the probable means, which affection, good will and liberality may place at our disposal, it would seem difficult to determine the nature of the tribute most fitting to be offered to the memory of our departed friend; but whatever those means may become, I would suggest that, with reference to the tragic close of his earthly career, a cenotaph in the chief ecclesiastical edifice of our city, were the most appropriate memorial of his worth and of our appreciation of it. It may be in the form of a simple tablet or an imposing monument, as the result of our wishes may warrant: for either we shall have choice of site in the new Cathedral; and I nothing doubt that we shall be enabled to render the record of our feelings towards our lamented friend worthy of him and of the structure that shall enshrine it. I propose then gentlemen, as our first resolution, that a cenotaph be erected to the memory of Sir William Hay Macnaghten, in the new Cathedral of Calcutta; bearing an inscription expressive of that esteem and respect which it is the object of this meeting to manifest.

The resolution was seconded by Mr. Barlow, of the Civil Service, and unanimously carried.

Mr. Halliday then moved, and Mr. Torrens seconded, and it was also unanimously carried,

"That as many friends of the deceased, both in this country and in England, will be desirous of uniting in the tribute, a committee be appointed to adopt such measures as may be necessary for collecting subscriptions, and for preparing a suitable inscription, to be transmitted to a committee of subscribers in England, together with the amount to be realized in this country, with a request that they will give the necessary directions for the execution of the monument in communication with the family of the deceased."

And that the following gentlemen be requested to form the committee in Calcutta, with power to add to their number:—

MR. RATTRAY, MR. GREENLAW,
MR. BARLOW, MAJOR IRVINE,
MR. TORRENS,

And the following to act as the committee in England:—

MR. J. W. HOGG, CAPT. LAWRENCE.
MAJOR GEN. MORISON, C. B.

Mr. Clarke here came forward to propose that Mr. Rattray should be asked to prepare the inscription, as he, Mr. Clarke, was assured, there was not another who could better do it than Mr. Rattray.

This was carried by acclamation.

Mr. Rattray returned thanks for the honour, and promised to do his best to deserve the confidence placed in him.

The meeting broke up with the usual vote of thanks to the Chair.—Hurk. May 3.

EUROPE.

RELIGIOUS.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—It is rumoured that Mr. Natt, the late Vicar of St. Sepulchre's, has left to the Church Missionary Society by his will, an immediate legacy of 6,000*l.*; besides a reversionary one of smaller amount. We may add, that the Corporation of London did themselves honour by voting, on Thursday last, the sum of Five Hundred pounds to this Society.—Record.

The Bishop of Antigua, in a sermon preached last week, at St. Clement's Danes, on behalf of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, stated that it was the intention of the Society to send missionaries to China without delay, and at no distant period a bishop.—Ibid.

THE PROPAGATION SOCIETY.—We give from a Cheltenham paper the following:—

"COPY OF A LETTER

"Addressed by the Rev. W. M. Kinsey, B. D., Secretary to the Cheltenham District Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, to the Secretary of the Parent Committee, 79, Pall mall, London.

"'Monday, February 6, 1843.
"'3, Wellington-street, Cheltenham.

"'Sir.—In consequence of the disclaimer of his words, (uttered at our District Propagation of the Gospel Meeting here, on the 10th of November last,) now insisted upon by Mr. Campbell, and of the silence of the Parent Committee as to our Reclamations, I beg of you to state, at the next Monthly Meeting of the Board, that, consistently with the declarations made in one of my letters to Mr. Campbell, I have this day resigned the Secretaryship of the District Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, to which I was appointed in the year 1833, now, of course, ten years since.

"'I remain, Sir,
"'Your obedient servant,
"'W. M. KINSEY.

"'To the Secretary, &c. &c.
"'79, Pall-mall, London.'"

But we hear that Mr. Kinsey's is not the only, nor yet the most important, resignation that will follow from the Campbell and Close correspondence.—Ibid.

We have heard, and we trust that the report may prove well-founded, that the Lord Mayor has presented the living of St. James's, Duke's-place, to the Rev. Dr. M'Caul. The income of the benefice is very trifling; but the suitability of Dr. M'Caul for that peculiar post will be evident, when we state that the great majority of the inhabitants are Jews.—Record.

THE CAMDEN SOCIETY AND PUSEYISM.—We have, more than once, in the course of the last six months, adverted to the apparently unaccountable fact, that the Bishops of Chester and Winchester permitted their names to remain on the list of patrons of the Cambridge Camden Society, even after Dr. Blomfield had felt it necessary to withdraw his. We now learn, with much satisfaction, that we have, through want of information, done injustice to both those Right Reverend Prelates. We have consulted the last Report of the Society, and we there observe, that, quietly, and without any remark on the part of the Committee, the names of these two bishops are omitted. We may safely conclude that it was at their own desire. We have only now to express our regret, that their Lordships of Worcester and Hereford should still appear among the patrons.

Connected with this subject, we may advert to a warm controversy which has recently been carried on in Belfast, occasioned by the introduction of a similar Society into the diocese of Down and Connor. The Protestants of Ireland are not so easily deluded by fine names as their brethren of England. They quickly detected the tone and accent of the Vatican, and addressed a strong remonstrance to Dr. Mant, their bishop. His Lordship, however, dislikes being instructed in his duties, and, chiefly on this ground, refuses to concede. Bishop Mant, however, High Churchman as he unquestionably is, speaks in very plain language of the perils of the day. He tells the remonstrants—

"The dissemination of the false doctrines to which you advert, as upheld and promulgated in the Tracts for the Times, reasonably excites apprehension and alarm in the intelligent and conscientious members of our reformed Church. Since her purification, three centuries ago, her welfare has been more or less impeded by the pertinacious hostility and artifices of Popery under a variety of aspects. Against the Romish corruptions, I have again and again raised my voice—from my Cathedral seat, as well as in the pulpit and by the press—in charges to my clergy, as well as in sermons and in other publications. Against that Modified form of Popery to which you advert, I have not been wanting in bearing my testimony."

We thank the Bishop for this plain-speaking. In future we trust we shall not be called "calumniators," when we adopt the language of the High-Church Bishop of Down and Connor, and term the Tractarian theology, A MODIFIED FORM OF POPERY.—Record.

TEMPLE CHURCH.—Some excitement has occurred in consequence of the Master of the Temple having suppressed a portion of the choral services lately adopted in the above Church. The fact seems to be, that the benchers, by the extension of the choir, and the multiplication of voluntaries and other musical devices calculated to please the senses, rather than glorify God, were in danger of converting the Temple Church into a Sunday opera-house, and the Master of the Temple has therefore judged it needful to interpose his authority in order to prevent such a consummation.—Ibid.

MRS. WOOD, THE VOCALIST.—To dispose of all scepticism as to the conversion of this lady to the Roman Catholic religion, we are enabled to state, through the kindness of a Protestant gentleman of this city, a friend of ours, Mr. Robert Brennan (who will excuse our giving his name)—that he, after using his utmost endeavours to dissuade Mrs. Wood from the step she was about to take, accompanied that lady, on Saturday last, from the residence of Mr. Wood to the convent at York, where she now is—that Mr. Wood, on their separation, made for her an ample provision, should she either take the veil, or return to live in the world. The separation of Mr. and Mrs. Wood was urged on the ground of the impossibility of her being received into the Catholic church without resolving on such separation, as that church does not recognise the doctrine of divorce, and Mrs. Wood felt there could not be any compromise in matters that regarded eternity. The parting of Mrs. Wood from Mr. Wood and their infant son was truly affecting, and proved the intensity of their attachment—the sacrifice they made, and the triumph of religion over this world. It appears the decision of Mrs. Wood was no sudden ebullition. On the contrary, she had been for several months in communication with the zealous and truly pious Roman Catholic clergyman of Wakefield, the Rev. Mr. Morris, whom she had selected as her instructor in the tenets of that church into which she was publicly received on Sunday, the 5th of February, in the chapel of Wakefield, where she made her first communion.—Dublin Evening Post.

"TWO GREAT RELIGIOUS SCANDALS."—Such is the title of an article in last week's Number of the Semeur, referring to two "outrages" upon the Christian Religion recently committed; the one by a British Protestant holding a high official station, the other by the Priests of Rome.

The Proclamation of Lord ELLENBOROUGH directing the restoration of the Gates of the Temple of Somnauth, is pointed at in the first instance; and its ridiculous as well as scandalous character is fairly exposed. Yet, it is added, "it must be admitted that the Governor-General is not the only offender. For how many years has the English Government, paying no attention to the numberless remonstrances of the religious men in the country, flattered, honoured, patronized Idolatrous worship in its Indian possessions! The car of JUGGERNAUTH, which was drawn under an escort of British troops, ought to render it indulgent in respect to the gates of Ghuznee. It is well known that the officers of the English army in India have in vain protested, more than once, against being compelled to pay military honours to the priests of Idols and to the Idols themselves."

There is but too much truth in this statement though it will avail nothing in extenuation of Lord ELLENBOROUGH's conduct. But now for the other offence against Religion, of which our Contemporary speaks in the following terms:—

"But here is another scandalous offence, which certainly does not in any respect come behind that which we have just exposed. Conversions and cures by means of the Medal' (of the Virgin) "are not enough: the success of these jugglerieѕ renders parties more enterprising. They are no longer content with little miracles, but must have great ones; and it will be seen whether there is wanting audacity to affirm them.

"China, so long shut up, at length opens her portals. Unexpected events have put an end to the isolation which she had maintained in regard to the rest of the world. That country, which has had its martyrs, will perhaps soon have its apostles. It is no longer the hour for prayer only, but the hour for action. But affairs are not carried on quite so simply at Rome, when the conversion of three hundred millions of souls is in question. Here is what is set forth in the clerical papers:—'According to news which has come from a certain source, from the Apostolic Vicariate of China, a great multitude of Christians and of heathens belonging to that nation, have seen appear in the air, and on a day calm and clear, the image of Jesus Christ.'

"This apparition, destined to serve, next to the Cross of Migné, as a pendant to the Cross of CONSTANTINE, is affirmed to have taken place, we are told, in letters written from Rome by persons of the greatest weight: the conclusion is, that the Emperor of CHINA is about to embrace the Catholic faith; and it is added, that the Propaganda has ordered the departure of forty Missionaries for the Celestial Empire.

"If, in England, indignation has been awakened by the Proclamation of Lord ELLENBOROUGH as an outrage upon the religion of JESUS CHRIST, will not some little indignation be kindled in France by this mummery with which they have dared mix up the LORD himself? We are aware that, among us, indifference has reached that point at which people pass over in silence what would once have shocked them; but if not from religion, if not from philosophy, let us at least, from a proper national pride, rise against impostures which they dare throw to France as good enough for her. There is a great deal of contempt implied in these lying fictions; and we can hardly believe that France will endure to be treated with contempt, although it were even by her priests."—Pat.

RELIGION IN FRANCE.—The policy of the day leans entirely towards Catholicism. I am not speaking of our clergy, but of our statesmen. They have agreed that France and Catholicism were bound together by history; and as England leant for support towards the Anglican Church, and Russia made use of the power of the Greek Church, so it became France to avail itself of Catholicism. A bishop and some Catholic missionaries are about to depart for the Marquesas. Our prisons are to be opened to the free access of the religious orders; indeed some have already admitted them. These and other indications show on which side the wind blows. If Protestantism means to resist, it must organize itself, or it will infallibly be annihilated. Now a great deal is said about a national Church in France, but the fact is, there is but the shadow of one. A stipend to the minister is granted by the State, but nothing beyond. For this money we sacrifice, in the first place, the nomination of our professors to the theological schools; secondly, the appointment of our consistories the members being chosen, not according to the extent of their piety, but their wealth; in the third place, we sacrifice a part of our freedom of action, since no minister can preach the Gospel except where and when it pleases these consistories. But there is no discipline, no confession of faith, no synods; and, lastly, no means whatever of defending our legitimate rights, unless it be to complain in the daily papers, and thus frighten the Government, which now and then has succeeded. At this moment, in fact, protests are arriving from all parts against the judgment pronounced by the Court of Nantes, tending to restrict still further our religious liberty, and of which I formerly spoke. I know from good authority that the Government is alarmed at the excitement it has caused, and wishes to allay it. The trial is to come on again by appeal before the Court of Versailles on the 23d of this month, and I will inform you of the result.—Correspondent of the Record.

MIRACLES AND MESMERISM.—SIR,—Seeing in a recent Number of the Patriot an account of another "Estatica," viz. the one at Youghal, in Ireland, the thought occurred to me that I could possibly make a remark or two on the subject, not altogether undeserving of attention.

For some time I had been familiar with accounts of extraordinary phenomena elicited by animal magnetism; but though the evidence appeared to a great extent satisfactory, the statements being well authenticated, yet, as I had no means of personal investigation, I did not consider myself competent to form a decided opinion. Subsequently, however, an opportunity occurred of becoming acquainted with what is as yet known of the subject; and the result was, that I could not but believe in the truth of what is commonly called mesmerism. It would be intruding too much on your space for me to refer particularly to what I have witnessed, or produced. Sooner or later, all will believe; it is only a question of time: and I have said thus much merely to introduce what follows.

Not having seen this nun at Youghal, or the two cases reported by Lord Shrewsbury as miraculous, I will not affirm anything concerning them. But this I will say, that it would be quite practicable, ay, and no very difficult thing either, to produce by mesmerism the most perfect parallel. There is no necessity that the patient should be a party to the procedure; she might be kept in utter ignorance, and remain unconscious of everything done to her: so that she should herself fully believe whatever was affirmed. There are many operators who would not hesitate, if facilities were afforded them, to promise Lord Shrewsbury an "Estatica" in his own mansion, and an "Addolorata" to boot.

One would, of course, require, in such a case, to select a very favourable subject; but I should think that the pick of a convent would do admirably well. Many individuals exhibit in the mesmeric sleep extraordinary rigidity of muscle; indeed, catalepsy is a rather common thing; but catalepsy completely controllable by the operator. And as to the "stigmata," you might produce what wounds you pleased on a patient in the second stage—that of perfect sleep—without the slightest consciousness of pain at the moment, or remembrance of any on waking. There are several patients here, whom I should not hesitate to subject to any surgical operation that was necessary; fully convinced that they would know no more about it than might be told them.

This must suffice. I dare not, of course, say that these "miracles" of the Romish Church are produced by mesmerism; but I do most unhesitatingly affirm that just such effects could be produced by it. On this point I have not the smallest doubt whatever. Let this statement be taken for what it is worth; it appears to me not unworthy of consideration, in a day when many appear so abundantly prepared to be the easy dupes of a false and pernicious system. As I suppose this communication would be valueless if made anonymously, I shall not scruple to add my name, believing that, in doing this, I am in some degree serving the cause of truth. I am, dear Sir, yours truly,

H. H. DOBREY.

Maidstone, Feb. 16, 1843.

[It appears that many even of the Irish Roman Catholics take our Correspondent's view of the matter. The Roman Catholic Editor of the Waterford Chronicle has brought upon himself the weight of priestly displeasure, by calling in question the reality of the pretended miracle. A priest, who subscribes himself "Car Aubert, Pr. O. M. Tm. D. D., lately Professor of Divinity at Marseilles," has addressed a letter to the sceptical Editor, in which, amongst many other things, he says, "I protest against your article on account of its many falsities. For you attribute to one of these two pious girls what concerns the other—you confound evidently one with the other, although some striking differences exist between them both, without, however, any shadow of contradiction. It is equally false that the blood does not flow from the punctures of the crown of thorns, but after she has applied the nails to her head. It is also false that there are three girls besides in the same extraordinary state. It is, moreover, false, that the inmates of the house may be excited by their example to do the same, as they are forbidden to hold any communication with them. Several times have I seen the punctures of the crown of thorns, the stigmata of the hands and feet, and the blood flowing from them in a manner which could happen neither by nature nor by art."

Our Contemporary thus defends himself;—"The 'extraordinary facts of Youghal' should never have been promulgated and spread abroad as they have been by persons connected with the College, until the Church had stamped them with the signet of its authority as miraculous or otherwise; but Father Folly is not the Church, nor is the learned professor, who lately taught divinity at Marseilles College, (and learned some very bad logic there,) the rock upon which it is built. Why was not the learned Bishop of the diocese, the Very Rev. Doctor Crotty, the Bishops of Cork and Waterford, with the leading men amongst the most pious and intelligent of their clergy, brought upon the spot, assembled in council upon this occasion, before the Youghal College, was held up as the alma mater of a MIRACULOUS MESMERISM, hitherto unheard of in the 'Island of Saints.' 'The Church of Rome does not bind us to believe in any miracles but those that are retailed in Scripture,' and therefore, we humbly hope that we are still within the pale of Catholicity, notwithstanding the charitable excommunication which the learned Doctor of Marseilles has fulminated against us. We believe in the miracles attested by such eminent persons as St. Athanasius, St. Basil, St. Gregory Nanzianzene, St. Jerome, St. Ambrose, and St. Austin. But we must have some more convincing proof than anything which the learned D. D. of Marseilles 'has witnessed with his eyes,' before we believe in the 'THAUMATURGEE' of Youghal College. With regard to the allegation of our having 'given blind credit to an ill-informed correspondent' we beg to say that we have heard the 'extraordinary facts of Youghal' denounced as a fraudulent imposition by priests and laymen, as eminent for truth, learning, piety, intelligence, Catholic faith, and sound common sense, as any priest or professor that ever preached divinity in Marseilles, or miracles in Youghal."—ED.]—Pat.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DEATH OF LORD ABERCROMBY.—The death of this amiable and lamented nobleman took place on Wednesday last, the 15th instant, at his Lordship's seat, Airthrey Castle, near Stirling. He was in his seventy-third year, and had been for some time in a declining state, although he retained his usual spirits. His Lordship was the eldest son of the gallant Sir Ralph Abercromby, whose military achievements are associated with the annals of his country, and under whose command not only Moore, Picton, Hill, Murray, Hopetoun, Lynedoch, and other great Peninsular Generals, but even Wellington himself, first attained distinction. On his lamented death from the fatal wound received on the field of Alexandria, where the revolutionary army of France sustained its first great defeat, his widow was raised to the peerage, with remainder to the heirs male of her lamented husband. On her death in 1821, she was succeeded by her eldest son, the late Lord, whose death has just occurred. In early life he was, like his father, a supporter of the policy of Mr. Pitt, under whose Administration he was for a short time in the diplomatic service. While a commoner, he repeatedly represented the counties of Clackmannan, in which his family property was situated. On the death of his uncle, General Sir Robert Abercromby, he succeeded to the estate of Airthrey, and, succeeding the late Duke of Montrose, became Lord-Lieutenant of Stirlingshire. His next brother, the late Sir John Abercromby, was a distinguished General, who commanded the expedition which conquered the Mauritius, but died at Marseilles in 1817. His third brother is Lord Dunfermline, the late Speaker of the House of Commons, and whom the Duke of Wellington, during his Administration, made Lord Chief Baron of Scotland, notwithstanding his Whig politics, an appointment which was probably intended to mark the Duke's recollection of the great service of his old commander in the retreat in Flanders, when "Colonel Wellesley," under Sir Ralph's immediate orders, held at bay and repulsed the advancing columns of the pursuing army.

Lord Abercromby married a daughter of the late Lord Melville, and left one son and two daughters. His eldest daughter married the Hon. Fox Maule. His only son, now Lord Abercromby, is Lord-Lieutenant of the county of Clackmannan, and was for several Parliaments returned either for that county or for Stirlingshire. He was obliged to retire last year in consequence of indisposition affecting his eyesight. The late Lord was very popular in his manners and benevolent in his disposition. He had long retired from the active duties of public life, but he was a fine specimen of a country gentleman of the olden times, and living at his beautiful seat near Stirling, he was esteemed and respected by his neighbours, whether in the higher or humbler walks of society. To the poor he was ever a kind and condescending friend; to his tenantry a generous and indulgent landlord; while his intelligent and manly character made his society agreeable to his numerous friends, whom he delighted to see around him in his hospitable mansion.—Record.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE.—The annual general court of the proprietors of the above College was held yesterday in the theatre of the institution, in Gower-street. The attendance was numerous.

Mr. C. ATKINSON, the secretary, read the report. It stated that in the session of 1841-2 the pupils in the college and the junior classes numbered 886. Of which [illegible] were students in medicine, 155 in the arts, and [illegible] were pupils in the junior school. The amount of receipts from students and pupils was 12,756l. 4s. 6d., of which sum 9,081l. 18s. having been paid to the professors and masters, 3,675l. 2s. 10d. fell to the share of the college. The year's income from other sources was 4,039l. 11s. 4d., and the disbursements for the establishment department, including payment for several permanent additions to the property of the college, interest upon mortgage, &c., amounted to 4,000l. 17s. 11d., thus showing that the expenses were covered by the receipts. Of the sum above mentioned of 12,756l. 4s. 6d. received for education, 5,570l. 10s. was derived from classes of the medical faculty, and 2,570l. 14s. 6d. from those of the arts and law. To the library a set of works, 100 in number, printed at the Government press at Cairo, had been presented by Lord Brougham, who had received them from the Pasha of Egypt. The junior school produced during the year 4,615l., a sum less by 282l. than the year before. The collection made at the public dinner in June last was 1,120l. Since the last meeting a very fine collection of geological specimens had been offered to the college for the use of students by Mr. Greenough, but on account of the expense of providing rooms for its reception, and keeping it in proper order—an expense the Council did not at present feel themselves justified in incurring—they had been compelled, though reluctantly, to decline the present.—Pat.

MORTALITY AMONG DOCTORS.—Dr. Graves, a Dublin physician, in seconding a resolution of the "Medical Benevolent Fund Society of Ireland" lately, gave the following account of the mortality of the healing profession in that country:—"Compared with the other professions, physicians are very short lived. Even lawyers enjoy greater longevity. But in Ireland the mortality amongst medical men is infinitely greater than in England, for in this country typhus fever alone cuts off more than one-fourth."—Examiner.

LONG LEASES.—At one of the audits of Sir E. Blount, Bart. of Mawley Hall, Shropshire, an interesting statement was made. Several tenants were contesting the point as to which of their families could boast of having rented for the longest period on the estate, when a farmer named Allen satisfactorily proved that himself and ancestors had either been in the employ or rented under the Blount family for a period of nearly 780 years! that, in fact, his ancestors had immigrated from Normandy with that family at the time of the Conquest, and from father to son each succeeding generation had been retained on the estate. —Worcester Journal.

MINISTERIAL DEFENCES.—The Standard gravely recommends persons obnoxious to the Anti-Corn-law League to go about armed to protect themselves against assassination. What images does this suggestion conjure up—Sir Robert Peel going down to the House like Robinson Crusoe, with a gun on each shoulder, a sword at one side, and a hatchet at the other; Lord Stanley armed with a Congreve rocket; Sir James Graham with his bomb; Mr. Goulburn braying in a mortar; Sir E. Knatchbull, the original Rebecca, whose war is with gates, with a petard; Lord Lyndhurst mounted on a field-piece.—Examiner.

— Mr. Turnbull has been appointed to the office of Commissioner of the Mixed Commission Court, established in Jamaica, for the suppression of the slave trade.—Anti-Slavery Reporter.

CORONERS' INQUESTS.—The bill brought into Parliament by the Government, for the more convenient holding of Coroners' Inquests, enacts, "That it shall be lawful for any coroner, within his jurisdiction, to hold inquest on the body of any person upon whose death an inquest ought to be holden, in any place where such body shall be lying dead, notwithstanding that the cause of death did not arise within the jurisdiction of such coroner; and in the case of any body found dead and floating in the sea, or any creek, river, or navigable canal, the inquest shall be holden by the coroner having jurisdiction in the place where it shall be first brought to land."—Examiner.

EXPORTATION OF THE PRECIOUS METALS.—From official returns, it appears that the quantity of silver in coin and bars, shipped from Dover to Calais during the last month, was 397,705 ounces; of gold, 3,870 ounces. Large and increasing exportations of sovereigns have been made to New York during the last six weeks. Upwards of 843,000 ounces of silver coin have been shipped for Hong Kong since April, 1842.—Ibid.

STATE OF COMMERCE.—Some light is thrown upon the condition of the country by a return on "Trade and Navigation," just presented to Parliament.

It appears there have been imported oxen and bulls, 3,175, upon which there has been received 3,317l. duty; cows 1,046, upon which there has been received 813l.; calves 76, upon which the duty has been 38l.; sheep and lambs 648, paying 100l.; swine and hogs 415, paying 98l. Such has been the inundation of foreign live cattle under the Tariff, which was to render the cheapness of animal food a compensation for the Income Tax.

We also find that in 1842 the quantity of butter imported was 277,426 cwt., while in 1843 it had diminished to 175,843 cwt. In the importation of cheese the diminution is in the same proportion; the quantities imported being, in 1842, 270,219 cwt.; in 1843, 178,693. The quantities of wheat entered for home consumption in 1842 and 1843 are nearly the same. But while in 1842 the duty paid upon 2,300,898 quarters of wheat was 389,805l.; in 1843, the duty paid upon 2,667,944 quarters was 1,112,453l. A nearly similar variation is observable in other species of grain.

In sugar, there has been a material decrease. The quantity entered for home consumption, in 1842, was 4,065,085 cwt.; in 1843, it had fallen to 3,870,465 cwt.: causing a deficiency to the revenue upon this article of between two and three hundred thousand pounds

The most important part of this return is the following table of the relative amount of exports of British and Irish produce and manufacture, in the years 1842 and 1843:—

The depressing effect upon the shipping interest of this state of trade, is also illustrated in this return. It appears that in 1842 the number of ships entered inwards was 21,358, and the amount of tonnage 3,982,129; while in 1843 the number of ships was 19,675, and the tonnage 3,655,606.—Morning paper.

COMMERCE AND TRADE.—We learn from Havre good accounts of the French cotton markets; the holders, alarmed at the panic, have withdrawn their stock, and none but the most needy will sell at the present depreciaton; and as there was a good attendance of buyers, an improvement of one to two francs had taken place. This is far from being the case at Liverpool, the accounts from which represent the cotton market heavy. It has remained in a dull state for four or five days, and prices are ⅛d. lower for the week. At Manchester, on Tuesday, there was another dull, lifeless, and declining market for all kinds of cloth, but the exact amount of depreciation it is hard to describe. Confidence in the hope of a better state of things seems to have quite gone, and the market closes unusually heavy. Twist is saleable to some export houses, at a trifling decline, but there is not as yet any general purchasing by the shippers, and till that fairly commences steady prices are not to be expected. A quiet market at Rochdale, a thin attendance of flannel buyers, and a very limited quantity of goods disposed of at low and unremunerative prices. The depressed state of trade, since the new year came in, has been a complete check to the contemplated rise in the price of wool.

The revival of trade in Paisley has been this week certified by Sir James Graham. We are glad to see additional assurances in the Advertiser. The principal houses are continuing to increase their hands to a small extent in the primary branches; while the manufacturers of tartan and quaker shawls have increased their workers in a greater proportion. Some instances have occurred of manufacturers applying to weavers for their services, instead of waiting to be applied to, which augurs favourably. We are glad to learn, too, that some houses have found the sales somewhat more encouraging than they have been for several weeks past. Tea is this week a conspicuous item in the London reports of trade. On Tuesday it consisted of 90,000 packages. There was a numerous attendance of buyers, but prices were about as low as they were before the sale, and ¼d. per pound lower than the last public sale. Merchants are not disposed to accept low prices, therefore a great portion of those put up are bought in. The produce market continues flat.—Examiner, 13*th Feb.*

COMMERCE AND TRADE.—The Liverpool Albion has some remarks on the present condition of the cotton trade. It seems that at no period have prices reached so low a figure within 1d. per lb. as at the present. Heretofore, cotton has always been considered a speculation, when fair quality could be obtained at 6d. the lb. The price now is 4½d. The estimate crops in the United States still range from 2,000,000 bales to 2,200,000.; 1,070,000 of which have already been received into the ports; and yet, notwithstanding this heavy receipt, the stock in Liverpool only shows an increase of 20,000 bales (292,000 against 272,000 in 1842) over last year, with every mill at work, and an increased consumption of near 3,000 bales per week. The general state of the country may not, perhaps, warrant speculation, but we cannot see any good reason to justify a further depression in price. Low as prices are in the United States, arising out of the wants of the planters, cotton is now losing on an average 1 cent. per lb., fully 16 per cent. on cost. Since the above was written there has been a vast improvement in point of business in the Liverpool market. Speculators have been active, and the sales have been very extensive—ranging from 5,000 to 10,000 bales at an improvement of $\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ above last week's rates. The Manchester market continues to exhibit those marks of increased demand which were manifested during the preceding week, and which have already done much to remove despondency. The demand for goods has been considerable for some days past, and a fair amount of business has been done, but without any sensible advance of price in any article; and, generally, at a mere shade above the lowest rates of last year. In yarn, also, especially in the description suitable to the present season, a tolerable amount of business has been done. At Rochdale, however, they report an extremely bad market, and scarcely any business has been done in flannels at any price. In wool nothing at all has been doing, and the dealers are eager to sell at reduced rates. In Paisley work continues gradually to get more abundant. Between the webs that have been obtained from Glasgow manufacturers, and the improvement in the bona fide trade of the town, with very few exceptions, all the weavers who have looms and the necessary mountings are enabled to obtain work freely. We regret to hear that the stagnation in trade continues to act most injuriously on the revenue. It was fully expected that at the opening of the new year there would have been some improvement; but we are again doomed to be disappointed, and are now informed that the revenue from the Customs in the forthcoming quarter will be, if possible, worse than the last.

At Leeds, business does not at all improve in the cloth markets: last Tuesday's market was the worst ever witnessed. In the warehouses business is extremely dull, and at no former period has there been less preparation of goods for the spring demand.—Huddersfield market shows no change for the better. Wools are dull of sale, but no downward tendency in prices. At Bradford, in plain goods a steady business is doing, and late prices maintained. During this week there has been a little more inquiry for yarns, chiefly by the shipping houses. The staple trades of Nottingham keep gradually sinking. A general gloom pervades all persons engaged in trade or manufactures. The worsted spinning mills in Leicester are generally going, but there is a visible dulness, and all interests seem much depressed.—Examiner, Feb. 25.

ADVERTISEMENT.—The following advertisement taken from the Tablet, may perhaps suit the taste of some of our Puseyite opponents, who are so busy in exaggerating what cannot wholly be controlled, we mean the occasional indiscretion of our advertising friends. "Wanted, a Catholic youth, who can take care of, and safely drive, a pair of horses. Apply, &c." Sydney Smith, in his early articles in the Edinburgh Review, used to make himself very merry with the advertisement of the late Mr. Justice Dornford, of Deptford, who was said to have advertised in the Evangelical Magazine, for "a serious porter," who could carry so many hundred weight, we forget the quantity, but it was so great as to induce the facetious divine to say, that it was sufficient to make any man serious.—Record.

GAMBLING.—In a trial in the Court of Common Pleas last week, when a Captain Cauty sued Sir Robert Gill for money lost in play. The defendant's plea was that the money was won unfairly. Among other witnesses, Lord Huntingtower was called, and gave the following evidence for the defendant. Sergeant Bompas.—"Had you any conversation with the plaintiff on the subject of cards and dice?" Lord Huntingtower—"Yes. In the spring of 1841 the plaintiff was with me at Penton; and he asked me if I had ever seen any feint cards, and if I knew what despatches were? I said I did not. He then asked if I was in want of money? I said I was. He said if I would allow him, he would bring a 'flat' to my house at Penton, and would show me in the cards what to a moral certainty would win money of him, and proposed to go halves." Mr. Cockburn—"When the plaintiff made you a proposal so dishonourable, did you not, as a man of honour, order him to leave your house?" Lord Huntingtower—"No." Mr. Cockburn—"Did you continue your intimacy with him, and did he afterwards fit you out a yacht?" Lord Huntingtower—"Yes." The jury returned a verdict for the defendant.—Ibid.

BENEFITS OF LORD BROUGHAM'S CHARITY ESTATES ACT.—A considerable quantity of meadow land, at Norwood, held under Croydon College, was, prior to the passing of the Act, let at 5s. an acre; it is now let to the Duke of Portland at 7*l.* an acre.—Pat.

THE GOVERNMENT EDUCATION SCHEME.—Sir James Graham's intended Bill is, for the present, to be ostensibly confined to two classes of children—Pauper Children and Factory Children; although others are to be permitted to attend.

For the Instruction of Pauper Children, the following scheme is proposed:—

1. That parishes be united for the formation of district schools, to be established in the Metropolis and in the manufacturing districts.

2. That such schools shall receive all children under sixteen years of age chargeable to the parish or union of the district; and that the attendance of others be permitted.

3. That such schools shall be built out of the poor-rates, and be maintained from that source.

4. That a Chaplain be appointed to each school, with consent of the Bishop, who shall regulate and superintend the religious instruction.

Licensed Ministers are to be allowed to attend and give instruction to children whose parents or guardians object, on religious grounds, to the Liturgy and Catechism of the Church of England.

5. All rules and regulations for instruction and training to be made with consent of the Committee of Council on Education.

6. The schools to be visited by the Government Inspector; and on the representation of the Committee of Council, teachers declared incompetent to be dismissed.

In reference to Factory schools, it is proposed—

1. That one-third of the expense of building shall be raised by voluntary subscription; a second-third is to be granted out of the public fund; and the remainder is to be loaned by the Government and repaid out of the poor's-rates. But no grant or loan is to be made, unless the Justices of the division shall declare such a school to be necessary.

2. That each child shall pay 3d. a-week, the same to be stopped out of its wages by the master. The remaining cost of the school to be paid out of the poor's-rates.

3. Districts for these schools are to be formed by the Committee of Council on Education.

4. These schools are to be governed by Trusts, consisting of seven individuals, viz. the clergyman of the district; two churchwardens, to be chosen by this clerical trustee; and the remaining four are to be appointed by the magistrates in special session. The trustees are to appoint the master, subject to the approval of the clerical trustee.

No child is to be instructed in the Catechism and Liturgy of the Church of England, whose parents object to it on religious grounds.

The children of Church of England parents are to be instructed in the Catechism daily, but separate from the other children; or, if not separated, the instruction is to be limited to two hours on certain days in the week.

The schools are to be inspected daily by the clerical trustees.

Divine worship is to be conducted in the school by the clerical trustee, or by any one whom he may appoint, on Sunday, Christmas-day, Good Friday, and on the usual fasts and festivals which may be school holidays. On the production of proper certificates, no child to be required to attend such service whose parents or guardian may object.—Ibid.

FRANCE.—The Paris journals of Sunday are much excited by the close division in the bureau on the preceding day, in consequence of which the Minister had but five commissioners and the Opposition four. In the commission of the Address the Ministry had eight and the Opposition one. The coalition; is, in fact, determined on making a serious trial of its strength; and the Débats admits that a small knot of Conservatives voted against M. Guizot. Nevertheless, it calculates that the coalesced Opposition mustered but 193 votes, the Ministry 217. We have learned, from good judges in this matter, that there are 210 Opposition votes in the French Chamber, were they all mustered: but the Ministers have from 10 to 20 more.—Pat. 23*d Feb.*

FRANCE.—The Minister of Agriculture and Commerce had published the returns of the import and export of corn into and from France during the year 1842, from which it appears that the wheat imported amounted to 412,171 metric quintals; other grain, to 153,087; and flour, to 4,756. The exports were, wheat, 371,423 metric quintals; other grain, 232,867; flour, 88,211. There remained in the entrepots, on the 1st of January last, wheat, 73,702 metric quintals; other grain, 24,839; and flour, 19,534.—Record.

FRANCE AND THE MARQUESAS.—About 3,000 men assembled last week in Paris, about the Hotel of the Marine, in the hope of obtaining employment in the new colony of the Marquesas. The answer returned to their application is said to have been, nothing had been decided.—Examiner.

SWITZERLAND.—There has been an attempt at revolution in Geneva. The ultra-Liberals of that town are sorely discontented that the reform of the constitution and electoral law, effected last year, has not produced all the results hoped for. They find the Grand Council elected since the reform, just as Tory as the old one, and as obstinate to defend abuses. A municipal law was in discussion; the people took great interest in it, and were annoyed to find that the Conservatives were able to carry their articles against the Radicals. On the 13th, accordingly, the crowd around the place of assembly cried, to arms, whilst the Government summoned the National Guard by the sound of the church bell. The insurgents took post in the suburbs of St. Gervais. By this means they got possession of the two gates, Conavin and Rive. But they were driven from about the Hotel de Ville, and in an attack on the powder magazine, about a dozen citizens were wounded or killed. Amongst the latter are Major Fournier and Councillor Fech.

The Grand Council persevered in voting one of the obnoxious laws, that respecting the Council of State; the insurgents sent a deputation, asking that it should be annulled; the Grand Council and the Government would grant no more than an amnesty for the past. By the last accounts the émeute had subsided.

The Courrier de Geneve of the 18th inst. publishes the list of the persons killed and wounded on the 13th and 14th. Only four had been killed, and the wounded did not exceed 30. The city was then tranquil.—Pat.

ROME AND RUSSIA.—The Augsburg Gazette announces that the Russian Government had appointed M. Vescovali its agent to the Court of Rome, to arrange the existing differences between the two Courts.—Ibid.

THE REPUBLIC OF PARAGUAY.—The English Government has been desirous for some time of establishing diplomatic and commercial relations with this country, which, since the death of Dr. Francia, has become a Republic, governed by five Consuls. These efforts appeared to be crowned with success, as several British merchants who have entered the country have been well received, as well as Mr. Gordon, who entered it as an envoy from the British Government. We learn, however, that a sudden and serious difficulty has sprung up recently, and that Mr. Gordon has been ordered to leave the country. The cause of this difference we have been unable to learn.—Liverpool Times.

MILITARY.

Agra, 18th April, 1843.

The Right Honourable the Governor General is pleased to cancel the transfer to the 5th Regiment of Light Cavalry, of Cornet A. W. M. Wylly, of the 8th Light Cavalry, announced in General Orders of the 14th of December last, and to report him in his former standing to the 8th Regiment of Light Cavalry.

Consequently on the above arrangement, Cornets Francis Elliot Vibart and Henry James Stannus, will stand as 1st and 2d Cornets, respectively, in the 5th Light Cavalry.

The Right Honourable the Governor General is pleased to direct that, from the 31st proximo, until further orders, the whole of the Troops serving in Bundelkhund, shall be included in the Cawnpore Circle of Payment.

The Pay of the Troops, as well as of Establishments and Departments, will be drawn from the Banda or other Civil Treasury, on Bills to be furnished by the Deputy Pay Master at Cawnpore, and arrangements will be made for effecting Family or other Remittances similar to those which prevail at other Stations, where there is neither a Paymaster nor a Treasury.

The Right Honourable the Governor General is pleased to grant to Lieutenant R. A. Bruere, of the 33rd Regiment of Madras Native Infantry, one year's leave of absence, on Medical Certificate, from the 1st proximo, to visit the Hills, for the recovery of his health.

21st April, 1843.

The Governor General has the highest satisfaction in communicating to the army, the unanimous thanks of both Houses of Parliament which were voted on the 20th of February, to the several Generals, Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers, and Private soldiers, European and native, who served in the late campaign in Affghanistan.

The Governor General particularly desires, that the several Commandants of corps will, in communicating the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, take especial care to make known to the several Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers, and Private soldiers, European and native, that no higher honour can be bestowed upon any subject of the British Government than that of receiving thanks which so given imply the grateful acknowledgment of their distinguished services by the whole people of England.

Die Lunæ, 20° Februarii, 1843.

Resolved, nemine dissentiente, That the thanks of this House be given to Major General Sir George Pollock, G. C. B.; to Major General Sir William Nott, G. C. B.; to Major General Sir John McCaskill, K. C. B.; to Major General Sir Robert Henry Sale, G. C. B.; to Major General Richard England, and the other Officers of the army, both European and native, for the intrepidity, skill, and perseverance displayed by them in the military operations in Affghanistan, and for their indefatigable zeal and exertions throughout the late campaign.

Resolved, nemine dissentiente, That this House doth highly approve and acknowledge the valour and patient perseverance displayed by the Non-Commissioned Officers and Private soldiers, both European and native, employed in Affghanistan: and that the same be signified to them by the Commanders of the several corps who are desired to thank them for their gallant behaviour.

Ordered, that the said resolutions be transmitted by the Lord Chancellor to the Governor General of India; and that his Lordship be requested to communicate the same to the several Officers referred to therein.

(Signed) JOHN WILLIAM BIRCH,
Dep. Cler. Parliamentor.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Lunæ, 20° die Februarii, 1843.

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That the thanks of this House be given to Major General Sir George Pollock, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath: to Major General Sir William Nott, G. C. B.; to Major General Sir John McCaskill, K. C. B.; to Major General Sir Robert Henry Sale, G. C. B.: to Major General Richard England, and the other Officers of the army, both European and native, for the interpidity, skill, and preseverance displayed by them in the military operations in Affghanistan, and for their indefatigable zeal and exertions throughout the late campaign.

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That this House doth highly approve and acknowledge the valour and patient perseverance displayed by the Non-Commissioned Officers and Private soldiers, both European and native, employed in Affghanistan, and that the same be signified to them by the Commanders of the several corps who are desired to thank them for their gallant behaviour.

(Signed) J. H. LEY,
